Fifteen per cent is the estimate Mr. Helsing makes of the acreage that can be classified as late flax. Eighty-five per cent of the total acreage is flax seeded at about the usual time and under about normal conditions. Of this acreage, probably one-half, or about 42 per cent of the total area is in such shape that the yield may even now almost be said to be assured, and the remaining area is gradually coming to the same point of relative safety. For the 15 per cent that is classified as late flax, the promise is excellent, but most of it will be so late in maturing that the possibility of some damage by early frost must be considered.

On the whole, North Dakota stands to break all records this year in flax production. The enthusiasts in the state, says Mr. Helsing, are talking of 25,000,000 bushels for North Dakota alone. Mr. Helsing made some calculations as to the total yield, but does not care to give an estimate in bushels until the general stand is nearer maturity.

BABCOCK BUYS A HOUSE.

Wisconsin Congressman Invests $15,000 in Residence.

Washington, Aug. 2.—Representative Babcock of Wisconsin has purchased the property at the northwest corner of North Capitol and B streets in this city for the consideration of $15,000. The house was occupied by the late Senator Ingalls of Kansas during the latter's term in the senate. The purchase was concluded Wednesday.

Shock Kills Aged Man.

Winona, Minn., Aug. 2.—An old man named Seeling went out in a field after cows, and while there the house of his son, John Seeling, where he stopped, was struck by lightning. This scared the old man so as to induce heart failure, and he was picked up in a dying condition, soon expiring.

Dragged to Death.

Spring Valley, Wis., Aug. 2.—Halvoor Johnson of the town of Gilman fell under the binder and was dragged along the field, breaking his neck. He was eighty years old.

Suicide Follows Despondency.

Red Wing, Minn., Aug. 2. — Charles Thornberg, temporarily staying at his mother's farm in Wacouta, below this city, committed suicide by shooting. Despondency was presumably the cause.

To Run for Congress.

Northfield, Minn., Aug. 2. — Charles H. Blood of this city has announced himself as a candidate for congress from the Third district on the Prohibition ticket.

ALL IS NOW QUIET

GENERAL FEELING OF UNEASINESS AT SHENANDOAH IS DISAPPEARING.

CORONER HOLDS AN INQUEST

DIFFICULT TO FIND WITNESSES WHO SAW ASSAULT ON BEDDALL.

GREAT OVATION TO MITCHELL

STRIKERS UNANIMOUS FOR FIGHTING IT OUT TO A FINISH.

Shenandoah, Pa., Aug. 3.—Yesterday was an uneventful day in Shenandoah and surrounding country. Absolute quiet prevailed everywhere and the general feeling of uneasiness which had prevailed is rapidly disappearing. The troops spent the day in perfecting their camp arrangements and comparatively few of them were in town. None are permitted out of camp after dark. There was much sympathy expressed by the citizens generally over the death of Joseph Beddall as a result of injuries received in the riot of Wednesday night. Rev. W. H. Stewart, of the William Penn M. E. church, said yesterday that Beddall on his deathbed denied that he was carrying ammunition to his brother Thomas, the deputy sheriff who was besieged in the railroad station where

The Trouble Occurred.

The inquest on the death of Beddall was begun yesterday, and after four witnesses had been examined the further taking of testimony was postponed until next Thursday. Coroner Ollars is having some difficulty in finding witnesses who will admit they know the persons who inflicted the injuries on Beddall. District Attorney McLaughlin is assisting the coroner in an advisory capacity. It is understood that a private investigation by the coal company is in progress in addition to the county's inquiry.

Brig. Gen. Gobin said last night that while everything is quiet there is a feeling of unrest among the great army of idle men and boys. The general would not talk about the length of the stay of the troops, but it is believed at brigade headquarters that the soldiers will stay in the field for some time or probably to the End of the Strike.

Targets will be put to-day against the culm banks and it is the hope of Gen. Gobin to qualify as marksmen at least two regiments of the men now in camp. He says he intends to make the most of the opportunity to increase the efficiency of the men.

The mineworkers' officials are still at work obtaining signatures to the petition to be sent to the governor requesting him to withdraw the troops. It is not exactly known how successful they have been, as they are keeping the matter secret. Gen. Corbin apparently takes no stock in the petition. He says it will help the sheriff in finding deputies because all those who sign such a paper should be the first to offer themselves as deputy sheriffs in case trouble arises after the troops are withdrawn. The strike leaders continue to express themselves as confident that the presence of the troops will have no effect on the strikers, and that they will continue to remain out until victory comes to them.

OVATION FOR MITCHELL.

Striking Miners Go Wild Over Their President.

Scranton, Pa., Aug. 3. — The first of the strikers mass meetings planned to take place at the various strike centers was held yesterday in the round woods. There were 7,000 strikers present from all parts of the city and the adjoining towns, some locals having marched four miles to the meeting, headed by a band or drum corps and carrying flags and banners.

National President John Mitchell, District President T. D. Nicholls, District Vice President Adam R. Ryscavage, District Secretary J. T. Dempsey, Organizer Martin I. Menolo and Sub-District President D. T. Phillips delivered addresses. The crowd enthusiastically cheered all the speakers and fairly went wild over Mitchell. When he was introduced to speak some one shouted "hats off," and although the sun's rays beamed down so intensely that many were carried from the crowd exhausted, every man in the vast assemblage bared his head and remained uncovered until his speech was concluded. Then the crowd surged about the platform and shook his hands until he himself was almost exhausted. Mr. Mitchell's speech was brief and dealt only with the live issues of the fight. Before the handshaking episode had begun Chairman Phillips asked all who favored a fight to the finish to raise their hands. Every hand went up.

READY TO FIGHT.

Iowa's Governor Will Investigate the Rock Island Incorporation.

Des Moines, Iowa, Aug. 3.—Gov. Cummins announces that he will proceed to investigate the right of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific railway to incorporate under the laws of the State of Iowa, and if he finds that the law is being violated he will order the attorney general to bring an action to invalidate the incorporation papers filed yesterday.

NO TALK OF RESIGNATION.

Stanford Newel Simply in America on His Annual Vacation.

Washington, Aug. 3.—Stanford Newel, minister to The Hague, who saw the president at Oyster Bay yesterday, is in the United States on his regular annual leave of absence. It is surmised that he will come to Washington to report and will then go to Minnesota for a vacation. Officials of the state department say that they have no knowledge of stories to the effect that Newel will resign.

BONES UNDER WHITE HOUSE.

Gruesome Discovery Is Made by Workmen.

Washington, Aug. 5.—Workmen employed in tearing out the interior of the White House last week unearthed under the basement a portion of a human skeleton. The discovery created consternation among the laborers, and they were kept at work with difficulty. Efforts have been made to keep the discovery secret, pending more careful investigation of the bones exhumed from such an unlooked for but historic resting place. The workmen have been cautioned not to discuss the subject, and most rigid regulations have been adopted to prevent persons not actually employed in the mechanical work from entering the building. Even clerks and messengers belonging to the executive force are excluded under the existing order. The mysterious discovery was made while the laborers were engaged in excavating the subcellar below the floor of the basement for a new heating apparatus.

THEY WILL DEMUR.

Chicago Packers Will Reply to the Government Suit.

Chicago, Aug. 5.—The Tribune says: The Chicago packers who were enjoined May 2 in the United States circuit court from conspiring to fix arbitrarily the prices of meat, will file their reply to-day. From sources deeply interested in the controversy it is learned the reply will be in the form of a demurrer to the issuance of an injunction on the ground that it is no violation of the interstate commerce law for the packers to ship goods and price lists to their own agents in other states.

BATHERS LOSE THEIR LIVES.

Three Boys Get Beyond Their Depth and Go Down.

Pittsburg, Aug. 5.—Three boy bathers were drowned yesterday in the Allegheny river at the foot of Thirty-sixth street. Their names are William J. Carroll, aged fourteen; Amiel Kologenski, aged twelve, and an unknown boy aged about twelve. None of the boys could swim, and while wading about two of them got beyond their depth in a hole made by a dredge boat. The Carroll boy lost his life in attempting to save his companions.

STREET CAR COLLISION.

Several Persons Receive Serious Injuries.

Elgin, Ill., Aug. 5. — In a street car collision here yesterday afternoon two cars were telescoped and several persons seriously injured. A switch to a siding upon which stood three empty cars, was open and a car from Elgin to Dundee crashed into the standing cars, two being telescoped. The passengers were imprisoned for nearly an hour and every one of the fifteen passengers on the car was more or less seriously injured.

CROPS ARE RUINED.

Severe Storm Sweeps Over Southwestern Iowa.

Council Bluffs, Iowa, Aug. 5.—A severe storm which passed over Southwestern Iowa yesterday did great damage to crops in Pottawatomie and Western counties. A strip of several miles wide was visited by hail and the corn crop was entirely ruined. At Avoca lightning struck an elevator belonging to the Des Moines Elevator company and it was destroyed. The loss is $50,000 on the building and contents.

DOUBLE DROWNING.

Two Men, Not Good Swimmers, Venture Into Deep Water.

Detroit, Mich., Aug. 5.—Joseph Huetmann, aged twenty years, a tailor, and Charles Jost, twenty-four years old, a plumber, were the victims of a double drowning near the Sandwich coal docks yesterday afternoon. They were in swimming with Hermann Herring, aged fourteen, and Herring was rescued with difficulty. The men, though not good swimmers, ventured into deep water.

HE WILL TRY IT AGAIN.

Baldwin Anxious to Take a Whack at the North Pole.

Tromsoe, Aug. 5.—Capt. Johnson of the ship America of the Baldwin-Zeigler expedition has arrived here. He says Mr. Baldwin reached latitude 81 degrees 41 minutes. The shortage of provisions obliged him to return. The expedition may be described as a fiasco, but Baldwin will make another attempt.

FATAL COLLISION.

Two People Killed and About Twenty-Five Injured.

Hudson, N. Y., Aug. 5.—Marjorie E. Hoystradt, aged twenty, niece of the late Gen. Jacob W. Hoysradt of this city, and Edward Doyle, five years old, were killed, and about twenty-five others were injured in a rear-end collision at Rossman's, on the Albany & Hudson electric railway.

IS A CASUAL SLAYING.

"Spot" Murphy Shot by Man Who Calmly Goes Home.

Rochford, S. D., Aug. 5. — Hail and snow fell to the depth of four inches over this part of the Black Hills Friday. It was a furious storm and the atmosphere became almost intolerably cold within a few minutes.

REBELS' BIG LOSS

HOT BATTLE BETWEEN HERRERA'S FORCES AND GOVERNMENT TROOPS.

FIERCE ATTACK ON AGUA DULCE

SLAUGHTER OF REVOLUTIONISTS WAS EXCESSIVE AND BARBAROUS.

GOVERNMENT IS VERY HOPEFUL

EXPECTS TO WIN A BATTLE THAT WILL DECIDE FATE OF ISTHMUS.

Panama, Colombia, Aug. 2—The peace commissioners who left here July 29 on the British steamer Cana to visit the revolutionary general Herrera near Agua Dulce, returned to Panama at noon yesterday. They informed the representative of the Associated Press that they were unable to fulfill their mission because a very severe engagement between Herrera's forces and the government troops has been in progress since Tuesday, July 29, when the revolutionary forces began to attack Agua Dulce.

At 5 o'clock Thursday morning the best battalions of the revolutionary forces attacked the government intrenchments with fierce courage. The slaughter of the revolutionists is said to have been excessive and barbarous. That same afternoon the white flag was raised in their camp and they asked for an armistice during which they could bury their dead. This was granted. The up to Wednesday, July 30, were reported at over 200, while the government forces had eight men killed and eleven wounded.

Gen. Moreno, one of the peace commissioners who returned yesterday, says the intrenchments at Agua Dulce are masterpieces of military art.

At the expiration of the time of armistice the engagement recommenced with the same fierceness. Nine government battalions which had not taken part in the fight were still being held in reserve.

Gen. Salazar, governor of Panama, has received a letter from the government general, Morales Berti, saying he is very enthusiastic as to the outcome and that he hopes to win a battle which will decide the fate of the isthmus. Gen. Salazar, in his turn, is doing everything in his power to help Gen. Berti. At 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon he dispatched further supplies of provisions and ammunition for Berti's army at Agua Dulce.

GROSSLY EXAGGERATED.

Earthquake in California Did Only About $4,000 Damage.

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 3.—The reports telegraphed from this place and other sections of Santa Barbara and San Luis Obispo counties telling of the enormous damage done here by a series of earthquakes have been grossly exaggerated. It is an undeniable fact that there has been an unprecedented number of earthquakes, some more or less severe, but as to the reports of great fissures in the earth, upheavals of the earth and similar stories of the havoc wrought, it is only charitable to say that they are untrue. Within the limits of Los Alamos the property damage will not exceed $4,000. Several slight shocks were experienced yesterday morning, but no damage was done beyond further dismaying the inhabitants of this little town.

INSTANT HEARING FOR DEAF.

Invention of an American Doctor Exhibited to British Medics.

Manchester, Aug. 3.—Dr. M. R. Hutchinson, a young American ear specialist, provided the feature of the day's session at the British Medical association here, by the exhibition of a contrivance which gives instant hearing to the deaf. The apparatus is an electrical device which fits the head like that worn by telephone operators. In the course of Dr. Hutchinson's address it developed that he is treating Queen Alexandra and the duke of Cambridge for partial deafness. The most convincing demonstration of the value of the new apparatus was the fact that it enabled a dozen children born deaf to hear for the first time in their lives. Dr. Hutchinson has received an offer from London capitalists for the European rights in the invention.

NEGRO MURDERER HANGED.

Rope Breaks the First Time and Sheriff Secures Another.

Richmond, Va., Aug. 3. — At Wise court house yesterday in the presence of a thousand people George Robinson, colored, was hanged for the murder of another negro. On the first drop the rope broke. Robinson was brought up the steps on the outside of the scaffold to be hanged the second time and had to wait until the sheriff went to a store to secure another rope. He was conscious throughout the whole of this remarkable ordeal and did not show the faintest sign of collapse.

Automobiles Excluded From Parks.

Omaha, Neb., Aug. 3.—By a vote of 3 to 2 the park commissioners have decided that hereafter automobiles shall be excluded from the parks and boulevards of Omaha. The fact that children are endangered in the parks is one reason assigned, but the principal one is the number of accidents caused by runaway horses.

"Diavalo" Drops.

London, Aug. 3. — "Diavalo," the American bicyclist, while "looping the loop" at the Westminster aquarium, fell from his wheel and was seriously injured. This is the second accident he has met with within a week.

Quite Encouraging.

Pekin, Aug. 3.—The wai wu fu (foreign office) has notified Mr. Conger that the government troops have killed between 300 and 400 rioters in Szechuan and have restored perfect order in that province.

BATTLE STILL RAGING.

Rebels and Government Troops Industriously Kicking Each Other Off.

Washington, Aug. 4. — "Battle still being fought desperately" were the words of a dispatch received at the Colombian legation yesterday from Gen. Salazar, the governor of the department of Panama, which was in answer to a message asking for information regarding the fight which had been in progress since Tuesday at Agua Dulce, when the Colombian revolutionists began to attack that place. The feeling here is that the government's force of about 7,000 men is engaged with a large portion of the revolutionists, who have in the department of Panama about 4,000 men in all. Agua Dulce, though only seventy-five miles from Panama is in an inaccessible part of the country for ready communication. It requires eight days to make the overland journed, while the water communication is very irregular, and is carried on mainly by small boats.

HUSBAND'S BLOODY WORK.

Stabs His Wife and Daughter and Then Kills Himself.

El Reno, Okla., Aug. 5—At their home here yesterday Joseph Podowaski stabbed his wife four times in the back, the blade entering the right lung; stabbed his twelve-year-old daughter twice and then shot himself and cut his throat. He died a few hours later. His wife and daughter will probably die. The man was despondent because of long illness.

Fire in Chicago.

Chicago, Aug. 5.—Fire attacked the big grain elevator owned by John J. Badenoch & Co., at Seventeenth street and Walleck court yesterday, and did a damage of $75,000 no elevator and stock.

COURTS STEP IN

ISSUE ORDER PROHIBITING CONTINUATION OF CORNER IN JULY OATS.

DEALERS TREATED TO SURPRISE

FIRST TIME COURTS HAVE EVER BEEN ASKED TO ASSIST "SHORTS."

THEY THROW UP THEIR HANDS

COULD NOT GET NEW JULY OATS, SO WERE OBLIGED TO DEFAULT.

Chicago, Aug. 1. — The ban of the courts has been placed on the corner in July oats. On application of Waite, Thoburn & Co., one of the firms heavily short in the July option, a temporary restraining order was granted yesterday by Judge Chiltrus in the upper court prohibiting James A. Patten and associates from continuing a corner in new July oats and from bidding up the price of the cereal or calling for further margins. This is the first time in the history of the Chicago board of trade that dealers who are short have resorted to the courts to assist them in a dilemma like the present, and the injunction came as a decided surprise, although drastic measures had been threatened to prevent heavy loss.

Cornered and unable to secure new July oats wherewith to meet their contracts the dealers who were short appear to have practically Thrown Up Their Hands.

"We have nothing else to do but to default," said one of the unfortunates yesterday. "Those in control of the corner will not sell, but tell us to go into the pit and buy. If we should do so the prices would go up into the clouds. A dollar a bushel could easily be extracted, as the receipts of standard new oats will not fill our contracts."

Waite, Thoburn & Co., who requested the injunction, issued the following statement last night on the course they have taken:

"For a year or more there has been a regular epidemic of manipulations and attempted corners on the Chicago board of trade which have inflicted immense injury on the legitimate grain interests in this city and the country tributary to Chicago. These attempts to squeeze the trade have become so that it has become high time for some one to make a fight and find out where the trade stands and whether it is to be for all time possible for groups of millionaires to turn upside down the grain business of the land and inflict heavy losses on the trade. We have decided to make a test and find out where the trade stands."

Extreme and Unscrupulous

Three million bushels is said to be the shortage in July oats. The greatest part of this amount was sold, it is said, to those in control of the market at between 32 and 43 cents, so there is more than 25 cents a bushel profit in the deal for those on the long side. Instead of the market collapsing as the result of the adoption of a 45c marginal price, established by the board of trade, July oats advanced 3c yesterday and closed at 63c. Indications were that the parties in control of the market had become indignant at the move of their opponents and intended making the bears settle all obligations in the pit.

MANY MEN MISSING.

Feared That They Lost Their Lives in Recent Texas Floods.

Dallas, Tex., Aug. 1. — A report reached here last night from Hillsboro that between 400 and 500 men who were chopping wood in the bottom lands between Richland and Post Oak creeks have not been heard from since the heavy rains of last Saturday, and it is feared that some of them were drowned. An effort is being made to get into communication with the locality. The flood conditions in the Brazos Valley continue to grow worse. The rains have damaged the cotton crop materially. The present crop had promised to be the largest in the history of the state, but boll worms are developing rapidly and farmers are becoming apprehensive. Advices from other parts of the state do not show any improvement in the situation.

MURDERESS INSANE.

Mrs. Meyer of Buffalo, Who Killed Her Husband, Loses Her Mind.

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 1.—Mrs. Meyer, who killed her husband, Dr. Jacob F. Meyer, in his William street office two months ago, has become insane. To-day her attorney applied to the supreme court to have Mrs. Meyer committed to the Buffalo state hospital. It was learned tonight that Mrs. Meyer's most intimate friend, Mrs. Thomas W. Wall, who was to be the principal witness in the trial, became raving mad a week ago, and was taken to the state hospital, where she is still confined.

IS FATAL TO TWO.

Engine Jumps Track and Runs Into Embankment.

Pittsburg, Aug. 1—The engine of the west-bound fast mail, No. 11, on the Pennsylvania railroad, jumped the track near Packsaddle about 11:30 o'clock to-day and plunged over a 250-foot embankment, taking with it the mail cars. One man, John Kemmerling, engineer, was killed, and five injured. John Kinsley, fireman, was fatally hurt. The others were mail clerks, who escaped with slight injuries. A relief train has been sent to the scene.

Brakeman Killed.

Two Harbors, Minn., Aug. 1.—Harry K. Hare, brakeman on the Duluth & Iron Range here, was injured by being caught between the drawbars of two cars last evening from the effects of which he died at the Budd hospital.

Mother and Child Badly Burned.

Iron Mountain, Mich., Aug. 1.—Stella, the five-year-old child of Abe Kahoury, was badly burned about the face and body while playing with matches. The child's mother was seriously burned in trying to put out the fire.

COL. AMES STEPS OUT.

Resigns as Chief of Police at the Behest of His Brother.

Minneapolis, Aug. 3.—Chief of Police Fred W. Ames has formally tendered his resignation. Capt. Henry Getchell has been made acting chief of police. Capt. Fritchette's resignation was asked and tendered. Chief of Police Fred W. Ames has bowed to the sovereign will of his brother, the mayor of Minneapolis. Notwithstanding his brave show of resistance to the decree which went forth from West Baden, Ind., the chief laid down the duties of his office and retired to the ranks of private citizenship yesterday afternoon. His action was the result of a conference between himself and Acting Mayor Fred W. Powers. The chief stepped out of office promptly at 2:30 o'clock. In his official capacity, Mr. Powers named Capt. Henry Getchell of the Fifth police precinct station as acting chief of police, to hold office for the remainder of the chief's unexpired term.

LOVESWAR'S HOPE LOST.

Alleged Murderer Said to Have Been Urged to Plead Guilty.

Sturgis, S. D., Aug. 3.—In the trial of Loveswear, accused of killing Puck and Ostrander, the state has been putting in evidence for two days that seems to encircle the defendant with a chain of circumstantial evidence from which there is no escape. The final blow to any possible hope the defendant might have entertained was seemingly administered when Judge Rice decided that the confession which the defendant made to Sheriff Smith and Dr. McSloy had been made by Loveswear freely and voluntarily. This decision allows every detail of the confession to go to the jury and the confession in its entirety was presented to the jury. It is rumored that Loveswear's counsel has advised him to plead guilty and throw himself upon the mercy of the court in the hope of getting a life sentence instead of the death penalty. But the defendant refused to do so. The state will close its evidence to-day and it is believed that the defendant will not go on the stand to dispute the testimony of Dr. McSloy and Sheriff Smith.

SITE FOR SANITARIUM.

Soldiers' Hospital in South Dakota Now Has a Place to Stand.

Deadwood, S. D., Aug. 3. — A special Burlington train bearing the board of managers of the national home for disabled volunteer soldiers arrived in Deadwood from Hot Springs, where the board had been to select a site for the branch establishment soon to be built there. In the party were Gen. M. T. McMahon of New York, president of the board; Col. George W. Steele of Marion, Ind., secretary; Gen. C. M. Anderson, Greenville, Ohio; Col. S. G. Cook, Herington, Kan.; Gen. Thomas J. Henderson, Princeton, Ill.; G. B. Patrick of New York, assistant general treasurer; Congressman E. W. Martin of Deadwood, and J. B. Buchan of Omaha, general passenger agent for the Elkhorn road. From the Burlington depot in Deadwood the visitors were driven in a tally-ho to the hotel, and after luncheon they were taken on a trip to Lead. While in Hot Springs the board chose a location just east of the Evans hotel, overlooking the town and valley, as the site for the sanitarium. It is easy of access and water may be conveyed to the grounds from one of the big springs by gravitation.

TRACEY IN GOOD HEALTH.

He Now Wants to Rob a Bank or an Express Car.

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 3. — Harry Tracey, the fugitive desperado, is now in Eastern Washington, evidently in good health, armed with four guns and 200 rounds of ammunition, provisioned for five days and equipped with two horses. Tracey crossed the Columbia river at 5 o'clock yesterday morning, and is now supposed to be headed toward the Idaho boundary. Tracey declared that he wanted to hold up a bank or rob an express car. He says that he had promised to give the sum of $5,000 within one year to the parties who helped him escape from the Oregon penitentiary. He is making his way to the Hole-in-the-Wall country in Wyoming. When there he declares he will be a thief among thieves and thinks he will be safe.

NEW OIL GUSHER FOUND.

Well That Flows 150 Barrels a Day in Manitoba.

Helena, Mont., Aug. 3.—A gusher that spouts oil worth several dollars a barrel has been struck in Manitoba, just across the border from Flathead field. The well has yielded as high as 300 barrels a day, but because it has not been properly cased the average is lower. The government has accepted the well as a genuine gusher. With a little development it will be a fine producer. Experts say the ground on this side of the border shows much better indications. Oil in this district is excellent for illuminating and lubricating purposes. It is pronounced much better than that produced in either Texas or California.

Many Miraculous Escapes.

Milwaukee, Aug. 3.—Fire last night in the plant of the Phoenix Knitting works caused a loss of about $20,000; fully insured. The fire started while the building was crowded with employes, many of whom were women and all of whom had a miraculous escape from death.

Horse Falls on and Kills Boy.

Janesville, Minn., Aug. 3—Dana Cummins, the twelve-year-old son of Chas. Cummins, while riding a lead horse on a self-binder, was accidentally thrown from the horse. The animal stumbled and fell upon the lad, killing him instantly.

Ives After Heatwole's Shoes.

St. Paul, Aug. 3.—Gideon S. Ives of St. Peter filed with the secretary of state yesterday his declaration as a candidate for the Republican nomination for congress from the Third district, now represented by Heatwole.

Killed and Stripped.

Madison, S. D., Aug. 3.—John Foley, a prominent farmer nine miles northeast of Madison, while following his men from the harvest field to dinner, was struck by lightning and killed instantly. His clothing was torn off.

The Crimson Blind

CHAPTER XXXI.

Bell Arrives.

There were more sides to the mystery than David Steel imagined. It had seemed to him that he had pretty well all the threads in his hands, but he would have been astonished to know how much more Hatherly Bell and Enid Henson could have told him.

But it seemed to Bell that there was one very important thing to be done before he proceeded any farther. He was interested in the mystery as he was interested in anything where crime and cunning played a part. But he was still more intent upon clearing his good name; besides, this would give him a wider field of action.

In the light of recent discoveries it had become imperative that he should once more be on good terms with Lord Littimer. Only this was accomplished, Bell saw his way to the clearing up of the whole complication. It was a great advantage to know who his enemy was; it was a still greater advantage to discover that the hero of the cigar case and the victim of the outrage in Steel's conservatory was the graceless scamp Van Sneck, the picture dealer, who had originally sold "The Crimson Blind" to Lord Littimer.

It was all falling out beautifully. Not only had Van Sneck turned up in the nick of time, but he was not in a position to do any further mischief. It suited Bell exactly that Van Sneck should be hors de combat for the moment.

The first thing to be done was to see Lord Littimer without delay. Bell had no idea of humbly soliciting an interview. He proceeded to a telegraph office the first thing the following morning and wired Littimer to the effect that he must see him on important business. He had an hour or two at his disposal, so he took a cab as far as Downend Terrace. He found Steel slug-hunting in the conservatory, the atmosphere of which was blue with cigarette smoke.

"So you are not working this morning?" he asked.

"How the dickens can I work?" David exclaimed, irritably. "Not that I haven't been trying. I might just as well take a long holiday till this mystery is cleared up for all the good I am. What is the next move?"

"My next move is to go to Littimer and convince him that he has done me a great wrong. I am bound to have Littimer's ear once more."

"You are going to show him the spare Rembrandt, eh?"

"That's it. I flatter myself I shall astonish him. I've sent a telegram to say I'm coming to-day, after which I shall proceed to storm the citadel. I feel all the safer because nobody knows I have the engraving."

"My dear chap, somebody knows you have the picture."

"Impossible!" Bell exclaimed. "Only yourself and Enid Henson can possibly be aware that——"

"All the same, I am speaking the truth," David said. "Last night when you went into the hospital you gave me the print to take care of. At the same time I noticed a rough-looking man presumedly asleep on the seat in the road facing the hospital. Afterwards when I looked around he had disappeared. At the time I thought nothing of it. When I came in here I placed the precious roll of paper on my writing table under the window yonder. The window is a small one, as you can see, and was opened about a foot at the top. I sat here with the light down and the room faintly illuminated by the light in the conservatory. After a little I saw a hand and arm groping for something on the table, and I'm quite sure the hand and arm were groping for your Rembrandt. The fellow muttered something that I failed to understand, and I made a grab for him and got him. Then the the hand made a dash for my head with an ugly piece of gas-piping, and I had to let go."

"And you saw no more of the fellow?"

"No; I didn't expect to. I couldn't see his face, but there was one peculiarity he had that I might tell you for your future guidance. He had a thumb smashed as flat as the head of a snake, with one tiny pink in the middle of it. So, if you meet a man like that on your journey to-day, look to yourself. On the whole, you see, that our enemies are a little more awake than you give them credit for."

Bell nodded, thoughtfully. The information was of the greatest possible value to him. It told him quite plainly that Reginald Henson knew exactly what had happened. Under ordinary circumstances, by this time Henson would be on his way to Littimer Castle, there to checkmate the man he had so deeply injured. But, fortunately, Henson was laid by the heels, or so Bell imagined.

"I am really obliged to you," Bell said. "Your information is likely to be of the greatest possible service to me. I am sorry you can't work."

"Don't worry about me," David said, grimly. "I'm gaining a vast quantity of experience that will be of the greatest value to me later on. Besides, I can go and compare notes with Miss Ruth Gates while you are away. She is soothing."

"So I should imagine," Bell said, drily. "No, I must be off. I'll let you know what happens at Littimer Castle. Good luck to you here."

And Bell bustled off. He was pleased to find a recent telegram of acceptance from Littimer awaiting him, and before 5 o'clock he was on the train for London. It was only after he left London that he began to crawl along. Thanks to slow local lines and a badly-fitting cross-service, it was nearly 11 o'clock before he reached Moreton Station. It did not matter much, because Littimer had said that a carriage should meet him.

However, there was no conveyance of any kind outside the station. One sleepy porter had already departed, and the other one, who took Bell's ticket and was obviously waiting to lock up, deposed that a carriage from the castle had come to the station, but that some clerical gentleman had come along and countermanded it. Whereupon the log-cart had departed.

"Very strange," Bell muttered. "What sort of a parson was it?"

"I only just saw his face," the porter yawned. "Dressed in black, with a white tie and a straw hat. Walked in a slouching kind of way, with his hands down; new curate from St. Albans, perhaps. Looked like a chap as could take care of himself in a row."

"Thanks," Bell said, curtly. "I'll manage the walk; it's only two miles. Good-night."

Bell's face was grim and set as he stepped out into the road. He knew fairly well what this meant. It was pretty evident that his arch-enemy knew his movements perfectly well, and that a vigorous attempt was being made to prevent him reaching the castle. He called back to the porter:

"How long since the carriage went?" he asked.

A voice from the darkness said "Ten minutes," and Bell trudged along with the knowledge that one of his enemies, at least, was close at hand. That Reginald Henson was at the castle he had not the remotest idea. Nor did he fear personal violence. Despite his figure, he was a man of enormous strength and courage. But he had not long to wait.

Somebody was coming down the lonely road towards him, somebody in clerical attire. The stranger stopped and politely, if a little huskily, inquired if he was on the right way to Moreton Station. Bell answered, as politely, that he was, and asked to know the time. Not that he cared anything about the time; what he really wanted was to see the stranger's hands. The little ruse was successful. In the dim light Bell could see a flattened, hideous thumb with the pink parody of a nail upon it.

"Thanks, very much," he said, crisply. "Keep straight on."

He half turned as the stranger swung round. The latter darted at Bell, but he came too late. Bell's fist shot out and caught him fairly on the forehead. Then the stick in Bell's left hand came down with crushing force on the prostrate man's skull. So utterly dazed and surprised was he that he lay on the ground for a moment, panting heavily.

"You murderous ruffian!" Bell exclaimed. "You escaped convict in an honest man's clothes. Get up! So you are the fellow—"

He paused, suddenly, undesirous of letting the rascal see that he knew too much. The other man rolled over suddenly, like a cat and made a dash for a gap in the hedge. He was gone like a flash. Pursuit would be useless, for pace was not Bell's strong point. And he was not fearful of being attacked again.

"Henson seems to be pretty well served," he muttered, grimly.

Meanwhile, the man with the thumb was flying over the fields in the direction of Littimer. He made his way across country to the cliffs with the assured air of one who knows every inch of the ground. He had failed in the first part of his instructions, and there was no time to be lost if he was to carry out the second part successfully.

He struck the cliffs at length a mile or so away, and proceeded to scramble along them until he lay hidden just under the terraces of Littimer Castle. He knew that he was in time for this part of the program, despite the fact that his head ached considerably from the force and vigor of Bell's assault. He lay there, panting and breathing heavily, waiting for the signal to come.

Meanwhile, Bell was jogging along placidly and with no fear in his heart at all. He did not need anybody to tell him what was the object of his late antagonist's attack. He knew perfectly well that if the ruffian had got the better of him he would never have seen the Rembrandt again. Henson's hounds were on the track; but it would go hard if they pulled the quarry down just as the sanctuary was in sight. Presently Bell could see the lights of the castle.

By the lodge gates stood a dog-cart; in the flare of the lamps Bell recognized the features of the driver, a very old servant of Littimer's. Bell took in the situation at a glance.

"Is this the way you come for me, Lund?" he asked.

"I'm very sorry, sir," Lund replied. "But a clergyman near the station said you had gone another way, so I turned back. And when I got here I couldn't make top nor tail of the story. Blest if I wasn't a bit nervous that it might have been some plan to rob you. And I was going to drive slowly along to the station again when you turned up."

"Oh, there's nothing wrong," said Bell, cheerily. "And I don't look as if I had come to any harm. Anybody staying at the castle, Lund?"

"Only Mr. Reginald Henson, sir," Lund said, disparagingly.

Bell started, but his emotion was lost in the darkness. It came as a great surprise to him to find that his enemy was actually in the field. And how apprehensive of danger he must be to come so far, with his health in so shattered a condition. Bell smiled to himself as he pictured Henson's face on seeing him once more under that roof.

"How long has Mr. Henson been here?" he asked.

"Only came yesterday, sir. Shall I drive you up to the house? And if you wouldn't mind saying nothing to his lordship about my mistake, sir—"

"Make your mind easy on that score," Bell said, drily. "His lordship shall know nothing whatever about it. On the whole, I had better drive up to the house.. Hw familiar it all looks, to be sure."

A minute later and Bell stood within the walls of the castle.

CHAPTER XXXII.

How the Scheme Worked Out.

Chris crossed the corridor like one who walks in her sleep. She had not enough energy left to be astonished, even. Her mind traveled quickly over the events of the past hour, and she began to see the way clear. But how had somebody or other managed to remove the picture? Chris examined the spot on the wall where the Rembrandt had been with the eye of a detective.

That part of the mystery was explained in a moment. A sharp, cutting instrument, probably a pair of steel pliers with a lever attachment, had been applied to the head of the four stays, and the flat heads had been punched off as clean as if they had been string. After that it was merely necessary to remove the frame, and a child could have done the rest.

"How clever I am," she told herself, bitterly. "I'm like the astute people who put Chubb locks on Russia leather jewel cases that anybody could rip open with a six-penny knife. And in my conceit I deemed the Rembrandt to be absolutely safe. Now what—what is the game?"

It was much easier to ask the question than to answer it. But there were some facts sufficiently obvious to Chris. In the first place, she knew that Reginald Henson was at the bottom of the whole thing; she knew that he had traded on the fact that she had taken a fancy to the terrace as an after-dinner lounge; indeed, she had told him so earlier in the day. He had traded on the knowledge that he could prove an alibi if any suspicions attached to him. The fact that he was in danger owing to a slip on the edge of the cliff was all nonsense. He had not been in any danger at all; he had seen Chris there, and he had made all that parade with an eye to the future. As a matter of course, he was down there settling matters with his accomplice of the maimed thumb, who had chosen the cliff way of getting into the castle as the swiftest and the surest from detection.

Yes; it was pretty obvious that the man with the thumb had stolen the print, and that by this time he was far away with his possession. While Chris was helping Henson the latter's accomplice slipped into the castle and effected the burglary. Chris flicked out the light in the alcove as a servant came along. It was not policy for any of the domestics to be too wise. Chris forced a smile to her face as the maid came along.

"Allen," she asked, "are there any owls about here?"

"Never a one as I know, miss," the maid responded, confidently. "I've been here for eleven years, and I never heard of such a thing. Clifford, the head keeper, couldn't sleep at nights if he thought as there was such a thing on the estate. Have you heard one, miss?"

"I was evidently mistaken," Chris said. "Of course you would know best."

So the cry of the owl had been a signal of success. Chris sat in the gloom there, resolved to see the comedy played through. The events of the night were not yet over.

"I'd give something to know what has taken place in the dining room," Chris murmured.

She was going to know before long. The lights were being extinguished all over the house. Henson came up to bed heavily, as one who is utterly worn out. At the same time he looked perfectly satisfied with himself. He might have been a vigilant officer who had settled all his plans and was going to seek a well-earned rest the enemy came on to his destruction. In sooth Henson was utterly worn out. He had taxed his strength to the uttermost, but he was free to rest now.

Meanwhile, the conference in the dining-room proceeded. Lord Littimer had received his guest with frigid politeness, to which Bell had responded with an equally cold courtesy. Littimer laid his cigar aside and looked Bell steadily in the face.

"I have granted your request against my better judgment," he said. "I am not sanguine that the least possible good can come of it. But I have quite grown out of all my allusions; I have seen the impossible proved too often. Will you take anything?"

"I hope to do so presently," Bell said, pointedly; "but not yet. In the first instance I have to prove to you that I have not stolen your Rembrandt."

"Indeed? I should like to know how you propose to do that."

"I shall prove it at once. You were under the impression that you possessed the only copy of the 'Crimson Blind' in existence. When you lost yours and a copy of the picture was found in my possession, you were perfectly justified in believing that I was the thief."

"I did take that extreme view of the matter," Littimer said, drily.

"Under the circumstances, I should have done the same thing. But you were absolutely wrong, because there were two copies of the picture. Yours was stolen by an enemy of mine who had the most urgent reasons for discrediting me in your eyes, and the other was concealed amongst my belongings. It was no loss to the thief, because subsequently the stolen one—my own being restored to you—could have been exposed and disposed of as a new find. Your print is in the house?"

"It hangs in the gallery at the present moment."

"Very good. Then, my lord, what do you say to this?"

Bell took the roll of paper from his pocket and gravely flattened it out on the table before him, so that the full rays of the electric light should fall upon it. Littimer was a fine study of open-mouthed surprise. He could only stand there gaping, touching the stained paper with his fingers and breathing heavily.

"Here 's a facsimile of your treasure," Bell went on. "Here is the same thing. You are a good judge on these matters, and I venture to say you will call it genuine. There is nothing of forgery about the engraving."

"Good heavens, no!" Littimer snapped. "Any fool could see that."

"Which you will admit is a very great point in my favor," Bell said gravely.

"I begin to think that I have done you a great injustice," Littimer admitted; "but, under the circumstances, I don't see how I could have done anything else. Look at that picture. It is exactly the same as mine. There is exactly the same discoloration in the margin in the exactly the same place."

"Probably they lay flat on the top of one another for scores of years."

"Possibly. I can't see the slighest difference in the smallest particular. Even now I cannot rid myself of the feeling that I am the victim of some kind of plot or delusion. The house is quiet now and there is nobody about. Before I believe the evidence of my senses—and I have had cause to doubt them more than once—I should like to compare this print with mine. Will you follow me to the gallery if you haven't forgotten the way?"

Littimer took up the treasure from the table gingerly. He was pleased and at the same time disappointed; pleased to find that he had been mistaken all these years, sorry in the knowledge that his picture was unique no longer. He said nothing until the alcove was reached and Chris drew back in the shadow to let the others pass.

"Now to settle the question for all time," Littimer said. "Will you be so good as to turn on the electric light? You will find the switch in the angle of the wall on your right. And when we have settled the affair and I have apologized to you in due form, you shall command my services and my purse to right the wrong. If it costs me £10,000 the man who has done this thing shall suffer. Please to put up the light, Bell."

Chris listened breathlessly. She was not quite certain what she was about to see. She could hear Bell fumbling for the light, she heard the click of the switch, and then she saw the brilliant belt of flame flooding the alcove. Littimer paused and glanced at Bell, the latter looked around the alcove as if seeking for something.

"I cannot see the picture here," he said. "If I have made a mistake——"

Littimer stood looking at the speaker with eyes like blazing stars. Just for a moment or two he was speechless with indignation.

"You charlatan," he said, hoarsely. "You barefaced trickster."

Bell started back. His mute question stung Littimer to the quick.

"You wanted to be cleared," the latter said. "You wanted to befool me again. You come here in some infernally cunning fashion, you steal my picture from the frame and have the matchless audacity to pass it off for a second one. Man alive, if it were earlier I would have you flogged from the house like the ungrateful dog that you are."

Chris checked down the cry that rose to her lips. She saw, as in a flash of lightning, the brilliancy and simplicity and cunning of Henson's latest and most masterly scheme.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

To Frame of the Picture.

After the first passionate outburst of scorn Lord Littimer looked at his visitor quietly. There was something almost amusing in the idea that Bell should attempt such a trick upon him. And the listener was thoroughly enjoying the scene now. There was quite an element of the farcical about it. In the brilliant light she could see Littimer's dark, bitter face and the helpless amazement on the strong features of Hatherly Bell. And, meanwhile, the man who had brought the impossible situation about, was calmly sleeping after his strenuous exertions.

Chris smiled to herself as she thought out her brilliant coup. It looked to her nothing less than a stroke of genius, two strokes, in fact, as will be seen presently. Before many hours were over Henson's position in the house would be seriously weakened. He had done a clever thing, but Chris saw her way to a cleverer one still.

Meanwhile the two men were regarding each other suspiciously. On a round Chippendale table the offending Rembrandt lay between them.

"I confess," Bell said, at length; "I confess that I am utterly taken by surprise. And yet I need not be astonished, when I come to think of the amazing cunning and audacity of my antagonist. He has more foresight than myself. Lord Littimer, will you be so kind as to repeat your last observation over again?"

"I will emphasize it, if you like," Littimer replied. "For some deep purpose of your own you desired to make friends with me again. You tell me you are in a position to clear your character. Very foolishly, I consent to see you. You come here with a roll of paper in your possession, purporting to be a second copy of my famous print. All the time you know it to be mine—mine, stolen an hour or two ago and passed instantly to me. Could audacity go farther? And then you ask me to believe that you came down from town with a second engraving in your possession."

"As I hope to be saved, I swear it!" Bell cried.

"Of course you do. A man with your temerity would swear anything. Credulous as I may be, I am not credulous enough to believe that my picture would be stolen again at the very time that you found yours."

"Abstracted by my enemy on purpose to land me in this mess."

"Ridiculous!" Littimer cried. "Pshaw, I am a fool to stand here arguing; I am a fool to let you stay in the house. Why, I don't believe you could bring a solitary witness to prove that yonder that you found yours."

"You are mistaken, my lord. I could bring several."

"Credible witnesses? Witnesses whose characters would bear investigation?"

"I fancy so," Bell said, quietly. "Two nights ago, for instance, I showed the very picture lying before you to a lady of your acquaintance, Miss Enid Henson. I couldn't have had your picture two nights ago, could I? And Miss Henson was graciously pleased to observe that I had been made the victim of a vile conspiracy."

"Why do you insult me by mentioning that name?" Littimer said, hoarsely. His face was very pale, and sombre anger smouldered in his eyes. "Tell me you showed the thing to my wife next."

"I did," said Bell, coolly. "Lady Littimer was in the room at the time."

Something like a groan escaped from Littimer's pallid lips. The smouldering light in his eyes flashed into flame. He advanced upon Bell with a quivering, uplifted arm. Chris slipped swiftly out of the shade and stood between the two men.

"Dr. Bell speaks the truth," she said. "And I am going to prove it."

Littimer dropped into a chair and gave way to silent laughter. His mood had changed utterly. He lounged there, a cynical, amused man of the world again.

"Upon my word, I am vastly obliged to you for your comedy," he said. "I hope your salary as leading lady in Bell's company is a handsome one, Miss Lee."

"Let us hope that it is more handsome than your manners, my lord," Chris said, tartly. "I beg to remark that I have never seen Dr. Bell before. Oh, yes, I have been listening to your conversation, because I expected something of the kind. The Rembrandt was stolen some time before Dr. Bell arrived here, and in due course I shall show you the thief. Lord Littimer, I implore you to be silent and discreet in this matter. Have a little patience. Quite by accident I have made an important discovery, but this is hardly the place to discuss it. Before daylight I hope to be able to prove beyond question that you have greatly wronged Dr. Bell."

"I shall be glad to be convinced of it," Littimer said, sincerely. "But why this secrecy?"

"Secrecy is absolutely necessary for the conviction of the thief."

Bell looked eagerly at the speaker.

"I have not the remotest notion who this young lady is," he said, "but I am greatly obliged to her."

"My secretary, Miss Lee," Littimer murmured; "an American from Boston, and evidently a great deal cleverer than I gave her credit for, which is saying a great deal. Miss Lee, if you know anything I implore you to speak."

"Not here," Chris said, firmly. "Stone walls have ears. I tell you the Rembrandt was stolen just before Dr. Bell reached the house. Also I tell you it is imperative that nobody but ourselves must know the fact for the present. You trust me, Lord Littimer?"

"I trust you as implicitly as I do anybody."

(To be Continued.)

Round the Corner.

A tall, green sort of a well-dressed fellow walked into an East End public place the other day, where they were talking politics in a high key, and, stretching himself up to his full height, exclaimed in a loud voice:

"Where are the Socialists? Show me a Socialist, gentleman, and I'll show you a liar!"

In an instant a man stood before the inquirer in a warlike attitude and exclaimed:

"I am a Socialist, sir!"

"You are?"

"Yes, sir; I am."

"Well, just step around the corner with me, and I'll show you a fellow who said I couldn't find a Socialist. Ain't he a liar, I should like to know?"

Foiled Again.

"Villain!" said the blonde and petite heroine, resolutely, for she had at last pierced his disguise, and knew that she must pass him up effectually or live unhappily ever after, "you are a wolf in sheep's clothing!"

"Bah!" said the villain.

But this attempt to prove him a sheep did not land, for the heroine, being a stage heroine not born yesterday, or even twenty-three years from yesterday, and she knew a villain when she saw one. Consequently, the hero came for her in the fifth act, the audience hissed the villain off the stage, and the curtain fell on the union of two hearts that beat as one.—Portland Oregonian.

She Was a Demonstrator.

A young woman who was arraigned in the Tombs police court, charged with having been intoxicated, sprung a new one on Magistrate Cornell.

"What is your business?" asked the magistrate.

"I'm a demonstrater."

"A what?"

"A demonstrator in one of the department stores. I show goods to people."

"Oh, you're a saleslady, are you?" asked the magistrate.

"Yes, sir, same thing."

"Well, this is the first time I ever heard of a demonstrator. You're discharged."—New York Sun.

Why Books Are Not Selling.

Just when this paragraph is written any bookseller will tell you that his shelves are so overcrowded with new novels that he can sell few of them; and the best suffer least from such an overproduction. In the meantime, authors, publishers and the public are finding time to reflect; and reflection makes it clear that ping-pong now engages those half-million or more of mighty minds which were yesterday engaged in reading historical novels that contained neither history nor romance. But these things bear the same relation to literature that logs bear to a hickory fire: they cannot warm the heart.—World's Work.

VIRTUE OF SAVING

HEAD OF GREAT SAVINGS BANK DISCUSSES THRIFT.

John D. Hicks of New York, Tells of Good Work Accomplished by His Institution—Children Taught Habits of Economy.

Saving is a positive virtue; but a man may save too much. He may go naked and catch cold; but human nature is not built that way.

It goes without saying that the man who is not provident and does not lay up for a rainy day has not the first element of advancement. He needs to learn of his little neighbors the squirrels and the bees. There comes a time when one's savings are needed, and there also comes a time when they are not only needed, but become a storehouse from which he may use the energies which he has accumulated.

The accumulation of savings eliminates the fear of want and gives consciousness of strength. The possessor of savings, however small, knows that he has something to fall back upon. The army that has no commissary in the rear has but little energy to give to the fight in front.

In the physical world, were it not for the coal stored up during the past ages the inhabitants of the globe would be without fuel. The conservation of energy is a factor in the success of nature as well as in that of

The Bowery Savings bank is the an individual or a nation. largest savings institution in the world. I have been connected with the institution for forty years. When I was first made a director of the bank there were $7,000,000 on deposit. To-day the books show $80,000,000. We average from 1,250 to 2,000 transactions a day. By that I mean that there are that many deposits and drafts made. One day recently there were 1,295 people in the bank. They deposited $140,000 and drew $75,000, leaving a balance of $65,000 in the bank as the result of that day's business. This is a fair sample of a day's transactions.

We have nearly 140,000 depositors at this one bank. In New York state the deposits in our savings banks amount to more than $1,000,000,000. In the majority of cases the individual account is small. Now, just what do these figures mean? How does a saving bank assist in the development of the world's business?

These institutions are regarded as depositories of the savings of the thrifty classes of the community. And this is true; yet it is but part of the functions of the institution. Through the instrumentality of the savings bank this immense amount of money is thrown into remunerative action, and thereby contributes to the advancement of society. If it had not been available for investment purposes many of the towns and villages that now are equipped with all the conveniences of modern times would be deprived of them.

Fewer water works would be in existence, fewer schoolhouses, fewer church edifices. Here is a practical use for these savings.

Just a word of the reflex action upon those who save.

Among the 140,000 depositors here a percentage are children. That is, the parent and guardian deposit in the name of the children. The little ones are thus taught in the most effective way possible the value of property and the benefits accruing from it. In other words, they are taught the real meaning of thrift.—John D. Hicks in New York News.

Just a "Bare" Suggestion.

In the busy corridor of a downtown hotel the other day a woman and a man were talking earnestly, evidently of business. To the woman's gown clung a mite of a girl, says the New York Post, some 4 or 5 years old, dressed all in white, with baby-blue ribbons and cunning sunburned legs, but without the usual white stockings. She was an unusually beautiful child, but her feet were the magnets for all eyes, for they were bare, and protected from the pavement only by sandals, the fastenings of which were passed between her toes in true ancient style.

"'Cute,' isn't it?" remarked an observant fat man to a stranger.

"Good idea," was the reply.

"I wonder how I'd look with that kind of foot rig," continued he of the 250 pounds.

"Awful cute," answered the stranger. "You might try the baby-blue ribbons, too."

And then they both hustled away to the lunchroom.

The London Thunderer.

In an old copy of Bradshaw's Guide to London (1857), I read that a visit to the office of the Times during the time the "huge machine" is at work, casting off its impressions at the rate of 170 copies a minute—10,200 an hour—will present a sight not easily to be forgotten. "The average daily circulation is 32,000, and the value of the advertisements is estimated at $550 per page of six columns. The duties paid to the government for paper, advertisements and stamps alone amount to $475,000 annually. This stupendous establishment employs 300 people daily on its premises. Scarcely an event can occur anywhere of which its emissaries are not prepared to supply the earliest and fullest account." The first number of the Times appeared on January 1, 1788.

Compare the New York newspaper of to-day with the "Thunderer" of forty-five years ago. Circulation, 350,000, and presses that print 96,000 sheets an hour!—New York Press.

Life

Let me but live my life from year to year,
With forward face and unreluctant soul,
Not hastening to, nor turning from, the goal;
Not mourning for the things that disappear
In the dim past, nor holding back in fear
From what the future veils; but with a whole
And happy heart, that pays its toll
To youth and age, and travel on with cheer.

So let the way wind up the hill or down,
Through rough or smooth, the journey will be joy;
Still seeking what I sought when but a boy,
New friendship, high adventure, and a crown,
I shall grow old, but never lose life's zest,
Because the road's last turn will be the best.
—Henry Van Dyke, in the Outlook.

An Old Man's Diversion.

BY SARA LINDSAY COLEMAN.

(Copyright, 1902, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

The sun hung low in the west, and a breeze from the river stirred the vines that climbed on the Miller's porch.

It was always very quite there late afternoons, and the Miller, an old man, sat there after the day's hard work was done and watched the night settle down.

One afternoon, his reverie was broken into by the sound of voices. He looked out to see a man and a woman walking slowly past his home.

Both were young. The girl was more than pretty—her charm transcended beauty. It caught the old man's eye just as it turned heads on crowded city pavements. A faint fragrance floated by with her, and as the old man leaned from his sheltering vines the sun glinted and rippled on her bright brown hair.

"'Tain't nateral to be as goodlookin' as that 'n' jes as big as a fairy," he said under his breath like.

"Courtin' couples jes naterally take to water."

The two had crossed a foot bridge and stepped over the rocks to settle on the large one which projected into the river.

"I wonder, naow," the old man communed with himself, "of I should go in? Hit's mighty pleasant out here. I'll jes giv' 'em warnin'." He coughed—a cough that wouldn't have startled a mouse.

A moment later he coughed again and vigorously puffed at his old pipe.

Then he settled back in his chair, his nostrils twitching with contempt.

"Jes books," he muttered. "An' she be lookin' like a apple blossom leanin' back thar with them good fer nothin' leetle han's clasped looselike."

The sunset gates unbarred to let the day through, and the good fer "nothin' leetle han's" were lifted to meet the clasp of stronger ones above her as she sprang to her feet and turned toward the west.

"Jes books," he muttered again, as snatches of their talk floated to him. After they passed he got up and knocked the ashes from his pipe.

"Hit pears to me," he said reflectively, "that city fellers be degeneratin'—a-talkin' books ter a gal like that."

"Gosh, Marier," said the Miller the next afternoon, "of them young folks don' beat all! Back agin 'n' talkin' bout picters! Pears like they've come a considerable step ter talk picters!"

"'Tain't likely," said the old man as he sat on his porch the third afternoon, and looked anxiously up the road, "that they'll come agin. I 'low they air a-visitin' up at the mill President's. I heerd a party war up thar."

His eyes searched the road that wound from the river to the hill, and he sighed with satisfaction as he sat back in his chair, for the airy white figure on the brow of the hill silhouetted against the enkindled clouds was The Leetle Apple Blossom.

The days rounded through perfumed dawns alive with birds, and middays of shadows and quiet winds to the afternoons—wonderful afternoons in which the sun, big and blood red, slipped slowly down the sky; golden afternoons, for the man and the maid came always to the rocks in the river.

A man and a woman walking slowly past.

The two had become the central point of the old man's consciousness. He thought of them by day and dreamed of them at night.

Little personal traits of the girl's reached out to him like caresses. Her quick way of leaning forward as she talked, the movements of her slender hands, her laugh with its rippling run of mirth, the lift of her chin.

From a long-gone summer he revoked a memory that lingered like a subtle aroma in his heart—a memory and a grave. He had dwelt with Solitude, it had taught him many things, and as their light talk drifted on and on he grieved that the thoughts of their hearts were never uttered.

His words came in a rush.

"The pity o' hit, the pity o' hit," he moaned. "The Leetle Apple Blossom loves him. Lord, she loves him—an' he's jes tumbled into a bed o' roses with the dew on 'em. Somethin' is a-keepin' back the words, though, 'n' the leetle gal jes has ter wait. But when her lips trimble 'n' she laffs, low like, Lord, I want ter git my ole han's on him."

Time had been reckoned from the afternoon that the young people came into the Miller's life, it was now counted from the day that they went out of it.

"Two evenin's," he would say, "three—four."

The lonely little house by the river; the pathos of the quiet figure whose face wore always a look of strained expectancy, whose eyes were on the hill.

One afternoon a shadow fell on the Miller's porch.

"It's me," said his near neighbor, sitting on the step, and putting down a white bowl she carried.

"Be you expectin' company?"

Silence. Men have such refuges.

"The mill's a-grindin, well, ain't it?"

Silence.

"Tain't good fer men ter live alone," the neighbor sprang to her feet angrily.

"Be you disgruntled?" she asked.

"I be," grimly.

"Then I'll jes take myself 'n' my boneset home."

The old man reached out and took the boneset.

"Swallowin' war better 'n' explainin'," he told himself feebly. "Anything war better 'n' explainin'."

But there came an afternoon—laughing heart of the river, opal mist of the hills, and joy in an old man's soul. She was coming—she was coming.

She came slowly, and as she neared the river the Miller saw that she was alone, and that dejection was in every curve of her sweet young body.

She crossed the bridge, sat down on the rock and leaned her chin on her hand.

The Miller watched her longingly. As one comforts a child whose hand is sore, he would have comforted her.

Lost in reverie, she failed to see the young vigorous figure that swung down the hill.

The Miller saw it. He knew it well, and as it turned as if to mount the hill, he rose from his chair and shouted:

"Hi, there!" And again, "Hi, there!"

"You be a ole fool, Leander Shipman," he panted, as he sank back into his chair. "A dorgorn fool."

In spite of the fact, he chuckled gleefully.

The man having turned and seen the white, still girl on the rock, ran down the decline, crossed the bridge at a bound and sank down beside her.

His words came with a rush. It seemed he feared he might not say them if he stopped.

The girl listened quietly. So quietly that the old listener's hands clasped and unclasped themselves nervously. But at last she was talking.

"Just a year ago," she said, "a girl met a man who didn't belong in the society that was her natural element. At first his indifference piqued her. She had not known many men who were indifferent to her. We might call her an edition de luxe. Life had been very good to her—at least she thought so until she met the man. After she knew him she found out just how empty the old, gay, smart life was. She wanted to live his strong, vigorous life, to bring to him what he lacked, warmth, intimacy, a woman's love—but she couldn't unasked—and so her prayer was that he might not know."

"Down here they met again—and parted. He held her fingers and said good-bye to her. She was billowy chiffon, lace and perfumed silk to him—nothing more. He thought she couldn't stand life's battle, that bare walls would crush her spirit, and so he left her—to live it out as best she could—with mocking and laughter—and despair."

The girl got to her feet and stood looking out over the darkening landscape. When she turned the man stood beside her.

He made no attempt to defend himself, but his eyes clung to hers.

"You don't deserve me," she said, severely.

"No," humbly.

"Nor this." She put her white arms about his throat.

"I'll be dorgorn ef you ain't a-cryin'," said the old man, soft-like, to himself.

They turned.

Heart of the leaping river, purple dusk of the hills and peace in an old man's soul.

HE WAS SCARED WHITE.

Strange Effect of Terror on the Negro Cook of a Ship.

Fear of death in the midst of a storm which threatened to send the schooner Fred A. Small to the bottom is said to have changed Herm Blanco, a full-blooded negro, into a white man. The change lasted three days. Then, so the story goes, Blanco's natural color asserted itself once more, and he resumed his place on shipboard as a man of ebony.

"I had heard of a negro turning white from fright," said Captain Z. R. Thompson of the Small, "but it was the first time I ever saw such a transformation. Ordinarily Blanco is as black as night, but while the storm lasted he was almost as white as snow."

In a wrecked condition the schooner came into port yesterday, and was towed to drydock. Three weeks ago she left Valparaiso with a cargo of wood, birds, and monkeys. Six days later she ran into a severe storm. For four days and nights her crew was kept on deck. On the fifth day topmast and bowsprit went by the board. All this time Blanco, the cook, is said to have grown whiter and whiter.—New York Mail and Express.

HOW TO KEEP YOUNG.

Women Have Long Been Interested in the Important Problem.

The problem of how to keep young, or to keep from looking old, has engaged the thoughts of both men and women ever since the world began. Women especially have shown a deep interest in the vexatious matter, for their influence with men has always depended much on physical freshness and beauty. Numerous writers have contributed their views as to defying the riddle of the ravages of time. The latest well-known writer to discourse on the familiar theme is Max O'Rell. Without giving a recipe for the preservation of beauty, M. Blouet drops many useful hints as to the causes which lead to the unnaturally early disappearance of youth in some people. Bad temper and a lack of humor are, in his opinion, the two greatest enemies of youth and beauty. Max O'Rell thinks that with the aid of a sense of humor and good temper a woman can be young and beautiful until 50. After 50 he can offer no advice on the subject.

Municipalizing Industries.

The Italian government is favoring the municipalization of public utilities on the principle already adopted largely and successfully in Milan. The schedule of services that may be municipalized embraces water, lighting, tramways, busses, baths, warehouses, abattoirs, markets, bakeries, electric power derived from rivers, bill-sticking, the conveyance of coffins to cemeteries and the establishment of night refuges for the destitute.

No service may be municipalized without a referendum. If the proposal is rejected it cannot be brought forward again for three years. Compulsory powers are given to buy any private company's works after the expiration of five years from the time of the original concession. Employes may be given a share of municipalized industries.

Sagasta Long in Harness.

Senor Sagasta, so long Spain's prime minister, and well entitled to be called her "grand old man," is now nearly 80 years old. He began his career as a newspaper reporter. At intervals since he went into politics he has resumed his original occupation as a newspaper correspondent, but his country has had too urgent need of his services to allow him to follow his favorite occupation for any great length of time. To him, quite as much as to the queen regent, belongs the credit of having preserved the Spanish throne from overthrow in troublous times.

CONGRESSMAN ALDRICH ENDORSES THE TONIC, PERUNA.

Says: "It Will Build Up a Depleted System Rapidly."

Hon. W. F. Aldrich, Congressman from Alabama, writes from Washington, D. C.

"This is to certify that Peruna, manufactured by The Peruna Medicine Co., of Columbus, O., has been used in my family with success. It is a fine tonic and will build up a depleted system rapidly. I can recommend it to those who need a safe vegetable remedy for debility."—W. F. Aldrich.

H. S. Emory, Vice Chancellor and Master of Arms, K. P.'s, of Omaha, Neb., writes from 213 North Sixteenth street, the following words of praise for Peruna as a tonic. He says:

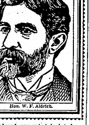
Catarrh of Stomach.

"It is with pleasure I recommend Peruna as a tonic of unusual merit. A large number of prominent members of the different Orders with which I have been connected have been cured by the use of Peruna of cases of catarrh of the stomach and head; also in kidney complaint and weakness of the pelvic organs.

"It tones up the system, aids digestion, induces sleep, and is well worthy the confidence of sufferers of the above complaints."—H. S. Emory.

Nervous Debility.

Everyone who is in the least degree subject to nervousness, sleeplessness, prostration, mental fatigue or nervous debility in any form, finds the hot weather of June, July and August very hard to bear, if not dangerous.



Hon. W. F. Aldrich.

The only safe course to take is to keep the blood pure, digestion good, and sleep regular. No remedy equals, in all respects, Peruna for these purposes. If the system is run down and weakened by catarrh, Peruna renovates and rejuvenates the nerves and brain.

A book on the catarrhal diseases of summer will be mailed to any address, upon request, by the Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, Ohio.

The above testimonials are only two of 50,000 letters received touching the merits of Peruna as a catarrhal tonic. No more useful remedy to tone up the system has ever been devised by the medical profession.

A Well-Satisfied Girl.

At an old-fashioned revival meeting, the minister approached Minnie, who was only ten years old, and urged her to go forward to the "mourners' bench" for prayers, as many of her young friends had done.

"No, thank you," said Minnie, holding back.

"But why?" questioned the minister. "Don't you want to be born again?"

"No," replied Minnie. "I'm afraid I might be born a boy next time."—Brooklyn Life.

An Aquatic Fable.

A man in a row boat was once thrown into a stream. He set up a shout, as though he imagined the most important thing in the world would be to rescue him from the water.

His cries attracted the attention of a man on the bank, who picked up a sledge hammer and threw it to the drowning man, who increased the vehemence of his shouts.

Then the man on the bank threw a crowbar to the other and said:

"I could break into a bank or tear down an alibi with those tools! Strange if you persist in drowning after my efforts to save you."

Moral—As the man in the water was a fool who rocked the boat, it served him mighty right.—Judge.

Physicians Puzzled.

St. Aubert, Mo., Aug. 4th.—Mr. E. R. Langendorfer of this place suffered very severely with a peculiar case of Kidney Trouble, which completely baffled the skill of the local physicians, and, instead of getting any better, he was actually getting worse. He says: "A friend advised me to take Dodd's Kidney Pills, and after I had used two boxes I was entirely cured, and have not since had the slightest symptoms of the return of my trouble.

"I had tried all the surrounding physicians, but they did me no good, and instead of getting better I grew worse, until I used Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"I can sincerely say to everyone suffering with Kidney Trouble that Dodd's Kidney Pills will cure them, for they cured me satisfactorily and completely when all the doctors had failed."

POLITICAL NOTES.

S. L. Hart and James Braton, two prominent and well-to-do farmers residing near Barnesville, Clay county, were in the city last week. Both are ardent supporters of Ezra G. Valentine for the Republican nomination for congressman from this congressional district, and predict that he would easily be the winner. They were of the opinion that the fight was between Steenerson and Valentine, and Mr. Hart, who by the way, has been a resident of that section for twenty-four years, says that among all of his acquaintances he does not know of a man that will support Grindeland, in fact they say he is very little known in the southern part of the district, S. G. Comstock is held in very high esteem there, but all are of the opinion that he does not stand any show, and are getting on the Valentine band wagon.

Chas. Johnson, of Wylie, is a candidate for the Republican nomination for county commissioner from the First district. Mr. Johnson is an exceedingly able man, and would make a good and conservative member of the county board.

James McIntyre on Monday filed his certificate for the Republican nomination for judge of probate. Mr. McIntyre is a thoroughly competent man for this important office and will have the support of the united party. His chance of success is extremely good.

Tolef Anderson, of Norman county, was in the city last Saturday returning from a trip north of here, where he had been visiting his sister. Mr. Anderson resides upon one of the state ditches in Norman county, and naturally is an ardent admirer of Ezra G. Valentine. To the News he said: "You cannot imagine the benefit these ditches have been to the farmers of our section, and to say that they have saved us thousands of dollars would be putting it at a low estimate. Mr. Valentine has been our friend in times past and we propose to stand by him now that he needs our assistance." Mr. Anderson admitted that Grindeland would secure a number of votes in his county, but thought that Valentine would get more.

J. J. Weeks has filed as candidate for the Republican nomination for clerk of court. Mr. Weeks is a bustler and would add a great deal of strength to the Republican ticket in the county.

John Mickleson, who is district deputy head consul of the Modern Woodman lodge, arrived in the city last Friday and remained until Monday visiting his family. Mr. Mickleson's territory comprises the whole Ninth congressional district, and naturally he is more or less in touch with the political situation of the district as he is traveling about all of the time. He was firmly of the opinion that the fight was between Valentine and Steenerson. Mr. Mickleson stated that Valentine was exceptionaly strong in Otter Tail, Becker and all other counties in the southern part of the district, in fact he has a large number of supporters everywhere, excepting in Roseau, Marshall and Kittson counties where the race is between Steenerson and Grindeland.

The vote at the primaries in the eastern part of Marshall county will be exceedingly small. Hundreds of homesteaders are now leaving that section for the harvest fields of North Dakota, and a well informed man in that section tells us over 75 per cent of the settlers will be absent on the 16th of September. The same condition applies to Roseau and Beltrami counties.

The Erskine Echo sizes it up this way: "If the favorable press notices are any criterion Hon. Ezra G. Valentine's prospects of being our next congressman are becoming brighter every day. His labors have always been for the betterment of the agricultural classes, therefore they are going to support him."

THE GUN CLUB

Will Hold a Shooting Tournament Here.

The local gun club held a meeting Monday in S. F. Staples' office and decided to hold a three days shooting tournament here on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, August 15, 16 and 17. It is expected that a large number of sports from Fargo, Grand Forks, Crookston, Warren, and other cities will be present, and it is the intention to have a first class tournament in every way. The various committees are meeting with a great deal of success. They are composed of the following gentlemen:

Committee on live birds—H. Lawson, Nason, L. Hanson, A. Erickson, LaBree.

Committee on prizes—Morgan, Robbecke, Staples, Ward, C. L Dobner, A. Erickson, Williams-McGinn.

Committee Programs—Spurgin, Staples, Meehan, Smiley.

Distributing Committee—Lanning, Jackson.

Reception Committee—H. G. Dobner, Robbecke, Meehan, Nason, Lawson.

Wm. Durbin will be manager of the shoot.

PLEASURE-PROFIT

Both may Be Had at The Minnesota State Fair.

The Minnesota State Fair is a great educational institution. The visitor who really sees it does not add largely to his store of knowledge thereby is not quick of comprehension, and he and not the school is at fault. The fair is a great school, and like other good schools it has its hours of recreation, its lapses from labor to rest, from study to amusement. The latter is supplied in ample quantity and of harmless quality. And it is wisely provided that much of it can be enjoyed evenings, so that those who desire to work all day may be amused at night, and so be made to forget the day's fatigue in the interest and excitment of a few hours of rest in the great grandstand. The attractions here cannot be specified in this connection, but that they will be satisfactory to all and offensive to none is guaranteed. The fair opens Sept. 1st and half-fare rates are made on all railroads.

A Car Famine.

One of the serious problems connected with the handling of the bountiful crop that the Northwest promised to yield this year barring accidents, will be to get a supply of cars for carrying the grain from the farming districts to the cities. The railroads that carry grain are all doing a larger business in all lines than they have ever done before. There is no sign that the general business will let up temporarily while the grain crops are being handled, and yet, if it does not, the railroad men say there will be considerable difficulty in procuring enough cars to handle the grain.

Temporary car famines during the grain handling season are frequent in ordinary years, when business is only fair, but this year with business booming in all lines and the prospect for the best crop since 1895, the problem is likely to be more puzzling than ever. Railroad men are beginning to cast their eyes about and consider the coming grain traffic when they send cars out. They will hardly be able to neglect the regular lines of business, yet the grain must be handled. The life of the employers in the operating departments of the roads that reach the grain country is likely to be full of interest and excitement for the next few months.

Good Time Coming.

In a recent interview State Auditor Dunn said:

"It will only be a few years when no state levy will be necessary. The increase in gross earnings taxes and in receipts from other sources will provide sufficient revenue for all purposes. This year we shall be able to make a very substantial decrease in the levy. I have said it might be cut down two-tenths of a mill. I now believe we can do better, and reduce the levy for state revenue to 1 mill. This, at our increased valuation, will raise enough money, with what we get from gross earnings. There will be a great increase from the railroads. In St. Louis county they have it all figured out, and the roads will pay the state on this year's business $125,000 more than last".

"I see no reason why, after this year, a 1-mill levy should not provide revenue for all purposes except schools. With the 1-mill levy for the state school fund we would have next year a flat rate of two mills. The legislature next winter can abolish the levies for the funding tax, the soldiers' relief and the university, and make whatever appropriations are necessary for these purposes out of the revenue fund. The 1-mill tax ought to raise enough for all these purposes two years from now".

A Minneapolis Young Man Achieves a Fortune

Good Luck Occasionally Comes to a Few.

The desires for one to become rich are numerous, but, to the contrary, the opportunities are few and far between., A certain individual in Minneapolis, who at one time pocketed $4,500 and started for the stock exchange with the express intention of buying 100 shares of the Northern Pacific railroad stock, met a friend, who advised him not to do it, and as an excuse claimed that these railroad stock and bond business were gambles, and that they were too uncertain to be relied upon. Had this individual not let himself be persuaded at that time the amount he would have purchased would have brought him in clear cash $170,000. This is only an instance of what perhaps occurs to thousands of people, and how often do they have such presentiments.

The instance in question, which I have intended to relate as follows: A young man in one of the offices in a Minneapolis business house, having saved a little spare money, and being of that venturesome turn of mind, possessed the thought of investing his savings in a way that occured to him as being profitable; therefore, taking the advise of no one, proceeded to carry out his plans, and within the period of a few months this young man, with a capital of only several hundred dollars, netted himself a profit of nearly $16,000. Now, had he been led to believe as others believe, or had he been persuaded as others have been persuaded that young man would still have been plodding away, drawing his salary, with very little prospects of ever deriving any great amount of the world's goods. Other instances are those people who are sick and in seek of help from different doctors, institutions and the like. They are often persuaded from such attentions, and are devised to try this or some other simple remedy or means of relief, which they do without avail and without help or assistance. No one knows the condition or feelings of one better than the individual person himself; therefore, is it not more advisable and profitable to take the dictations of your own feelings, and do as your mind tells you to? An instance that occurs to me is that of H. P. Delany, a sufferer of a chronic disease caused by an over-indulgence. Mr. Delany had tried many plans of treatment and different doctors, and had had but very little relief. He had, however, never consulted a specialist for his troubles, but on learning of some of the wonderful cures being performed by Dr. Rea, a specialist of much prominence, representing a department of the Southern Medical and Surgical Institute, of Louisville, Ky., having his office at 329 Boston Block, Minneapolis, Minn., decided to make a last effort to get well, and, acting on the advice of no one but himself, consulted Dr. Rea, and accepted the proposition which was made him. Mr. Delany's afflictions had injured his spine, and his kidneys were in such state, that Brights Disease had almost set in and, while the doctor pronounced it a very difficult case to cure, said that with care and personal attention, that in four or five months he would have him up and as healthy as any one. A quick and speedy relief soon followed Dr. Rea's treatment, and a cure was soon affected. Mr. Delany says in part that he never had treatment to act so quickly, nor did he ever take anything that acted as it did. In fact, it went right to the spot and he could almost feel the disease passing out of the bed. He is now a healthy and well man, and is loud in his praises of Dr. Rea's treatment. Dr. Rea as a specialist has had years of special study in the treatment and practice of his profession. He has gone among a class of people who are the worst and hardest to cure. Time and again are people brought before him that other physicians, even physicians of undisputed ability, have failed to cure, and as a last resort they seek the services of Dr. Rea. Dr. Rea loves his profession, and being especially adapted to that class of work, can of course do more for his people than one who has but very little confidence in anything. Dr. Rea does not limit his system of treatment. He uses allopathic, homeopathic, eclectic, physico-medicalism, or any other system of medicine that he knows to be good. He has been connected with some of the largest hospitals in the country, and has no superior in the treating and diagnosing of disease.

He can do more for his patients and at a more reasonable price than the average specialist. It is claimed by his friends that he can tell the disease of patients without a question and that he is the only living doctor who can do so. For the benefit of some who are sick and afflicted I herewith take the liberty, by their permission, to publish their names. Persons who were in need of treatment and those who have tried other physicians and have had no good from their treatment: Mrs. Arthur Robinson, Mallory, Minn., cured of a large fungus cancerous growth of the womb. Cured by the absorption plan and without an operation. Daughter of Arthur Robinson, same place, cured of chronic nasal catarrh.

Mr. Edward Strange, Duluth, Minn., writes personally that "I am better under Dr. Rea's treatment than I have been for years, even after many other doctors have doctored me. None of them seemed to know what was the matter with me."

Frank H. Pryor, 400 W. Mulbery St., Baltimore, Md., writes that Dr. Rea has been associated with doctors and hospitals for years and that he knows what he is talking about.

Alex R. Sprague, Charles City, Ia., writes that Dr. Rea's Cascola, Cascarine treatment is the best treatment for the cure of stomach diseases that he ever got hold of. He is now close to 60 years and says that it has cured him of stomach troubles that he has had for almost all his life.

Mrs. W. T. Stroud, Mabel, Minn., writes that Dr. Rea's Cascola Cascarine treatment is the best medicine that she ever used and highly recommends it for liver, kidney and stomach troubles.

John Ronning, Garfield, Minn., cured by Dr. Rea of a deep ulcerated sore that hospital and other treatment failed to make an impression on.

Mrs. Anna Lillerdahl, Fargo, N. D., cured of chronic stomach and liver troubles.

Severt Hanson, Cokato, Minn., cured of a cancer of the nose by Dr. Rea's famous injection plan of treatment that has never been known to fail. This cancer had been treated by a number of other doctors and was growing worse all the time.

J. F. Brown, Litchfield, Minn., cured of chronic kidney trouble and Bright's disease. Cured in a few months' treatment and with very small expense.

Mrs. Gust Hammerbeck, Wheaton, Minn., cured of a tumor on the thigh. Cured with three treatments, Dr. Rea's injection plan.

Andrew Nelson, Crow River, N. D., cured of nervous debility and general weakness and stomach troubles.

Mike Keagan, Grafton, N. D., cured of chronic catarrh and bronchial troubles.

J. E. Whelan, Wadena, Minn., writes that Dr. Rea's Cascola, Cascarine treatment is the best medicine he ever used for dyspepsia, that he feels better than he has felt for years since taking it.

Mrs B. A. Winson, Grand Rapids, Minn., writes that there is nothing like Dr. Rea's treatment. For years she has been suffering of stomach troubles and thinks this medicine is the best she ever tried.

Miss Bertie Voris, Litchfield, Minn., cured of asthma.

Alex Johnson, Forest City, Minn., cured of rheumatism when all other medicines failed. He says he is glad to recommend Dr. Rea to any one with rheumatism or other chronic disease.

Alonzo Springer, Windmere, N. D. cured of cancer of the face in one treatment. There is no pain nor any detention from business whatever.

Such is the Grand work of Dr. Rea and his associates. May his work still continue and may his cures be as numerous in the future as they have been in the past.

COLLIERIES ARE USELESS.

Five That Have Been Flooded Are Permanently Abandoned.

Shenandoah, Pa., Aug. 8. — William Stein, the state mine inspector for the Shenandoah region, yesterday announced that five collieries under his jurisdiction which have an estimated total value of $1,500,000, have been rendered useless by reason of having been flooded and have been permanently abandoned. After the strike shall have been ended most of the workmen will have to remain in idleness for another period of time until the collieries are placed in working condition. In the coal fields south of here Mr. Stein said the situation is about as bad. But in the Wyoming and Lackawanna region the mines are in much better condition. The situation so far as the peace of the Shenandoah region is concerned remains unchanged. It was probably the quietest day since the soldiers were called out one week ago last night.

MUST GO TO JAIL.

Miners and Agitators Are Remanded by Judge Goff.

Clarksburg, W. Va., Aug. 8.—Judge Goff yesterday afternoon in a lengthy opinion decided the habeas corpus case against the miners and agitators and remanded them to the custody of the marshal and sheriff and they will be removed to Parkersburg to serve the balance of their sentences. The judge said that the only question was as to jurisdiction and that the Guarantee Trust Company of New York was entitled to a standing in court, and it was not absolutely necessary for the fuel company to be made a party to the suit. The decision is a great disappointment to the miners, and their counsel say that no other action can be taken at present at least.

KING ARRIVES IN LONDON.

People Are Amazed at His Healthy Appearance.

London, Aug. 8.—The king arrived in this city yesterday. The admiring comments of the crowds along the king's route from Victoria station to Buckingham palace were mingled with expressions of amazement at the appearance of his majesty riding in an open landau, and much of the time bareheaded, he having removed his silk hat. The king kept continually bowing and smiling in response to the cheers of the people. Fortunately there was little rain during the drive to the palace. The long route via Grosvenor Place and Hyde Park corner, and thence down Constitution hill was crowded. He was apparently not fatigued by the excitement of his reception.

ATTEMPTED TRAIN ROBBERY.

Robber Is Frustrated After Desperate Struggle With a Brakeman.

Fort Worth, Tex., Aug. 8.—The south bound fast express on the Rock Island railroad was boarded at Chickasaw, Ind. T., yesterday morning by a man who made a determined effort to hold up the train. The would-be robber encountered Brakeman D. W. Carpenter on the rear platform of the last car and a desperate struggle ensued in which Carpenter was shot three times through the hand. In the scuffle the pistol was knocked from the robber's hands to the track. The man then managed to pull the automatic air valve. When the train slowed down he dropped off and escaped without securing any booty.

TRACEY A SUICIDE

WOUNDED AND SURROUNDED, NOTORIOUS DESPERADO KILLS HIMSELF.

TRAGIC END OF LONG MAN-HUNT

CORNERED AFTER BAFFLING OFFICERS OF TWO STATES FOR WEEKS.

LEAVES BLOODY TRAIL BEHIND

HAS KILLED THIRTEEN MEN SINCE HIS ESCAPE FROM OREGON PRISON.

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 8. — Harry Tracey, the notorious outlaw who, June 9, with David Merrill, escaped from the Oregon penitentiary at Salem, killed himself early yesterday morning, after being wounded by the rifle of one of the posse in pursuit.

Tracey Tuesday night was surrounded in a wheat field near Fellows, a station on the Washington Central railroad about fifty miles west of Spokane. Word was sent back to Davenport, the county seat, and a large number of armed men hurried to the scene. Tracey was hunted down by a posse of Creston citizens. Surrounded, he engaged in a running battle with his pursuers.

His leg was broken by a bullet, and an artery bled profusely. He crept into a wheat field and tried to tie up the artery. Becoming desperate, he evidently put his revolver to his head and fired a bullet into his brain.

At daylight yesterday morning his body was found, already cold.

Killed Thirteen Men.

After baffling the officers of two states; after a wonderful flight of nearly 400 miles across Oregon and Washington, in which he killed thirteen men, Tracey was hunted down by four citizens of the little farming town of Creston and a sole deputy sheriff. Sheriff Gardner and posse arrived in time to guard the wheat field through the night, but the work had already been done.

The posse that will share the reward of $4,100 was made up as follows: C. A. Straub, deputy sheriff; Dr. E. C. Lantes, Maurice Smith, attorney; J. J. Morrison, railway section foreman, and Frank Lillengeh. These men, armed to the teeth, set out from Creston Tuesday afternoon about 2 o'clock. They were working on the information of the Goldfinch youth, who had been forcibly made the companion of the Oregon convict for over twenty-four hours at the ranch of L. B. Eddy on Lake creek, about three miles south from Fellows. The party in getting to the ranch. When within a few hundred yards of the farm they encountered Farmer Eddy mowing in one of his fields. While engaging him in conversation they saw a man issuing from the barn door.

Made All Possible Haste

"Is that Tracey?" asked one of the party.

"It surely is," replied Eddy.

The party separated; Lanter and Smith accompanying Eddy in the direction of the barn, while the other two men swung around to the other side.

Two of the man-hunters stopped behind the barn on a slight eminence, on which they could watch everything that went on, and Eddy continued on up to the door. Tracey came from the barn again and began helping his host unhitch the horses. He carried no rifle, although he had his revolvers in place. The fugitive finally saw the men carrying rifles, and, turning sharply to Eddy, said: "Who are those men?"

"I don't see any men," said Eddy.

Tracey pointed out the two men on the hill. Eddy informed his companion who the men were, and the

Outlaw Made a Leap

for the barn door. The pursuers, stepping a bit closer, commanded "Hold up your hands!"

The outlaw jumped behind Eddy and placed first the farmer and then his horse between himself and the pursuers. He commanded the farmer to lead his horse to the barn, and, remaining under cover, moved toward shelter.

When near the stable he broke and dashed inside. He quickly reappeared, rifle in hand, and started on a dead run. Turning on the two men nearest him, the desperado fired two shots, but without his usual luck, neither bullet taking effect. Without waiting for further fighting Tracey made a dash down the valley leading south from the barn and headed for the brush. In an instant the man hunters were off in pursuit, firing as they ran. Coming to a rock, Tracey dodged behind it, and, resting his gun on the rock, began a fusilade. Eight shots in all were fired by the outlaw, but

Not One Hit Its Mark.

Seeing that he was not succeeding, he bolted for a wheat field near by. At the edge of the field he stumbled and fell upon his face, then crawled into the grain on his hands and knees.

It was growing dark, and the pursuers not daring to move in closer, decided to surround the place and wait for daylight. As soon as dawn came an entrance was made into the wheat field and Tracey's dead body was found lying in the grain, with his face turned toward the sky. His left hand thrown over his head held a revolver which had inflicted the death wound. The top of his head was badly shattered.

The bullet wounds on the left leg showed the cause of the man's despondency. A shot had broken the leg between the ankle and the knee. The other cut the tibial artery, which was of itself sufficient cause for death.

Assault Then Murder.

Hoquiah, Wash., Aug. 8.—At the police station, here Joseph Stockheimer shot and killed Frank S. Aegers, his brother-in-law, who had caused his arrest for assaulting him. Stockheimer had pleaded guilty to the charge of assault and paid a fine, when he sought out Aegers and shot him dead.

DAKOTA CROPS BEHIND TIME.

View of Expert John Inglis Regarding Condition of Wheat Different From Other Rosy Stories.

The well known crop expert, John Inglis, of Chicago, who has been remarkably successful in giving preliminary estimates of the yield and probable results of the wheat crop of the country for the past sixteen years, was in Jamestown on his annual tour of inspection of the spring wheat of Minnesota and the Dakotas. He had been through Minnesota and South Dakota. He drove out to fields near Jamestown and gathered samples of the wheat heads and inspected the straw, stand, the condition of the berry and the various details that go to make up an expert opinion that is used by men of wealth for purposes of their own in discounting the yield of wheat of the country.

Mr. Inglis has been through the winter wheat belt, also, this year, and his opinion on the results of that crop is being borne out by the large receipts of off-grade wheat in Chicago.

In regard to the wheat crop of the Dakotas, as far as he has examined it, Mr. Inglis' opinion will be considerable of a surprise.

The general view has been that, with favorable weather, North Dakota was looked for a big yield of wheat, and both the Dakotas' reports have been made very rosy.

Mr. Inglis says that the heads are not well filled, and that there is a good deal of smut in every field where the heads were examined.

Two or three per cent of smut is sufficient to knock off a grade. He attributes the presence of smut to the wet weather, more than to any spore that is found on the seed at germination.

One of the remarkable features of the present wheat crop, says Mr. Inglis, is the length of the head, and the smutty heads are as long as the others, while usually they are the shorter stools.

The crop is also from ten days to two weeks late, and will have to have very favorable weather to mature properly. The straw in most of the South Dakota fields and those in the southern part of North Dakota is not green from the first joint to the ground, but there is enough strength in the upper part of the stalk to mature the head if the right kind of weather prevails for the next two weeks.

At present much of the wheat is only in blossom, some in the milk and some in the dough. While the heads are long, the other conditions of the plant do not warrant the view that there will be the unusually large yield indicated by the heads.

Another thing noted by Mr. Inglis is that the acreage of wheat in the Dakotas has been overestimated. In South Dakota, corn, rye, barley and oats have taken the place of the wheat crop in a large degree, and in North Dakota flax and other grains have taken the place of wheat. In riding from Sioux Falls to Canton, S. D., Mr. Inglis made the following count of fields in a distance of about twenty miles: Wheat, 21; corn, 46; oats, 26; barley, 24; flax, 3. In another count of fields, in a distance of ninety-five miles, he found the following: Wheat, 160; corn, 204; oats, 106; barley, 102. This decrease in the acreage of wheat in South Dakota has come about in the last three or four years, and is owing to the low price and small crops. The acreage of corn has increased largely, and the fields are as large as the wheat fields once were.

From his extensive travels, Mr. Inglis believes that North Dakota is the best all-round state in the Union for the raising of food supplies.

NORTH DAKOTA HEROES.

Medal of Honor and Certificates of Merit for North Dakota Soldiers.

Lieut. Gen. Miles has published a list of the names of soldiers serving in the Philippines and China who are declared by the board appointed by the secretary of war to be entitled to medals of honor and to certificates of merit for gallant action in the face of the enemy.

A medal of honor has been awarded to Thomas Sletteland, private, Company C, North Dakota volunteers, "for most distinguished gallantry in action near Paete, Luzon, April 12, 1899, in defending, single-handed and alone, his dead and wounded comrades against a greatly superior force."

William F. Thomas, corporal, and Frank F. Ross, private, Company K, and John H. Kilian, Company H, First North Dakota volunteers, were awarded a certificate of merit for distinguished gallantry in action, having charged across a burning bridge over the Cabon river, May 16, 1899, in the face of 600 of the enemy. These men are among those for whom Senator Hansbrough tried to secure the award of a medal of honor. Kilain was killed in action June 19, 1899.

Patrick Hussey, Company K, and James W. McIntyre, Company B, First North Dakota volunteers, were awarded certificates of merit for most distinguished gallantry in action at San Miguel De Mayum, Luzon, May 10, 1899.

FLAX FIBER MERGER.

North Dakota Concern Goes Into the Combine.

An important transfer of business interests in Fargo and other points in North Dakota has been made by the merging of the North Dakota Flax company and the French-Hickman Flax Fiber company into one company in New York, to be known as the By-Products Paper company.

Articles of incorporation have been filed with the secretary of state for North Dakota. The president is B. F. French, New York; treasurer, Warren A. Ransom, New York, formerly vice-president of the St. Lawrence Power company, Niagara. The capital is $2,500,000. It will manufacture paper pulp from flax fiber and upholsterers' tow, the pulp being made in the large plant at Niagara, which will be in operation very soon. The daily output of this mill represents the flax fiber from 100 tons of North Dakota flax straw. The fiber is made at plants at Fargo and three other points in the state, and other plants will be erected in the near future. The general manager for the Northwest is T. R. Atkinson, whose headquarters will be in Fargo. Baled flax straw will be shipped to Fargo for further preparation for final process into pulp at Niagara.

PATTI RENEWS HER YOUTH

THE SECRET: SHE NEVER WORRIES AND IS NEVER EXCITED

When I read in the papers that Mme. Adelina Patti was going to sing at Albert Hall I went out straightway and bought seats, writes Jennetta L. Gilder. I had not heard Mme. Patti since she sang in opera at the old Academy of Music, New York, supported by the long since dead and gone Nicolini. That was in —, but why give dates? It was too long ago for one to be particular about such details. I am sure that Mme. Patti would rather not have me recall the year.

And here was Patti—the real flesh and blood and no ghost—going to sing again. There was no Nicolini this time, but a brand new young husband, whose name was published in brackets under her more famous one:

MME. ADELINA PATTI.
(Baroness Cedarstrom).

To the present generation the name of Adelina Patti is what that of Jenny Lind was to a generation past. When I told a young American girl that I was going to hear Mme. Patti sing she looked at me aghast. "Patti sing! I thought that she was dead and buried ages ago." To prove that she was alive and singing I took the young American girl to the concert with me. To my great delight Mme. Patti gave her old familiar repertoire. She first sang "Casta Diva," with "Voiche sapete" as an encore. Then the jewel song from Faust, with "Within a Mile of Edinboro Town" as an encore. Then "The Last Rose of Summer," "Home, Sweet Home," and "Comin' Thro' th Rye."

No one can truthfully say that Mme. Patti's voice is as fresh to-day as it was thirty years ago, but every one must admit that is is marvelous, considering her age, for she has turned 60. As for her style and method, they are unimpaired. It seemed to me as though her songs had been arranged for a lower key than of old, but I may be mistaken. Her trills were liquid and brilliant as far as they went, but the famous one, "None, they say have I," was much shortened.

Do you remember that trill? And then the way, later, that she played with the "rye" as a kitten with a ball, tossing it higher and higher, rolling and turning, till it finally ended in a big, round gurgle and then came to an end. It was in the simpler things that Mme. Patti was best—"The Last Rose of Summer" and "Home, Sweet Home," and the enormous audience that filled Albert hall arose to these and gave her an ovation.

As far as manners and appearance go Mme. Patti was as young and coquettish as ever. She was dressed in pale yellow with a "picture hat" perched upon her black and curling hair. To have seen her running airily up the inclined plane that leads to the platform of Albert hall, bowing gayly to right and left, you would not have given her a day more than 20. She is a wonderful woman, is Mme. Patti. I doubt if any prima donna of to-day will have such a record of song. Fortunately for her she has never torn her voice with Wagner's music. Grand as that music is it is death to any but German voices, and even they cannot long withstand its strain. Patti has confined herself to Italian operas and English ballads. Since she was so small that she had to stand upon a table to be seen, she has been singing in public, and before that she played the violin in an orchestra of which her father was the conductor. Notwithstanding her long life before the public, she shows few signs of wear and tear, because her life has been made easy for her. She has always had some one to stand between her and all worry. She is never allowed to be excited. Louisa Loew, the companion of fourteen years, after her quarrel with Mme. Patti published the story of her life to the world. It was not all a pretty story, particularly the part relating to Nicolini, but it was undoubtedly true. Mme. Patti has been treated more or less like a valuable racehorse. Her food, her exercise, her rest, all are looked after by specialists, and have been for years. An article published recently in a London paper tells a different story. It says she "eats what she likes, she lives as she likes, she takes exercise as she chooses, she has no physician in attendance. She has no nerves." If this be true times have changed. When she was last in New York she had her own cook, her own doctor and her own physical attendant. As for nerves, she had them all over her body. She seldom ventured outside of her hotel, and when she did she drove in a closed carriage and stuffed cotton in her ears to keep the cold out.

Mme. Patti has not yet succeeded in selling Craig-y-Nos, her Welsh castle, and she still spends the most of her time there. The place has cost her a fortune and it takes a fortune to run it. Like every prima donna that ever was born, Mme. Patti loves the country. It is, of course, the contrast to the excitement of their public life that makes singers and actors eager for the peace and quiet of green fields.

I say again, Mme. Patti is a wonderful woman, and it is still a genuine pleasure to hear her sing. I would much rather hear her, even though her voice may have lost some of its freshness, than most of the famous singers of to-day. Patti was born, not made, and she still sings with all her old time grace and charm. The young girl alluded to at the beginning of this letter was enchanted. "I feel," she said, turning to me, "as you might have felt if you had been taken to hear Jenny Lind." "Not exactly," I replied, "for I could only have been taken to hear Jenny Lind before I was born."

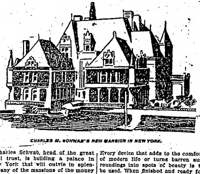
Schwab's New York Palace



CHARLES M. SCHWAB'S NEW MANSION IN NEW YORK.

Charles Schwab, head of the great steel trust, is building a palace in New York that will outvie in splendor any of the mansions of the money kings that adorn the great metropolis. It will, with the grounds, occupy one entire block, and the cost, exclusive of furnishing, will be close to $3,000,000. Every device that adds to the comfort of modern life or turns barren surroundings into spots of beauty is to be used. When finished and ready for occupancy the steel magnate will be able to boast that his home is as magnificent as any abode on earth, with the exception of royal residences.

BIRDS MADE THE SIEVE.

How a Truthful Coal Shoveler Wasn't Believed.

In the mountains of Tennessee a stranger came upon a man who was shoveling coal upon a wooden sieve. Upon inquiry how on earth he got such a curious thing, the old man replied:

"Stranger, I don't think you'll believe me if I tell you."

"Oh, yes, certainly," said the man. "I will believe you."

"Wa'll," said the mountaineer, "it war this way. About five years ago I lived down on the side of the mountain whar woodpeckers and other kind o' birds is powerful thick. That ar' thing"—pointing to the sieve—"war my door to my cabin. It 'ud mock any bird that flies. I'd jest sit thar some summer evenin' and jest move it and every bird came that war imitated.

"Howsumever, one day I left my cabin to go huntin' and went preambulin' down the mountain. Wa'll, some wind come along and made that ar' door imitate a woodpecker. First one come and then a whole pile o' the critters. They lit in on the door and when I come it war jest like ye see it."

The man thanked him and moved on.

"I declar'," said the mountaineer, "I don't beleeve he thought I war tellin' the truth," and he resumed shoveling.—New York Herald.

Wolf Bounties in Nebraska.

Wolf bounty claims for killing wolves have been filed in the auditors office at Lincoln, Neb., to the amount of $20,000, and more claims are coming in every day. The state legislature at its last session appropriated $15,000 for wolf bounty, but the appropriation was vetoed by Gov. Dietrich because no provision had been made for the payment of old claims. So the next legislature will have four years' accumulation of claims to take care of.

GEN. BELL FOOLED THE GRASS

Made Verdure Think the Moisture Came from Heaven.

When Gen. J. Franklin Bell, who recently succeeded in restoring peace to the island of Samar, P. I., was adjutant of the Seventh cavalry, Fort Riley, Kansas, where he was stationed, was in an uncomplete state. The barracks, stables, administration buildings and officers' quarters were newly constructed and rather luxurious for an army post, but of lawns and shade trees there were none.

To obtaining those Bell applied himself with his usual vigor. By transplanting alternately elm and cottonwood trees he had the shade problem in a fair way of solution, but the soil of Kansas proved obdurate as to grass, so that after repeated coats of fertilizer and daily sprinklings, only a scant growth of verdure was produced.

One evening a group of officers coming from the artillery post, were amazed to see Bell on the roof of his house with the hose in his hands, sprinkling the lawn. After gazing at him for a few minutes one of them called out:

"I say, Bell, what are you trying to do up there?"

Bell looked at the group and continuing his sprinkling, answered:

"When you sprinkle the lawn from the ground the grass won't grow because the moisture don't come the way nature sends it." Then in a tone tinged with anger, he added: "I believe the grass knows it, too, but, by the great horned spoon, I'm going to fool that cursed grass."

And he did it, too, for Fort Riley had in a few years as fine a lawn as at any army post in the country.

WOULD COME TO IT.

Scotchman's Protest Against Weak Whisky and Water.

At a banquet given by the manufacturers of Pittsburg at Hotel Schenley to the National Hardware association then in session, Andrew Carnegie had been asked to speak on the outlook for business. He dodged the question and in doing so told this story:

"The toastmaster wishes me to refer to a very important question," he said, "and it may come later, like the experience of the Scotchman who was driving along a lonely road in the Highlands on a typical misty, bleak Scotch day. Seeing a comfortable looking farmhouse just ahead, it occurred to the Laird that possibly a drop of spirits might be obtainable there to help neutralize the effect of the raw atmosphere, so drawing up alongside the gate, a loud 'whoa' brought a Scotch lassie from the house. Addressing her, he said:

"'Little girl, can I get a drop or two of some spirits to take the edge off this cold air? Some whisky and water, for instance.'

"'I'll ask mither,' she said, courtesying, and entered the house, reappearing soon with a glass nearly filled on a tray. Bestowing a shilling, the Laird took the glass and sampled the weak looking drink.

"'My little girl,' said he, 'will you be kind enough to inform me which your mither put first in the glass—the whisky or the water?'

"'The whisky,' said she, again courtesying.

"'Ah, yes,' said he, 'that accounts for it. I'll come to it by and bye.'"

"Larry" Jerome's Wit.

A friend recently put this question to District Attorney Jerome, whose father, Lawrence Jerome, was a celebrated wit of his day, and who was generally spoken of among familiars as "Larry:"

"How many of these stories that are attributed to your father really emanated from him, and how many are fictitious?"

"Well," replied the District Attorney, "I am not prepared to say; some of them are undoubtedly manufactured, but of the origin of one I am convinced, as I was one of the principal actors. On a certain occasion a good many years ago, when I was a little chap, I was riding on my father's knee in a Fifth avenue stage, every other seat being taken. At a corner a lady entered, and my father said to me in severe tones: 'Why, Travers, my boy, I am ashamed of you! Why don't you get up and give this lady your seat?'"—New York Times.

In Somewhat of a Hurry.

Harry Furniss tells of a testy but popular Scotch lecturer who, on a tour of the Lowlands, met with a chairman so impressed with the importance of his office that, in introducing the visitor, he actually talked to the audience for an hour. The gathering, a large one, bore it all patiently. This was the chairman's peroration:

"It is unnecessary for me to say more; so, I call upon the distinguished gentleman who has come so far to give us his address to-night."

The gentleman who had come so far arose, stepped forward, bowed, pulled out and looked at his watch and then said:

"You want my address. It is 322 Rob Roy Crescent, Edinburg. A letter will find me there. Good night!"

Saying which he left the stage and the hall before anybody could interpose.—Philadelphia Times.

Grandson of Gen. Grant.

Algernon Sartoris, a grandson of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, is to enter the army. Young Sartoris is 28 years old, a fine, strapping, athletic fellow. He is ambitious to serve in the foreign branch of the army. He was educated at Oxford university. During the Spanish war he served on the staff of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee as a captain of volunteers.

STORIES ALL IN BUT ONE

With That Exception the Regular Summer Events Were on Time.

"Yes, the regular summer list of strange occurrences is about made up," murmured the exchange editor, "but there's one shy in the bunch, and if it don't drift along pretty soon I won't feel even a teenchy little bit natural. The yap who rocks the boat came to the front unusually early this year, and already the golden rod is sprouting over the cute little mounds of a whole lot of him. The Zeke who tries to sail a catamaran for the first time in his life during a typhoon is gone to his last account already, quite a few of him.

"The heaviest fall of snow in June in Winnipeg for sixty-two years came right along on schedule time. The chilliest day in Buffalo since 1854 happened on the day it was about due, and that's wiped off the slate. The hailstones as large as hen's eggs have been falling with their customary enthusiasm. The annual June demise of the old lady who was patted on the head by Lafayette when he visited this country in 1824 occurred about when it was due the other day, and the oldest living Mason's decease has been reported with the usual frequency this summer.

"The regular June rain of bullfrogs occurred on time at Port Jarvis, and Three Forks, Mich., has had its annual rain of horned caterpillars even this early. The heavy rain storm that inundated one-half of Kansas City, while the other half was being shone upon by a brilliant sun and remained perfectly dry, has executed its regular stunt, too, and so that one's off my mind.

"The main tent of the Western circus has been ripped into ribbons already by the annual June cyclone, and the animals broke out of their cages and ran amuck, like they always do in similar circumstances. The hottest day within the memory of the oldest inhabitant hasn't butted into the calendar yet, but I'm not worrying about that, for it's liable to get along any old time. Yep, the regular bunch of summer bug stories is pretty well assembled, but there's one missing, and I won't feel right comfortable or cheerful until it drifts in."

"What's the shy one?" the exchange editor was asked.

"No young mother," replied the exchange editor, "has yet been knocked unconscious by lightning while holding a baby in her arms, the baby being absolutely unharmed, and found by a neighbor a few moments later crowing—yes, that's the word, crowing—over its mother's unconscious form. When that one zephyrs along I'll feel safe and ready to go off on my summer vacation, but I sure am bothered over the fact that it hasn't turned up yet. I'm afraid the lightning's loafing on its job this year."

Many severe cases of burns from celluloid have been reported.

Making School Happy

VIEWS OF SOME YOUTHFUL PHILOSOPHERS EXPRESSED TO THEIR TEACHERS.

A teacher in a New York public school gave to her pupils this question: "How can we make school happy?" Below are some of the answers she received:

By a little girl, aged 9: "Do not envy your teacher. Try to be throw your work. Study your spelling when you get through." [She carried her principles into practice as she was a model pupil.]

John, aged 10, sent this: "Keep quiet. Don't walk heavy. Treat your seatmate kindly. Don't talk. Obey the teacher. Do your work neatly. Help your seatmate not to talk." [John's maxims were dead letters as far as carrying them out was concerned.]

A little tot of 6 wrote that: "We must keep our finger nails and desks clean."

A boy whose spelling is not all that could be desired wrote: "You mus mind the teach [teacher] and keep your face clean and keep the teeth clean, and when you go home look if your desk is clean and be kind to others an they will be kind to you and keep the floor clean." [This lad has the dirtiest floor, desk and teeth in the room, and is further renowned by being the greatest fighter.]

A little Italian handed in this: "To make neat work be quite clean floor, read well and study your spelling."

Nellie, aged 9, says: "Let us be quiet. Steady. When you are down [done] steudy your lossins."

Sarah, aged 7: "You must not be greeting at your seat. Obey the teacher, forever and ever. Amen. Don't make her to talk too much. Have respectable for her. Tease not old people." [Evidently teachers.]

An æsthetic little girl said: "Have sunshine in face and a smile to the mouth and keep flour tidy."

A boy who at least is honest if a poor speller said: "Don't take anny thing off of anybodies deat. Do whot she wants."

A polite young woman says: "Keep your books clean. Excuse yourself if you bump against any one, and be kind to man and beast."

SONS OF RICH MEN

Eastern Paper Shows That Many of Them Make the Best Citizens.

It is perfectly fair to assert that Mr. Morgan stands out almost alone among famous sons of the rich and powerful.—New Haven Register.

Mr. Morgan is more prominent than any other son of a rich and powerful American father, but it is not well to assume that the sons of rich and successful men do not generally "turn out well." Many of them have not the character and the talent needed for success in life, but a great many of them—thousands of them—are showing that they do possess these qualities. W. K. Vanderbilt, and his brother Cornelius before him; George Gould and his brothers, and John Jacob Astor, are some of the conspicuous ones in New York. There are hundreds of others in that city who are equally level-headed and equally successful, but they do not advertise their success.

In Boston there are many similar instances. J. Montgomery Sears, generally spoken of as the richest Bostonian, inherited all his wealth—$16,000,000 or more—and he takes good care of it, makes good use of it and is a good citizen. E. D. Jordan, Alfred Hemenway, and a great many successful sons of very rich Bostonians might be mentioned.

The theory that it is not a very desirable thing to have a wealthy and successful father is sometimes embodied in the praise that is given to the sons of poor men who win their way in the world, but nobody really accepts that idea. A good many sons of rich men turn out to be worthless fellows; the same thing is true of a much greater number of the sons of poor men. It all depends upon character, and it has been demonstrated that the poor and the rich, as well as those who are neither very poor nor very rich, may and do bring up sons and daughters who are a credit to their parents and who perform well their part in the world.—Hartford Commercial-Times.

REPARTEE OF LEARNED MEN.

How One Professor Rebuked a Comrade's Bumptuousness.

In Moberly Bell's "From Pharaoh to Fellah" Cope Whitehouse is introduced as "The Professor." A chapter is credited to him as taken from "a very learned paper, by a very learned man, read before a very learned society." Anent this treatise on Genesis xlix, Mr. Whitehouse tells this story: He had gone to the French Academy to "assist" at the presentation of a volume of his treatises by Prof. Perrot. Dr. Oppert came up to him in the salon and said scoffingly:

"Do you suppose that any one agrees with you in your interpretation of the forty-ninth chapter of Genesis?"

"I hope not," replied Whitehouse. "Does any one agree with your translation of cuneiform inscriptions? We would both be much ashamed of ourselves if we were not at least a generation in advance of our contemporaries."

Dr. Oppert turned away in silence, but after traversing the room a few times he came back and said: "There is one verse of that chapter which is not found in the Hebrew, and it is as follows: 'I, Moses, declare that all these things shall remain hid until Cope Whitehouse shall be born, and he shall declare to the world what I, Moses, did mean.'"

WILL SEARCH FOR ARK.

Belief That It Is Buried Under Historic Hill of Tara.

The recent excavation at the historic Hill of Tara in Ireland have, like the action of the British Museum authorities in retaining the Celtic gold ornaments found a year or two ago in Ulster, roused the Irish antiquaries to a notable pitch of indignation. These excavations have been carried on at the instance of a section of the British Israelites, who, in addition to believing that the Anglo-Saxon race are the descendants of the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel, also believe that the Ark of the Covenant is buried under Tara Hill.

T. W. Rolleston has just returned from a visit to the landlord of the Hill of Tara, and has persuaded him to stop the excavations for the present, but to allow them to be resumed under the direction of the Royal Society of Antiquaries in Ireland, which will be some guarantee that these investigations will be scientifically carried on.

VICTIMS OF FIRE

HOTEL FIRE AT SAN ANGELO, TEX., ATTENDED BY LOSS OF LIFE.

SEVEN PERSONS ARE CREMATED

CLERK MAKES HEROIC EFFORTS TO WARN SLEEPING GUESTS.

TOWN HAS A NARROW ESCAPE

BUSINESS SECTION SAVED ONLY AFTER MOST DESPERATE WORK.

San Angelo, Tex., Aug. 12. — Fire burned seven persons to death and destroyed the Landon hotel, valued at $75,000.

All the bodies that have been recovered are fearfully charred. When the clerk discovered the fire the dining room was full of flames. He rushed up the main stairway, kicked in doors, calling out at the top of his voice to the guests. Some could not be aroused by this means, and fire arms were discharged outside the hotel. There were seventy-five people in the house, and it is thought that all of them got out safely with the exception of the seven burned. Three others, however, have not been located, but are believed to be safe. The seven women and children who perished got out on a small balcony and were told to jump into blankets which were being held for them. They were afraid and waited until the platform fell back into the flames which were licking up the big frame house. In addition to the hotel three stables and a half a dozen stores were burned, only the greatest effort preventing the whole business section of the town from being destroyed.

HUNTED BY POLICE.

Bartholin Is Suspected of Killing His Mother and His Sweetheart.

Chicago, Aug. 12. — The search for William Bartholin, who is suspected of having murdered his mother and Miss Minnie Mitchell, his sweetheart, was continued yesterday, but no trace of the missing man was found. Oscar Thompson, for eighteen years the constant friend of the fugitive's mother, who was arrested Saturday, stoutly maintained his innocence of any knowledge of the murders and pleaded with the authorities to be released. After a long examination, however, Thompson was sent back to jail, as the police feel confident that he has not told all that he knows. E. O. Hunter and Milton E. R. Edwards, former roomers at the Bartholin house, are being sought by the police.

BATHED IN DEAD MAN'S BLOOD.

Ghastly Manner in Which Murdered Man's Relatives Show Their Grief.

New York, Aug. 12.—Petro Guardina, a Neopolitan fish dealer of Brooklyn, was murdered by a Sicilian, Antoni Zirotoli, in Milburry Bond yesterday. Zirotoli is eighty-two years old, but he wielded a knife which his wife handed him, with deadly precision and a force sufficient to sever Guardina's jugular. The Neapolitan's wife and two children, his brother and several other relatives were with him when he was murdered, and in a frenzy of grief they knelt beside the body and bathed their faces with the blood that flowed from the murdered man. The stabbing was the outcome of a street altercation.

GREAT SLAUGHTER AT DULCE.

Colombian Legation Receives News of Repulse of Rebels by Berti.

Washington, Aug. 12.—The Colombian legation yesterday received a dispatch from the governor of Panama stating that the government troops under Gen. Berti had been unsuccessfully attacked at Agua Dulce by rebels, who were repulsed with great slaughter. The dispatch further states that the rebels are preparing for another attack. It is stated at the legation that the government troops are so strongly intrenched that it will be practically impossible for any invading force to rout them, and that the plans of Gen. Herrera, the rebel leader, to make another attack are certain to meet defeat.

HOPE FOR CONSUMPTIVES.

Sufferers From Tuberculosis Have a Remedy in Sight.

Paris, Aug. 12.—Dr. Naugler asserted at the latest meeting of the Academy of Medicine that experiments he had made demonstrated that a balloon ascension acts on the human system as the most powerful tonic known. Two hours' voyage in the air, he declared, causes an astonishing multiplication of the red corpuscles in the blood, and that condition persists for ten days after an ascension. Five such excursions, he averred, are more beneficial to an anaemic—that is, a person whose blood is thin and watery or consumptive—than a sojourn of three months in the mountains.

HIS WIFE A SPECTATOR.

An Aeronaut Falls to His Death While Making a Parachute Leap.

Millersburg, Ind., Aug. 12. — Frank Reed, an aeronaut, fell while making a parachute leap yesterday and was instantly killed. His wife was among the spectators and witnessed his fall to death.

Killed by Negroes.

Columbia, Tex., Aug. 12. — County Attorney Ed C. Smith was killed and Deputy Sheriff Cochran Willis wounded last nighted last night by a party of negroes, who were attempting to prevent the arrest of one of their number.

Wife Is Held for Murder.

Springfield, Ill., Aug. 12.—The coroner's jury in the case of W. H. Riley, who was murdered in his bed Thursday night, held his wife to the grand jury on a charge of shooting her husband.

SOUTH DAKOTA LEADS.

Amount of Revenue Tax Collected Exceeds North Dakota Record.

Aberdeen, S. D., Aug. 12. — The first annual report of the internal revenue collector's office in this city shows that nearly $200,000 has been collected during the year. Of this amount South Dakota paid about two-thirds. South Dakota leads over North Dakota in the number of liquor licenses, in dealers of manufactured tobacco, wholesalers in malt; also in banks, billiard halls and breweries.

SANDSTONE MAN MURDERED.

Body Is Found Lying Beside Railroad Tracks in Utah.

Echo, Utah, Aug. 12.—A body identified by papers as that of John McDonald of Sandstone, Minn., was discovered alongside the Union Pacific tracks west of here. An ugly hole, apparently inflicted by some dull instrument, appears on the back of the head, and the body is otherwise bruised and mangled. The authorities believe McDonald was killed by tramps, their purpose being robbery.

BOY WRECKS A TRAIN.

Youth at Omaha Makes a Startling Confession.

Omaha, Aug. 12.—Delbert Preston, a fifteen-year-old boy, has made a confession to the authorities of having caused the wreck of a passenger train on the Rock Island near South Omaha July 24, by which one man was killed and several others injured. According to his story he was spending an idle hour on the track and picked up an iron spike, which he inadvertantly left lying on the rail, with the head toward the coming passenger train.

OIL GUSHER IN MICHIGAN.

Petroleum Has Already Covered Several Acres.

Mass City, Mich., Aug. 12.—While digging for water on his homestead near here John Pearson encountered a vein of oil which gushed out in large volume. Already the petroleum has covered several acres some inches deep and a lake is being rapidly formed, no apparatus being at hand to stop the flow. The oil is of excellent quality and appears to be inexhaustible in quantity.

PASSENGERS SHAKEN UP.

West-Bound Train on the Chicago Great Western Is Wrecked.

Galena, Ill., Aug. 12.—Passenger train No. 9 on the Chicago Great Western, west-bound, was wrecked one mile west of Elizabeth while running thirty miles an hour. The track under the tender gave way, throwing the coaches onto their sides. Thirty passengers on the train were badly shaken up, and several sustained slight injuries.

RULES WIFE BY INJUNCTION.

Wisconsin Man Asks Court to Keep Other Man Away.

Janesville, Wis., Aug. 12. — John B. Gallup, a carpenter at Milton, has taken out an injunction before a court commissioner forbidding Thomas Beckel from having anything to do with complainant's wife. This is said to be the second case of the kind in the history of the legal profession.

SAVING THE CROPS.

Women and Girls Work in South Dakota Fields.

Miller, S. D., Aug. 12.—Binders and headers have been quite generally running. A scarcity of help has caused women and girls to go into the harvest fields in order to save the crop, which has now practically been gathered.

SKULL BROKEN AND EYE GONE.

Wisconsin Hotelkeeper Is Struck by a Soo Train.

Cumberland, Wis., Aug. 12.—Barney Karl, a hotelkeeper of Almena, was struck by a Soo train nine miles south. His skull was fractured and an eye was knocked out. The injuries may prove fatal.

Prof. Walker Accepts.

Madison, Wis., Aug. 12.—Prof. E. W. Walker of the Superior Normal school has accepted the superintendency of the state school for deaf tendered him by the state board of control.

Convicted of Manslaughter.

Sturgis, S. D., Aug. 12.—Mame Hill, who shot Kitty King in this city March 20, was convicted of manslaughter in the second degree. The murder resulted from a quarrel that the two women, both colored, had the night before.

Found Dead in His Yard.

Miller, S. D., Aug. 12.—John Miller, an aged bachelor Swede, was found dead in his door yard here yesterday morning. He had been around as usual only a few minutes before. The cause of death was heart failure.

KING IS CROWNED

EDWARD VII. ACCLAIMED IN WESTMINSTER WITH IMPOSING CEREMONY.

SCENE IS RICH IN PAGEANTRY

VAST CROWDS WITNESS PROCESSION AND CHEER THEMSELVES HOARSE.

BELLS RING AND CANNONS ROAR

KING EDWARD BORE FATIGUES OF THE PROTRACTED CEREMONY WELL.

London, Aug. 12.—Edward the Seventh was Saturday crowned king of Great Britain and Ireland and of all the British dominion beyond the seas. The Abbey of Westminster was crowded with the nobles of the realm. The interior of the historic structure was filled with a brilliantly arrayed assemblage of peers and peeresses, their robes of crimson and ermine and their dashing jewels presenting a scene of splendor so indescribable as to almost baffle the brush of the painter.

When the king's crown was finally placed upon his head the great bells of St Margaret pealed a chiming signal to the guns, and the reverberations of the cannon that thundered the royal salute to his majesty were drowned in the shouts of the people who crowded the stands and lined the streets.

The king bore the fatigues of the protracted ceremony well and returned to the palace smiling and with a happy look upon his face.

But it was the people who really formed the feature of the day's events.

Streets Are Packed.

The crowd began to gather about 4 o'clock in the morning, many men having slept in the parks to be on hand early. By 6 o'clock cerriages were rolling in black streams toward the abbey. By 9 o'clock the last guest had entered the abbey, the stands in the streets were filled and all waited patiently for the coming of the king.

The expectant crowd had been waiting for hours before there was any special sign of life within the yard of Buckingham palace. Not until 9:30 were the coaches with their outriders and escorts seen moving into the corrifage road which led from the royal stables.

At 10:30 the procession moved slowly out of the palace gates into the Mall.

First came a group of mounted officers of the headquarters staff in red and gold uniforms, stars and medals sparkling on their breasts.

Then came eight coaches with outriders and escorts, the coaches containing the king's brothers and other members of his family and also a few foreign royalties who were relatives.

Following them with another troop of household cavalry was a coach, only less splendid than the king's own, in which were the prince and princess of Wales. The coach was drawn by six jet black horses with flowing tails.

Do Some Shouting.

The crowd, which up to this time had been murmuring applause, broke into cheers as this coach came in sight. The prince and princess acknowledged the cheers by bowing cordially to right and left.

Lord Roberts and Lord Kitchener, surrounded by a brilliant staff, came next, and then a detachment of yeomen of the guard in ancient uniforms and carrying halberds, or long-poled axes. The crowd were all eyes for Kitchener, whom they cheered frantically.

The crowd was hardly through shouting with admiration when more waving plumes of the household cavalry betokened the king's approach. Drawn by eight cream-colored horses, with their outriders and escort, the cavalcade presented a splendid appearance. The king and queen, not wearing their crowns, were easily visible through the coach windows.

The carriages drove up and left their occupants at Westminster abbey in the same order in which they left Buckingham palace.

The procession into the abbey was a notable one, with the queen a central figure of its rich and picturesque pageantry. But it was the king who had the center of the stage, and in a crimson robe with an enormous train, the collar of the Order of the Garter, and on his head was a crimson cap in place of a crown.

Very Imposing He Looked

A bishop supported the king on either side and six noblemen bore his train.

The last words of the anthem were being sung when the king and queen, after kneeling for a moment in silent prayer, took seats which had been provided for them below their thrones.

The archbishop of Canterbury, preceded by the garter king of arms and accompanied by the great lord chamberlain, the lord chancellor, the lord high constable and the earl marshal, stepped to the king's side and in a clear voice said:

"Sirs, I here present unto you King Edward, the undoubted king of this realm; wherefore all you who are come this day to do your homage, are you willing to do the same?"

Immediately everybody in the abbey shouted "God save King Edward, God save the king."

After the oath and an anthem the dean of Westminster went to the altar and took from it a dish of oil, the dish shaped like a loving cup. With it he took a spoon which he presented to the archbishop of Canterbury, and the archbishop, dipping the spoon in the oil, poured some of it on the king's head, saying:

"Be thy head anointed with holy oil as kings, priests and prophets were anointed."

Archbishop in Difficulty.

Again filling the spoon the archbishop, with some difficulty, found a hole which had been cut in the king's shirt for the purpose, and poured it through upon the king's breast, saying:

"Be thy breast annointed with holy oil."

After this oil was put in the palms of the king's hands and the anointing was complete.

Then the ceremony came to its climax. The archbishop of Canterbury and the bishops advanced to where the king sat and the archbishop very slowly placed the crown on the king's head. There was absolute silence and then the moment the crown touched the king's brow every one shouted loudly and well together, "God save the king." The heralds blew their trumpets and outside guns fired a salute. At the same moment the peers and the kings-at-arms put on their coronets.

The archbishop of York then crowned the queen in much the same manner as the king had been crowned, but with a less elaborate ritual.

As the crown was placed on her head all the peeresses put on their coronets.

Then came an interesting incident. In passing to her throne, which she took without further ceremony, the queen bowed low before the king in token of homage.

The departure of the king and queen from the abbey was signaled by another salute, the massed bands playing "God Save the King." The entire route of their majesties' return to the palace was marked by similar to those which greeted their progress to the abbey, the more circuitous route through Clubland and Constitution hill giving the hundreds of thousands of persons occupying the stands, windows and roofs an opportunity of greeting the new crowned king and his consort before they reentered Buckingham palace, which they did in the midst of remarkable scenes of enthusiasm, the entire crowd from Constitution hill downward joining in singing the national anthem.

Shortly after the return of the king and queen to the palace it was officially announced from there that the king had borne the ceremony well, and that he had suffered in no way from fatigue, and this was confirmed by the presence of the king himself, when, in response to the repeated plaudits of the crowds, his majesty, accompanied by the queen, appeared on the balcony in their robes and crowns. The faces of both were suffused with smiles as they bowed repeatedly their recognition of the warmth of the applause.

While the coronation was being solemnized in London celebrations and rejoicings were carried on throughout the colonies, numerous telegrams to the king conveyed the congratulations of representative bodies everywhere, salutes were fired, and church services were held. Australia confined itself to religious services, having spent all the money gathered for the postponed event of June 26 for charities. Similar services were held by the British communities in all the European capitals and chief cities of the continent.

EDWARD STANDS IT WELL.

Royal Physicians Give Out Their Last Bulletin.

London, Aug. 12.—The festivities in London were continued yesterday. There were considerable crowds almost all day long in the vicinity of Buckingham palace and along the route of Saturday's procession, viewing the decorations and watching the flow of notable personages to and from the various thanksgiving services.

In spite of the welcome announcement made Saturday night that King Edward had borne the fatigues of coronation day well, yesterday's bulletin concerning his health was awaited with a certain degree of anxiety. The bulletin is as follows:

"His majesty bore the strain of the coronation ceremony perfectly well and experienced but little fatigue. The king had a good night and his condition is in every way satisfactory. No further bulletin will be issued."

After the posting of the bulletin there was still some doubt as to whether his majesty would drive out during the day, but the small crowd which remained at Buckingham palace, hopeful to see the sovereign, was finally rewarded by the appearance of the king and queen. Their majesties drove along the Mall to St. James palace without receiving any notable demonstration from the people. Tickets to the chapel royal had been sparcely granted. The service was very simple and there was no sermon.

M'MILLAN IS DEAD.

UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM MICHIGAN DROPS OFF SUDDENLY.

HEART FAILURE CAUSE OF DEATH

BREATHES HIS LAST AT SUMMER HOME AT MANCHESTER-BY-THE-SEA.

WAS SICK BUT A FEW HOURS

FRIENDS IN WASHINGTON ARE SHOCKED AT SUDDENNESS OF BLOW.

Washington, Aug. 12. — A dispatch was received here announcing the death of Senator James Mc Millan of Michigan early yesterday at his summer home at Manchester-by-the-Sea, Mass.

Death was the result of heart failure following congestion, after an illness of a very few hours.

The news came as a great shock to his friends here, for when the senator left Washington, shortly after the adjournment of congress he appeared to be in good health and looked forward with much satisfaction to a quiet and restful summer. For some years Senator McMillan has made his summer home at Manchester-by-the-Sea, having erected a very fine cottage at that place.

While no information on the point has been received here the expectation is that his remains will be taken to Detroit and be deposited at Elmwood cemetery. The body of his son, Capt. John H. McMillan, who served in the Spanish war and who died several months ago, rests there. The senator leaves a widow, three sons, W. C., Philip and Frank, all of Detroit, and a daughter. Mrs. McMillan and daughter accompanied the senator to Manchester after the adjournment of congress. Senator McMillan was a native of Ontario, having been born in Hamilton May 12, 1838, but in early life moved to Michigan and for many years was prominently identified with the business interests and political life of the state, having for a number of terms been chairman of the Republican state committee. He had been a member of the United States senate since 1889. He was chairman of the committee on District of Coumbia in that body and was also a member of the committees on appointments, commerce, naval affairs, relations with Cuba, coast and insular survey and corporations organized in the District of Columbia.

IMMENSE TRADE WITH ENGLAND.

The Tight Little Isle Is America's Best Market.

Washington, Aug. 12.—A report on the agricultural imports of Great Britain for 1896-1900, inclusive, with a significant review of trade conditions and possibilities between the United States and the United Kingdom, has been compiled by Frank H. Hitchcock, chief of the division of foreign markets, department of agriculture. The United Kingdom is the principal market for the surplus agricultural products of exporting countries. The report says that the products of agriculture sent to that market from all sources in 1900 reached the enormous value of $1,578,000,000, forming 62 per cent of the entire import trade of Great Britain and Ireland. During the five years mentioned the annual average value of the imports into the United Kingdom was $2,308,174,441, of which $1,458,921,776, or 63 per cent, was agricultural, and $849,252,665, or 37 per cent, non-agricultural. To this extraordinary import trade in agricultural produce the United States was the principal contributor, furnishing about 33 per cent, or nearly one-third of the supply.

MORE MINES MAY BE STARTED.

Talk of Resumption in the Wyoming Region.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Aug. 12.—The fourteenth week of the anthracite miners' strike began to-day. President Mitchell is authority for the statement that the strikers are in good shape. Contributions to the relief fund are coming in from many quarters. While the strike leaders are inclined to throw cold water on all reports that an attempt may be made to resume mining at an early day in the Wyoming region, it would not be at all surprising should one or two of the mines in this section be started up this week. The same story has been told for weeks past, but there is a well-authenticated report in circulation that the Lehigh & Wilkesbarre Coal company may start up work at its Wanamie colliery some day this week.

TORTURED BY ROBBERS.

Set Fire to a Farmer's Feet to Make Him Divulge Hiding Place of His Money.

Dayton, Ohio, Aug. 12.—Jacob Mumma, an aged farmer who lives alone north of the city, was tortured by masked men who broke into his house, and is in a critical condition as a result of his injuries. Mumma attempted to defend himself with a shotgun, but his aim was bad and he was overcome and bound. The robbers poured coal oil on his feet and started a blaze to compel him to reveal the hiding place of money he was supposed to have, but they secured only an insignificant sum.

Train Kills Aged Man.

Muscatine, Iowa, Aug. 12—John Stewart, aged eighty-five, an eccentric and wealthy farm and town property owner residing at Fruitland, was run over and killed while walking the railroad tracks in this city.

King's Gift to the Nation.

London, Aug. 12.—King Edward has signalized his coronation in a memorable manner by the munificent gift to the nation of Osborne House, one of the favorite residences of the late Queen Victoria.

CORONER'S JURY RETURNS VERDICT AS TO THE DEATH OF TRACEY.

OUTLAW GOT HIS JUST DESERTS

NOTHING BUT PRAISE FOR THOSE WHO HUNTED HIM DOWN.

GHASTLY WORK OF VANDALS

RELIC HUNTERS STRIP EVERYTHING FROM THE DEAD MAN'S BODY.

Davenport, Wash., Aug. 9.—Tracey's body is on its way to Salem, Or. It was last night taken to Moscow, a station on the Great Northern ten miles from here, to be conveyed over that road to Seattle. The coroner's jury returned the following verdict:

"That the body is that of Harry Tracey, the escaped convict from the Oregon penitentiary; that the said Harry Tracey came to his death at the ranch of Louis Eddy in Lincoln county, Wash., on Aug. 5, 1902, by means of a gunshot wound from a pistol in his possession and held in his own hands, after first having been wounded in the right leg by a party or parties to the jury unknown; that Harry Tracey was an escaped convict from the Oregon Penitentiary, and at the time of his death was fleeing from officers and posses in pursuit, and that no one is blamed for the death, but that all efforts to capture him were praiseworthy and in full accordance with the laws of Washington."

VANDALISM IN MORGUE.

Morbid Relic Hunters Seize Anything Belonging to Tracey.

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 9.—When the sheriff, with the body of Tracey, drove through Davenport the town went wild. Several persons were allowed to see the body and then trouble began. Every one wanted a relic and in a short time nothing was left but the body. Some person even picked up the blood-stained handkerchief which had been used by Tracey to keep from bleeding to death. Before he could carry the awful relic away he had to do it up in paper, as it was too wet to place in his pocket.

Squabble Over Tracey Reward.

Portland, Or., Aug. 9.—It is probable that the $4,100 reward for Harry Tracey's body will not be paid for some time owing to the number of claimants. The body will be taken to Salem at the conclusion of the inquest at Davenport, Wash.

PRICE OF BABE'S HAND.

New Jersey Traction Company Pays $10,000 Damage.

New York, Aug. 9.—After a stubborn fight for nearly three years the North Jersey Traction company paid $10,000 yesterday for the loss of a baby's hand. On July 6, 1899, Ida Herbich, then two and a half years old, toppled from a seat on an open trolley car at Market and Broad streets, Newark, and the wheel shaved her hand off at the wrist. The child was sitting with her mother, and occupied the outside seat. This was regarded as negligence on the part of the parent, and when a jury in the circuit court awarded a verdict of $10,000 the company regarded it as excessive and carried the case to the supreme court, where the judgment was set aside. Lawyer G. M. Titus, counsel for the child's parents, carried the case to the court of errors and appeals, and, after a hard fight, the judgment was reinstated. The money will be held in trust for the child by her parents until she is of age.

THE PRESIDENT PREDICTS.

According to German Writer, He Peers Into the Future.

Berlin, Aug. 9. — An article by Max Goldberger will appear in Saturday's Der Woche, indicating the necessity for German merchants co-operating in American enterprises. He says that Germany should have secured a share in the petroleum concerns in Ohio, Pennsylvania and other states, the same as the Americans are doing in the manufacture of German chemicals. He further urges the necessity for Germans cultivating the acquaintance of the leaders of American finance and trade. In conclusion he quotes President Roosevelt as saying to him at the White House that the "economic future belongs to America and Germany."

FRANCE HAS COAL STRIKE.

Houses of Men Who Remained at Work Are Dynamited.

Paris, Aug. 9.—A dispatch from Valenciennes, department of Nord, says that 1,500 of the 2,000 coal miners there are on strike. Detachments of cuirassiers have been dispatched to protect the homes of those who remain at work. Several of these houses have already been wrecked and an attempt was made to blow up one cottage with dynamite cartridges. Further disturbances are expected.

KRUGER'S ENMITY.

It Is Incurred by Gen. Meyer, Who Dined With Lord Kitchener.

BURGLARS ARE BOLD.

Albert Lea Suffers From an Epidemic of Thefts.

Albert Lea, Minn., Aug. 10. — There seems to be an epidemic of burglaries here. Wednesday night the residence of A. G. Voigt was entered through the cellar and the house ransacked, although three or four people were sleeping in various apartments. Four pocketbooks and about $65 in money was taken. It would seem that an anaesthetic was administered, as the thief entered Mr. Voigt's room and took his trousers. It develops that Thursday night burglars approached the M. F. Donahue residence and Mrs. Donahue, being awake, heard them at the window and saw a smoke or vapor pour into the room. She grew drowsy, evidently the result of a sleeping potion. Somebody also went into the Voigt house again Thursday night, but nothing was taken from either place.

SMOOTH SWINDLER.

He Fleeces Many Victims of Their Cash Through a Novel Method.

Sioux City, Iowa, Aug. 10—While H.P. Gilmore, under many aliases, swindled several hundred persons in Minnesota, Wisconsin, South Dakota, Nebraska, Iowa and other states, he made love to some score or more of widows and old maids. He is in jail here and three sheriffs are here trying to get him. Sioux and Plymouth counties, Iowa, and Clay county, S. D., have already sent officers, and telegrams are pouring in asking if it would be worth while to send after the gay Lothario and clever swindler. Gilmore secured $27 from each of his victims in advance for a "pattern case, show case and 1,000 catalogues."

NORTH DAKOTA TAX.

Increased Valuation All Around by the Board.

Bismarck, N. D., Aug. 10.—The total valuation of railroad property in the state, as finally fixed by the state board of equalization, is $19,985,640, an increase of $2,002,275 over last year. The Northern Pacific gets the largest increase, being $740,000 over last year. The Great Northern is increased a little over half a million and the Soo about the same. Senator Washburn's road, the Bismarck, Washburn & Great Falls, gets an increase of $55,000. The Great Northern's total assessment this year is slightly more than $8,000,000; Northern Pacific, $7,474,000; Soo, $3,529,000.

GOLD FIND IN WISCONSIN.

Neighborhood of Mellen Is Excited Over the Discovery.

Mellen, Wis., Aug. 10.—A rich vein of gold, silver, palladium and iridium, assaying $143.50 a ton, has been uncovered at the Holmes mine, three miles east of this place, at a depth of eighty-three feet. The vein is eight feet wide by four thick. Mining men who have visited the mine are of the opinion that it is a full-fledged body of ore. Prospectors are starting in all directions to dig, anxious to find mineral on their property.

MANITOBA WHEAT YIELD.

It Is Far Greater Than Ever Before, but Still Under Estimates.

Winnipeg, Aug. 10. — The Northwest Grain Dealers' association, which is never far out of the way in crop estimates, made the following official statement:

Estimated yield in Manitoba: Wheat, 47,957,760 bushels; in the territories, 13,567,000; total, 61,524,760 bushels.

Oats—Manitoba, 27,552,280; in the territories, 10,393,776; total, 37,946,056.

BRYAN DENIES IT.

Not a Candidate in 1904—Says He Gave Out No Such Interview.

Muscatine, Iowa, Aug. 10. — W. J. Bryan denies that he gave out an interview at Mason City Wednesday, in which he said he was willing to be a presidential candidate. He said: "I shall not be a candidate in 1904, and while I would not promise never to be a candidate again under any circumstances, I have no plans looking to a future nomination for any office, and am perfectly content to do my work as a private citizen."

ROBBERS STILL AT LARGE.

Detectives Thus Far Have Failed to to Make an Arrest.

Chicago, Aug. 10.—Although the hunt for the Burlington train robbers was kept up yesterday no new clews were found and no arrests were made. Detective Evans of the identification bureau at Washington, with two Chicago detectives, went up the Mississippi river on a secret mission, refusing to allow any local officials or newspaper men to accompany them.

Young Woman Takes Her Life.

La Crosse, Wis., Aug. 10. — Alta Cox, a young woman of Milliston, took paris green, then walked to her uncle's house and died. She left a request for no flowers and no singing or music at her funeral.

BRITAIN'S BIG DAY

EVERYTHING IN READINESS FOR THE CORONATION OF THE KING.

EDWARD BITTERLY DISPLEASED

SCORES OF PEERS ABSENT THEMSELVES AND GO SHOOTING.

PROSPECT OF WET WEATHER

AMERICANS ARE INVITED IN A STRICTLY PERSONAL CAPACITY.

London, Aug. 10.—King Edward's peculiarly human message to his people with its profound tone of thanksgiving, has set the key of the coronation.

A wave of reflective thought has been set in motion in London which it is hoped may have the effect of tempering the rejoicings. Confronted with a prospect of wet weather, damp clothes and bedraggled decorations, the metropolis is in a mood to weigh whatever significance attaches to the great event of to-day. The king is bitterly displeased at the conduct of scores of peers and members of parliament in absenting themselves from to-day's ceremonies to fill their grouse shooting, country house and seaside engagements, made before the present coronation date was fixed. When he learned of these wholesale departures the king is quoted as having said: "I fear I may be the only English gentleman in London to-morrow."

The main thoroughfares, miles of which were gay with flags and bunting in June, are now stripped except for the illumination fixtures which were allowed to remain in place.

Weather Outlook Uncertain.

The weather outlook is uncertain and the weather bureau is trying hard to find an excuse for a hopeful forecast.

Westminster is the center of what little activity London displays.

Despite the announced departure of all the special embassies, the government has been somewhat embarrassed to find a few of these guests still on hand. While Whitelaw Reid, the special American ambassador, announced the formal dissolution of his embassy, Gen. Wilson, E. L. Baylies and J. Pierpont Morgan, Jr., are now in London, and the authorities, who were decidedly doubtful as to whether they should recognize their presence, finally settled the matter by sending all of them tickets to the abbey, but emphasizing the fact that the courtesy was extended in a strictly personal capacity.

The American embassy received a formal letter from the war office asking it to loan an American flag to decorate a balcony at the war office. The flag was sent yesterday and it flies from the balcony.

BRUISES ON HIS BODY.

Death of North Dakota Man in Chicago to Be Investigated.

Chicago, Aug. 10.—Acting on a request from Gov. Frank White of North Dakota, Acting Mayor Walker yesterday ordered the police to make a searching investigation into the death of Otto Faust, who was declared insane soon after his arrival in this city on July 7, and a few days later died at the Dunning asylum. The people of Valley City, N. D., where Faust lived, have taken an active interest in the case and have appealed to their state executive to lend his influence to bring the entire affair to light. One of them said yesterday: "It is up to some one to explain how Mr. Faust received the fearful blows that bruised his forehead, smashed his nose and gashed his face, which were not on him two or three hours before he was sent to the asylum and at which time I last saw him alive."

TRY WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY.

Navy Department Conducts Successful Experiments.

Washington, Aug. 10—Communication between Washington and Annapolis was established yesterday by wireless telegraphy under the auspices of the navy department. Some months ago Lieut. Hodgins of the navy was sent to Europe to procure the apparatus of as many different systems as possible for experimental purposes here. He returned about ten days ago with duplicate sets of apparatus for four systems, not including the Marconi systems. Negotiations with Marconi for sample apparatus failed. One of the systems was tested yesterday, signals being interchanged for the first time. The distance from Washington to Annapolis is about thirty-five miles and the exchange of signals upon the first attempt is considered encouraging.

CUBANS IN BAD STRAITS.

Thousands Seeking Work With No Prospects of Getting It.

Havana, Aug. 10.—The business situation in Cuba is becoming complicated and deplorable. In Pinar del Rio province dozens of establishments are closed. In Matanzas province no work is being done on the ranches or in town. More than 20,000 in that province are seeking work. In Santa Clara province the country men are sacrificing their work animals in order to eat. In Puerto Principe province no work is being done on the two principal sugar estates, and all municipal work is stopped.

Murderer Arrested.

Brillion, Wis., Aug. 10.—George Wolf of Chippewa Falls, the alleged murderer, was arrested here yesterday by Marshal Plank. The arrested man confessed to the murder of his wife when captured.

Wisconsin Cranberry Growers.

Grand Rapids, Wis., Aug. 10. — The sixteenth annual convention of the Wisconsin Cranberry Growers' association will be held at the Gaynor-Blackstone marshes on Aug. 19, near Cranmoor.

GAMBLERS GET REVENGE.

Isaac Finkelstein Is Murdered in Des Moines.

Des Moines, Iowa, Aug. 7. — Finkelstein, whose crusade against public gambling closed the eight houses in Des Moines two weeks ago, was murdered last night at an alley entrance between Sixth and Seventh streets, on East Walnut street. He was on his way home, less than a block and a half away, when a man stepped out of the shadow of the alley and struck him a blow over the head with a singletree. Finkelstein fell to the ground. Four men saw him fall and ran to assist him. He was dead when they arrived. His skull had been crushed. Beyond the bloody singletree, which was left beside the victim, the only clue to the murderer is a report that a little after the time of the murder one unrecognized man was overheard to say to another: "I killed the ——," and at another time one man was heard to tell another "Keep your mouth shut."

The murder is supposed to have resulted from Finkelstein's action in prosecuting the gamblers. He did not object to public gambling, but wanted the city to receive a revenue from it, he said, and when the police did not raid the houses he filed complaints with the sheriff. The resultant raids proved so expensive that the gamblers closed their places.

BIG STRIKE OF IRON ORE.

Ore Found at Highland, Thirty-Seven Miles North of Duluth.

Duluth, Aug. 7. — The discovery of what is said to undoubtedly be a large deposit of ore far south of the southern run of the Mesaba and Vermillion ranges has created a stir in iron ore circles. The find is only thirty-seven miles north of Duluth, or thirteen miles north of Two Harbors, on the Duluth & Iron Range road, which line is controlled by the United States Steel corporation. The new ore deposit is in Lake county and not far from Highland Station. There is much excitement among the settlers on the Iron Range road in the vicinity of the discovery, and it is believed by many Duluth people that a new iron ore district has been stumbled upon. Several of the big iron ore concerns have dispatched experts to Highland to examine the new property and pass upon the prospects for further possible discoveries in that vicinity.

TRACEY THREATENS CUDIHEE.

Leaves Not Saying He Will Fix the Sheriff Plenty.

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 7.—The sheriff's office at Davenport received a message from Preston stating that Tracey spent all day Monday at the home of L. B. Eddy, a rancher on Lake creek, three miles and a half south of Fellows. The outlaw made his appearance Sunday evening and took possession of the place. He is reported to have been there Monday night, leaving at 7:30. Pinned to the well on a farm about a mile north of Odessa, where apparently Tracey had watered his horses, the following note was found:

"To Whom It May Concern—Tell Mr. Cudihee to take a tumble and let me alone, or I will fix him plenty. I will be on my way to Wyoming. If your horses are any good would swap with you. Thanks for a cool drink.

—"Harry Tracey."

KILLED HIS WIFE.

Iowa Man Executes Threat Made in a Letter to His Parents.

Montezuma, Iowa, Aug. 7. — Fred Falkinburg, until recently a resident of this city, killed his wife and shot himself twice at his home near Kansas City. The murder of his wife and the attempt on his own life seems to have been thoroughly planned by the murderer. In a letter to his father and mother, written a few days previous to the murder, he expressed intentions of this deed, but having previously had family trouble his parents overlooked his threats until too late, as the next morning after receiving the letter a dispatch brought the news of the son's terrible deed.

"BLACK PERRY'S" SLAYER.

Coroner Says James Haynie Committed the Deed.

Helena, Mont., Aug. 7.—The coroner's jury which has been investigating the death of W. H. Perry, known as "Black Perry," returned a verdict late last night to the effect that he had been shot by James Haynie, a well known foreman of the Hysham Cattle company. Haynie surrendered to the Indian police on the Crow reservation and was taken to Miles City by the Rosebud county sheriff. A great deal of mystery surrounds the shooting.

BREAKS HIS FACE.

Wisconsin Man Struck With Heavy Cordwood Stick.

Winona, Minn., Aug. 7.—John Metzkogan of Blair, Wis., is lying at the point of death as a result of a cowardly assault last Saturday night. He was struck across the face with a cordwood stick. Two pieces of bone have been taken from his nose, and his face is horribly beaten and battered.

RETURN OF GEN. GREELY.

Has Been Inspecting Government Telegraph Line in Alaska.

Seattle, Wash., Aug. 7.—Gen. A. W. Greeley, chief of the United States signal service, returned from Alaska on the steamer Bertha. Gen. Greeley went to Alaska to inspect the work being done on the government telegraph line from Valdez to Eagle City.

Lucas, Iowa, Is Scorched.

Ottumwa, Iowa, Aug. 7.—Fire of unknown origin destroyed the greater business portion of Lucas, twenty-five miles west of here. Loss, $30,000. Fire departments from surrounding towns saved the place from destruction.

Farmer Loses Horses and Barn.

Andover, S. D., Aug. 7.—A barn belonging to E. W. Bigelow was totally destroyed by fire, together with one span of horses and a quantity of harness. Loss, $750; no insurance. Origin of fire unknown.

Officers Have Suspicions.

Devil's Lake, N. D., Aug. 7.—Officers are working on a clue which may lead to the discovery of the murderers of Nicholas Nachsheim, whose body was found with the head severed from the body.

TRAIN IS HELD UP

TWO MASKED MEN ROB THE BURLINGTON LIMITED IN ILLINOIS.

GOT AWAY WITH ABOUT $20,000

ENGINEER FORCED TO RUN AHEAD WHILE EXPRESS CAR IS CUT OFF.

BLOWN UP WITH DYNAMITE

POSSE OF ARMED MEN STARTS IN PURSUIT OF THE ROBBERS.

Dubuque, Iowa, Aug. 7.—Two masked men held up the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy limited, north-bound, two miles north of Savanna, Ill., at 11:30 Tuesday night. They cut off the Adams express car, forced the engineer to run up the track, blew the car up and torpedoed the track. When the torpedoes exploded the engineer quickly brought the train to a stop. One man boarded the engine, ordered the engineer to run ahead, while the other man cut the express car. Trainmen hurried to Savanna and gave the alarm and a posse of officers and citizens armed with shotguns and revolvers hastened to the scene. The limited is said to carry a heavy and valuable express package. It is reported that the robbers secured about $20,000.

Robbery Is Confirmed.

Chicago, Aug. 6.—At the Burlington offices in this city the news of the daring and successful work of the bandits was confirmed. The train which was looted is known as No. 47, leaving Chicago at 6:30 p. m. It is a through train for the Twin Cities. The officials of the railroad company were unable to give any information as to the amount of booty secured by the robbers or to say definitely whether any of the trainmen had been injured during the exciting encounter.

SNAKE IN THEIR BED.

Illinois Woman Is Bitten and Then Dispatches the Snake.

Carbondale, Ill., Aug. 7. — A snake crawled into the bed occupied by Mr. and Mrs. N. J. Keefe at their home in Murphysboro yesterday. Mrs. Keefe awoke about 4 o'clock in the morning and feeling something cold near her feet, moved one of them toward the foot of the bed. Just then she thought she struck a pin and her screams of pain aroused her husband. When a light was brought a copperhead snake was found crawling over the bed covers toward the woman's head. Mrs. Keefe leaped from the bed and Keefe grabbed a broom. After making several unsuccessful attempts to kill the snake with the broom Mrs. Keefe dispatched the reptile with a poker. She is very weak and her ankle is badly swollen.

CHEAPER BEEF.

Retail Butchers Want Tariff Removed and a Bounty Given.

Washington, Aug. 7.—Washington hotels are crowded with delegates to an annual convention of the National Association of Retail Butchers and Meat Dealers. The delegates are almost to a man in favor of removing the tariff on beef cattle, which amounts to about 2 cents per pound. A proposition is also being considered looking to the encouragement of the growing of beef cattle in the East. It has been suggested that the association should throw its influence in favor of a proposition to have the several states in which the growing of cattle has been abandoned offer a bounty for the growing of beef cattle.

WOMAN RECOVERS HER SIGHT.

Vision Miraculously Restored While Praying at a Holiness Meeting.

Denver, Aug. 7.—Mrs. Sarah Nessler of this city, who has been blind for seven years and whose case was pronounced incurable by oculists, is said to have recovered her eyesight in a miraculous manner. She says that while praying at a revival meeting of the Holiness sect at the penticostal union, a white light broke upon her eyes and soon she was able to distinguish objects. Her vision, she believes, is now nearly as good as it was before she became blind.

MYSTERIOUS DROWNING.

Woman Who Went Shopping Is Found Dead in Shallow Water.

Houghton, Mich., Aug. 7. — Mystery surrounds the drowning of Mrs. Margaret McCormick of Lake Linden, whose body was found in Torch lake. She left home in the morning to go shopping. Several hours later the body was discovered in shallow water twenty feet from shore, with her cape and hand bag on shore near by. The woman was in good health, and had no reason to take her life. The family scouts the suicide theory. The authorities are investigating.

STAGE IS HELD UP.

Lone Highwayman Does the Trick in Idaho.

Salmon, Idaho, Aug. 7. — The Red Rock stage was held up by a lone highwayman yesterday morning while en route to this place. It is not known how much the robber secured. There was but one passenger, a woman, and she was not molested. The treasure box was sifted.

Checking Forest Fires.

Estes Park, Colo., Aug. 7.—The forest fire situation south of Long's Peak is somewhat improved. Extensive back-firing and timber cutting on the part of the fire fighters, coupled with unfavorable winds and rain have checked the progress of the flames.

Succeeds to the Place.

Jamestown, N. D., Aug. 7.—Fred M. Warner of Pingree was yesterday appointed county superintendent of schools to fill the place made vacant by the death of Maj. Lyons.

READY FOR ARBITRATION.

Pius Fund Claims Case Will Be Tried at The Hague.

Washington, Aug. 9.—All the preliminaries have been arranged at the state department for the submission to arbitration at The Hague of the Pius fund claims case. The arbitrators for the United States are Sir Edward Fry of England, formerly chief justice of the court of appeals of England, and F. De Martens of Russia, the well known authority in international law. Mexico has selected as her arbitrators Pagano Gulanas of Chile, a judge of the court of cassation of Italy, and Savorin Lohman, a judge of the highest court in Holland. These four men will select an umpire to act in case of a tie. The arbitration tribunal will meet at The Hague on Sept. 1. Judge William L. Penfield, solicitor of the state department, will act as the counsel for the United States.

LOCKED IN EACH OTHERS ARMS.

Two Young Women Meet Death in the Ohio River.

Pittsburg, Aug. 9. — While rowing across the Ohio river last night just below the Point, Mrs. Maggie Miller and Miss Bridget Madden, both nineteen years old, were drowned. The women were in a flat-bottomed boat, and getting into the waves made by a passing steamboat became frightened and steered directly in front of another boat going in the opposite direction. Their boat was smashed and both women were carried down and under the steamer. When the bodies were recovered they were clasped in each other's arms.

WALLER TO DEFEND HIM.

Assistant Paymaster Penrose on Trial on Charge of Fraud.

Erie, Pa., Aug. 9.—The court-martial called to try Charles W. Penrose, assistant paymaster, United States navy, and attached to the United States steamer Michigan at this port, convened here yesterday. Maj. L. W. T. Waller, marine corps, and of Philippine fame, will defend the accused. The charges against Penrose are rendering false and fraudulent returns of balances to his credit, embezzlement, scandalous conduct, absence from station and duty, and negligence in obeying orders.

Cuba Will Participate.

St. Louis, Aug. 9.—David J. Hill, acting secretary of state, has informed President Francis of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition company, that he is advised by the minister of the United States at Havana that President Estrada Palma has recommended in a message to the Cuban congress the appropriation of a sum of money to enable Cuba to participate in the exposition.

Will Be Hard on Poor Cubans.

Havana, Aug. 9.—The newspapers of Havana publish many comments on the proposed changes in the customs tariff for the purpose of providing security for the projected loans of $4,000,000 and $35,000,000 as set forth in the bill passed by the senate last Tuesday. All the conservative newspapers consider that these changes will be hard on the poor man.

Miners Charged With Stealing.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Aug. 9.—The Pennsylvania Coal company at Pittston caused the arrest of a number of miners who mined coal for their own use in abandoned workings and outcroppings. An official of the company says since the strike began hundreds of tons of coal have been stolen from the company.

Solicit Aid for Strikers.

Scranton, Pa., Aug. 9. — Committees were appointed by the District board of the United Mineworkers to make a house to house canvass of the city and suburbs for financial aid for the strikers. It is understood the same plan will be followed in all the cities and larger towns in the coal regions.

Democrats Name a Ticket.

Rawlings, Wyo., Aug. 9.—The Democratic state convention nominated a ticket headed by George T. Beck for governor. The platform favors the popular election of United States senator, compulsory arbitration of labor disputes and municipal ownership of public utilities.

Small Coal Tonnage.

Philadelphia, Aug. 9.—The Pennsylvania railroad for the week ending Aug 2 carried only 920 tons of anthracite coal. This is the smallest tonnage of hard coal the company has moved for many years. For the same week in 1901 the tonnage of anthracite amounted to 98,423 tons.

Buys Some Ore Mines.

Philadelphia, Aug. 9.—The Cambria Steel company has bought the Republic iron ore mines in Michigan. This company owns other iron ore mines both in the Mesaba region and the hard ore region. It is understood that the price paid for the Republic mines was over $1,000,000.

Venice Is Shaking.

Venice, Aug. 9.—A slight earthquake shock was felt here last night. The San Stefano campanile is gradually moving further out of the plumb, and its collapse is expected hourly.

Two Children Burned to Death.

Ashland, Or., Aug. 9. — At Klama Lester and Emory Davis, six and three years old, respectively, were burned to death while playing with matches near a can of coal oil.

Young Negro Lynched.

Shrieveport, La., Aug. 9.—Harry Benton, a seventeen-year-old negro, was lynched near Homer for criminal assault on the four-year-old child of D. W. Fortson.

Prisoner Attempted Suicide.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Aug. 9.—John Kelly, a prisoner in the Sioux Falls penitentiary, who has been acting queerly for several days, succeeded in eluding the guards and made a desperate effort to end his life. He perhaps fatally injured himself.

Sent Up for Three Years.

Elk Point, S. D., Aug. 9.—Judge Jones sentenced W. B. Dickson, colored, to three years in the penitentiary for shooting Conductor David Murphy of Sioux City.

The Crimson Blind

By Fred M. White

CHAPTER XXXII. (Continued.)

Chris smiled at the diplomatic response. She approached the panel of the wall on which the Rembrandt had been fastened. She indicated the long steel stays which had been clamped on to the iron frame. "Look at them," she said. "It was my suggestion that the stays should be attached to the frame to prevent anything like this robbery. I made the stays secure myself. And what happened to justify my prudence? Why, the very same night somebody came here after the picture."

"Henson!" Littimer cried. "Ah! But he could have come openly."

"It is not in the nature of the man to do things openly," Chris went on. "I know more about the man than you imagine, but that you are to keep to yourself. He comes here in the dead of the night and he gets into the house through an upstair window. A man of his bulk, if you please! And he comes here hot-foot and breathless at a time when common prudence should have kept him in bed. Why? Because he knows that Dr. Bell has the other Rembrandt and will come to prove it, and because he knows that if he can steal the Littimer Rembrandt he can precipitate the very impasse that he has brought about. But he could not steal the picture because it was fast."

"You are a very clever young lady," Littimer said drily. "You will tell me next that you expected Henson to try this thing on."

"I did," Chris said, coolly. "I had a telegram to warn me so."

Littimer smiled. All this mystery and cleverness was after his own heart. He lighted his cigarette and tendered his case in the friendliest possible manner to Bell.

"Go on," he said, "I am deeply interested."

"I prefer not to go into details," Chris resumed. "All I ask you to do is to be entirely guided by me when you have heard my story. I have admitted to you that I knew when Henson was coming, and why I am interested. Because it happens that Reginald Henson has greatly injured someone I cared for deeply. Well, I fastened up the picture—he came. He sneaked in like the thief that he was, because his accomplice and tool had failed to save him the trouble. Lord Littimer, I will not pain you by saying who Henson's accomplice is."

Littimer nodded gloomily.

"Not that I blame that accomplice; he could not help himself. Ah, when the whole truth comes to be told, what a black business it will be. Well, Henson came to steal the picture, and I caught him in the act. If you had seen his fat, greasy, crestfallen face! Then he pretended that it was all done for a jest and as a warning to Lord Littimer. And Lord Littimer, the most cynical of men, allowed it to pass."

"I couldn't see what he had to gain," Littimer pleaded. "I don't now, as a matter of fact."

"Neither will you, for the present," said Chris. "Still, you will be so good as to assume the same hospitality and courtesy toward Henson as you extend at present."

"I daresay I can manage it," said Littimer, cynically. "I used to be a society man once."

"Henson did not deceive me for a moment," Chris went on. "He was bound to have the picture, and, being baffled one way, he tried another. Look here, Lord Littimer. Let me assume for a moment that Dr. Bell came down here to steal your picture, get rid of the frame, and palm off your own engraving for another. Now, in the name of common sense, let me ask you a simple question. Could Dr. Bell have possibly known that the frame of the Rembrandt was fastened securely to the wall, and that I had attached it quite recently? And could he, in the short time at his disposal, have procured the necessary tools to cut away the stays? Again, Dr. Bell can prove, I suppose, exactly what time he left London to-day. No; we must look farther for the thief."

"There is something else, also, we have to look for," said Dr. Bell. "And that is the frame. You say it was of iron, and, consequently, heavy. The thief would discard the frame and roll up the print."

"That is a brilliant suggestion," said Chris, eagerly. "And if we only had that is the frame. You say it was of doubts at rest entirely. I happen to know that the real thief came and went by the cliff under the terrace. If the frame was thrown into the gorse, there it—"

"Might stay for ages," Littimer exclaimed. "By Jove, I'm just in the mood to carry this business a stage or two farther before I go to bed. Bell, there are two or three cycle-lamps in the gun-room. You used to be a pretty fearless climber. What do you say to a hunt round for an hour or two, while the house is quiet?"

Bell assented, eagerly. Chris waited with what patience she could command till daylight began to show faintly and redly in the east. Then she heard the sound of voices on the outside, and Littimer and Bell staggered in, carrying the frame between them.

"Got it!" Littimer exclaimed, with the triumphant exultation of a schoolboy who has successfully looted a rare bird's nest. "We found it half-way down the cliff, hidden in a patch of samphire. And it doesn't seem to be any the worse for the adventure. Now, Mrs. Wisnere, seeing that we have the frame, perhaps you will fulfil your promise of convincing me, once and for all, that yonder Rembrandt cannot possibly belong to me?"

"I am going to do so," Chris said, quietly. "You told me you had to cut the margin of your print by an inch or so round to fit the quaint old frame. So far as I can see, the print before you is intact. Now, if it is too large for the frame—"

Littimer nodded, eagerly. Bell fitted the dingy paper to the back of the frame and smiled. There was an inch or more to spare all round. Nobody spoke for a moment.

"You could make it smaller, but you couldn't make it bigger," Littimer said. "Bell, when I have sufficiently recovered, I'll make a humble and abject apology to you. And now, wise woman from the West, what is the next act in the play?"

CHAPTER XXXIV.

The Puzzling of Henson.

Chris smiled with the air of one who is perfectly satisfied with her work.

"For the present I fancy we have done enough," she said. "I want to go to bed now, and I want you both to do the same. Also, I shall be glad if you will come down in the morning as if nothing had happened. Tell Reginald Henson, casually, that you have been convinced that you have done Dr. Bell a grave injustice, and give no kind of particulars. And please treat Mr. Henson in the same fashion as before. There is only one other thing."

"Name it, and it is yours," Littimer cried.

"We'll cut the margin off that print, or, at any rate, turn the margin down, fit it into the frame, and hang it up, as if nothing had happened."

Littimer looked at Chris with a puzzled expression for a moment, and then his features relaxed into a satyr-like grin.

"Capital!" he said. "I quite understand what you mean. And I must be there to see, eh?—yes, I must be there to see. I would not miss it for strawberry leaves!"

The thing was done, and the picture restored to its place. Bell drew Chris aside for a moment.

"Do you rise early in the morning?" he asked, meaningly.

"Always," Chris replied, demurely. "I find the terrace charming before breakfast. Good-night."

Bell was down betimes, despite the fact that it was daylight before he was in bed. Along the terrace looking over the cliffs Chris was already walking, great cluster of red and yellow roses in her hand. She looked as fresh and bright as if she and excitement were strangers. All the same, she seemed to avoid Bell's eyes.

"Isn't it lovely here?" she exclaimed. "And these roses with the dew still upon them. Well, Dr. Bell, have you made fresh discoveries?"

"I have discovered that Henson is going to take his breakfast in bed," Bell said, gravely. "Also, that he requires a valet at half-past ten. At that time I hope to be in the corridor with Lord Littimer and yourself. Also, I have made a further discovery."

"And what is that, Dr. Bell?"

"That you and I have met before—once before when I attended you in a kind of official capacity, and when I behaved in a distinctly discreditable professional manner. Dr. Walker was present. Dr Walker seems to have been singularly short-sighted."

Th eroses fell from Chris's hands on the path. Her face had grown very pale, indeed; there was a frightened, appealing look in her eyes.

"Dr. Bell," she gasped, "do you suppose that anybody else knows—Henson, for instance? And I imagined that I had utterly deceived him!"

Bell smiled, meaningly.

"I don't think you need have the slightest anxiety on that score," he said. "You see, Henson is comfortably assured that you are dead and buried. Whereas, I know all about it. Fortunately for me, I became mixed up in this strange business in behalf of my friend, David Steel; indeed, but for Steel, I should probably have given you away to our friend Walker."

"But, surely, you guessed that—"

"Not for the moment. You see, it was only a few minutes before that a flood of interesting light had been let in upon Henson's character by your sister to me, and my first idea was that Henson was poisoning you for some purpose of his own. Subsequently Steel told me all about that side of the story on our way back to Brighton."

"But how did you penetrate my disguise?"

"My dear young lady, I have not penetrated your disguise. Your disguise is perfect—so quaint and daringly original—and would deceive even Henson's eyes. I guessed who you were directly I found that you were taking a philanthropic interest in our friend. It came to be by a kind of intuition, the knack that stood me in such good stead in my professional days. When you said that you had been warned of Henson's coming by telegram, I was certain."

"Then perhaps you guessed that Enid sent me the telegram?"

"That was obvious. Also, it was obvious that Henson brought Frank Littimer along."

"Oh, he did. It was Frank's mission to steal the picture. I confronted him with a revolver, and locked him in one of the bed rooms. It took all my courage and good resolutions to prevent me from betraying myself to the poor fellow."

"Rather cruel of you, wasn't it?"

"Well, yes. But I wanted to make the exposure as complete as possible. When the time comes to strip Reginald Henson of his pretensions and flog him from the family, the more evidence we can pile up the better. But Frank is not bad; he is merely weak, and utterly in the power of that man. If we can only break the bonds Frank will be a powerful factor on our side."

"I dare say. But how was the Rembrandt stolen? Littimer's, I mean."

"It was worked through an accomplice," Chris explained. "It had to be done before you arrived. And there was no better time than night for the operation. I guessed that when Henson drew the fact from me that I liked the terrace after dinner. By a bit of good luck I found the accomplice and himself together in the day; in fact, I forced Reginald's hand, so that he had to introduce me to the man"

"In which case you would know him again?"

"Of course. Presently I am going to show you a little more of the comedy. Well, I was on the terrace pretty late, when I heard dear Reginald down the cliff calling for assistance. He pretended that he had slipped down the cliff and could not get up again. By the aid of a rope that, fortunately, happened to be close at hand, I saved our dear friend's life. I have learned from one of the gardeners just now that Reginald placed the rope there himself—a most effective touch, you must admit."

"Very," Bell said, drily. "But I quite fail to see why—"

"I am coming to that. Don't you see that if anything happened, Reginald could prove that he was not near the house at the time? But just before that I saw his accomplice come up the cliff; indeed, he passed quite close to me on his way to the house Reginald quite overlooked this fact in his heed for his own safety. When I had effected my gallant rescue I heard an owl hoot. Now, there are no owls about here.

"I guessed what it meant—it was a signal of success. Then I went back to the corridor and the Rembrandt was gone. The stays had been cut away At first I was dreadfully upset; but the more I thought of it the more sure I was that it was all for the best."

"But you might have raised an alarm and caught the thief, who—"

"Who would have been promptly disclaimed by Reginald. Let me tell you, sir, that I have the thief and the lost Rembrandt in the hollow of my hands. Before the day is out I shall make good my boast. And there's the breakfast bell."

It looked quite natural, some time later, for the three conspirators to be lounging about the gallery when Henson emerged from his bed room. He appeared bright and smiling, and most of the bandages had been removed from his throat. All the same, he was not pleased to see Bell there; he gazed uneasily at the doctor and from him to Littimer.

"You know, Bell," the latter said, carelessly. "Fact is, there's been a great mistake."

Bell offered his hand heartily. It cost him a huge effort, but the slimy scoundrel had to be fought with his own weapons. Henson shook his hand with the air of a man extending a large and generous meed of forgiveness. He sought in vain to read Bell's eyes, but there was a steady, almost boyish smile in them.

"I indeed rejoice," he said, unctuously. "I indeed rejoice—rejoice—rejoice!"

He repeated the last word helplessly; he seemed to have lost all his backbone and lapsed into a flabby, jellified mass of quivering white humanity. His vacant, fishy eyes were fixed upon the Rembrandt in a kind of dull, sleepy terror

"I'm not well!" he gasped. "Not so strong as I imagined. I'll—I'll go and lie down again. Later on I shall want a dog-cart to drive me to Moreton Wells. I—"

He paused again, looked at the picture, and passed heavily to his room. Littimer smiled.

"Splendid!" he said. "It was worth thousands just to see his face."

"All the same," Chris said, quietly; "all the same, that man is not to leave for Moreton Wells till I've had a clear hour's start of him. Dr. Bell, will you accompany me?"

CHAPTER XXXV.

Chris Has an Idea.

Lord Littimer polished his rarely-used eyeglass carefully, and favored Chris with a long, admiring stare. At the same time he was wondering why the girl should have taken such a vivid interest in Reginald Henson and his doings. For some years past it had been Littimer's whim to hold up Henson to everybody as his successor, as far as the castle went. He liked to see Henson's modest smirk and beautiful self-abasement, for in sooth his lordship had a pretty contempt for the man who hoped to succeed him. But the will, made some time ago, by Littimer, would have come as a painful shock to the philanthropist.

"It is a pretty tangle, as it stands," he said "Miss Lee, let me compliment you upon your astuteness in the matter. Only don't tell me you schemed your way here, and that you are a lady detective. I read a good many novels, and I don't like them."

"You may be easy on that score," Chris laughed. "I am not a lady detective. All the same, I have defeated Mr. Reginald Henson."

"You think he is at the bottom of the mystery of the other Rembrandt?"

"I am certain of it; unless you like to believe in the truth of his charming scheme to give you a lesson, as he called it. As a matter of fact, Mr. Henson discovered the existence of the other print; he discovered that Dr. Bell possessed it—the rest I leave to your own astuteness. You saw his face just now?"

"Oh, yes. It was a fine study in emotions. If you could find the other picture—"

"I hope to restore it to you before the day has passed."

Littimer applauded, gently. He was charmed, he said, with the whole comedy. The first two acts had been a brilliant success. If the third was only as good, he would regard Miss Lee as his benefactor forever. It was not often that anybody intellectually amused him: in fact, he must add Miss Lee to his collection.

"Then you must play a part yourself," Chris said, gaily. "I am going into Moreton Wells, and Dr. Bell accompanies me. Mr. Henson is not to know that we have gone, and he is not to leave the house for a good hour or so, after our departure. What I want is a fair start and the privilege of bringing a guest home to dinner."

"Vague, mysterious and alluring," Littimer said. "Bring the guest, by all means. I will pledge my diplomacy that you have a long start. Really, I don't know when I have enjoyed myself so much. You shall have the big wagonette for your journey."

"And join it beyond the lodge gates," Chris said, thoughtfully. "Dr. Bell, you shall stroll through the park, casually; I will follow, as casually, later on."

A little later Henson emerged from his room, dressed, evidently, for a journey. He looked flabby and worried; there was an expression very like fear in his eyes. The corridor was deserted as he passed the place where the Rembrandt hung. He paused before the picture in a hesitating, fascinated way. His feet seemed to pull up before it involuntarily.

"What does it mean?" he muttered. "What in the name of fate has happened? Is it possible that Merritt could have played me a trick like that; he would never have dared. Besides, he has too much to gain by following my instructions. I fancy—"

Henson slipped up to the picture as a sudden idea came to him. If the picture had not been removed at all the stays would still be intact. And if they were intact, Merritt was likely to have a bad quarter of an hour later on. It would be proof that—

But the stays were not intact. The heads had been shaved off with some cutting instrument; and half of the stays gleamed like silver in the morning light. And yet, the Rembrandt was there. The more Henson dwelt upon it the more he was puzzled. He began to wonder whether some deep trap was being laid for him.

But, no; he had seen no signs of it. In some way or another Bell had managed to ingratiate himself with Littimer again, but not necessarily for long, Henson told himself, with a vicious grin. Nor was Littimer the kind of man who ever troubled himself to restrain his feelings. If he had got to the bottom of the whole business he would have had Henson kicked out of the house without delay.

But Littimer suspected nothing. His greeting just now showed that Bell suspected nothing, because he had shaken hands in the heartiest manner possible. And as for Miss Lee, she was no more than a smart Yankee girl, and absolutely an outsider.

Still, it was dreadfully puzzling. And it was not nice to be puzzled at a time when the arch-conspirator ought to know every move of the game. Therefore, it became necessary to go into Moreton Wells and see Merritt without delay. As Henson crossed the hall the cheerful voice of Littimer hailed him.

"Reginald," he said, "I want your assistance and advice."

With a muttered curse, Henson entered the library. Littimer was seated at a table with a cigarette in his mouth, his brows drawn over a mass of papers.

"Sit down and have a cigar," he said. "The fact is, I am setting my affairs in order—I am going to make a fresh will. If you hadn't come down to-night I should probably have sent for you. Now, take my bank book and check those figures."

"Shall we be long?" Henson asked, anxiously.

Littimer tartly hoped that that Henson could spare him an hour. It was not usual, he said, for a testator to be refused assistance from the chief benefactor under his will. Henson apologized with a sickly smile. He had important business of a philanthropic kind in Moreton Wells, but he had no doubt that it could wait for an hour. And then, for the best part of the morning he sat, fuming politely, while Littimer chattered in the most amiable fashion. Henson had rarely seen him in a better mood. It was quite obvious that he suspected nothing. Meanwhile Chris and Bell were bowling along towards Moreton Wells. They sat well back in the roomy wagonette, so that the servants could not hear them. Chris regarded Bell with a brilliant smile on her face.

"Confess," she said, "confess that you are consumed with curiosity."

"It would be just as well to acknowledge it at once," Bell admitted. "In the happy old days, your sister Enid always said that you were the clever and audacious one of the family. She said you would do or dare anything."

"I used to imagine so," Chris said, more quietly. "But the life of the last few years tried one's nerves terribly. Still, the change has done me a deal of good—the change and the knowledge that Reginald Henson regards me as dead. But you want to know how I am going to get the Rembrandt?"

"That is what is consuming me at present," Bell said.

"Well, we are going to see the man who has it," Chris explained, coolly. "I have his address in Moreton Wells at the present moment, and for the rest he is called the Rev. James Merritt. Between ourselves, he is no more a reverend than you are."

"And if the gentleman is shy, or refuses to see us?"

"Then he will be arrested on a charge of theft."

"My dear young lady, before you can get a warrant for that kind of thing you have to prove the theft, you have to swear an information to the effect that you believe the property is in the possession of the thief, and that is not easy."

"There is nothing easier. I am prepared to swear that cheerfully."

"That you actually know that the property is in the possession of the thief?"

"Certainly I do. I saw him put it in his pocket."

Bell looked at the speaker with blank surprise. If such was the fact, then Chris's present statement was exactly opposed to all that she had said before. She sat opposite to Bell, with a little gleam of mischief in her lovely eyes.

"You saw that man steal the Rembrandt?" Bell gasped.

"Certainly not. But I did see him steal my big diamond star and put it in his pocket. And I can swear an information on that."

"I see that you have something interesting to tell me," Bell said.

"Oh, indeed, I have. We will hark back now to the night before last, when Reginald Henson made his personal attempt to obtain the Rembrandt, and then played the trick upon you that was so very near to being a brilliant success."

"It would have been but for you," Bell murmured.

"Well, really, I am inclined to think so. And perhaps Lord Littimer would have given you in custody on a charge of theft. If he had done so, it would have gone hard with you to prove your innocence. But I am wandering from the point. Henson failed. But he was going to try again. I watched him carefully yesterday morning, and managed to see his letters and telegrams. Then I found that he had telegraphed to James Merritt, whose address in Moreton Wells I had carefully noted down. It did not require much intellect to grasp the fact that Merritt was to be the accomplice in the new effort to steal the picture. Mr. Merritt came over and saw his chief, with whom he had a long conversation in the grounds. I also forced myself on Mr. Merritt's notice.

"He was introduced to me as a brand plucked from the burning, a converted thief, who had taken orders of some kind. He is a sorry-looking scoundrel, and I took particular note of him, and more especially, his horribly-smashed thumb."

"The what?" exclaimed Bell. "A thumb like a snake's head, with a little pink nail on it?"

"The same. Do you happen to have met him?"

"We met on our way here," Bell said, drily. "The rascal sent the dog-cart away from the station, so that I should be compelled to walk home and be attacked on the road. But I half-expected something of the kind, and was ready for him. And he was the man with the thumb. I should have told you all this before, but I had forgotten it in watching your fascinating diplomacy. When the attack was defeated the rascal bolted in the direction of the cliffs. Of course, he was off to tell Henson of the failure of the scheme and to go on with the plot for getting the other picture. If he had stolen my Rembrandt then, the other would have remained. I couldn't have turned up with a cock-and-bull story of having started with the picture and being robbed of it by a perfect stranger in the road. But I am interrupting you."

"Well, I marked that thumb carefully. I have already told you that the thief passed me on his way to the house when he came up the cliff. I was leaning over the terrace when I saw him emerge into a band of light caused by the big arc in the castle tower. I forgot that I was in the deep shadow and that he could not possibly see me. I jerked my head back suddenly, and my diamond star fell out and dropped almost at the feet of the intruder. Then he saw it, chuckled over it—placed it in his pocket. I was going to call out, but I didn't. I had a sudden idea, Dr. Bell—an idea that amounted almost to an inspiration."

Chris paused for a moment, and her eyes sparkled. Bell was watching her with the deepest interest and admiration.

Why He Changed His Mind.

"I tell you, sir, civil service is a great thing."

The man addressed looked astonished.

"Coming from any one but you, that remark would not greatly surprise me," he said. 'You didn't think so when I last saw you."

"No, I didn't."

"You considered civil service little short of a civic curse."

"That's right; but then I was on the outside and trying to get in; while now I am on the inside and trying to stay in. It makes a great difference."—Brooklyn Eagle.

Early Literary Signs.

"Yes," said the old man, "this here boy is cut out fer one o' them literary fellers."

"Sure of it?"

"Plumb shore."

"Well, how does it affect him?"

"Well, in the fust place, the hair on his head is as long as a hamestring; he's fond o' fried singin' birds; would ruther write his name in the sand than plow a mule in it; don't know the value of a dollar, an' eats at the table like he thought every meal wuz a-goin' to be the last!"—Atlanta Constitution.

Family Pride.

"No, we hasn't named dat chile yet," said Aunt Jenny. "But I reckons we'll call 'im Wash'n't'n-Linkum-Gyafiel' Thompson."

"Why don't you call him something simple and straightforward, like John or William?"

Out on a Foul.

"You have asked me to be your wife," said the wealthy 'maiden lady.' "Before I answer you, please tell me one thing. Are you in favor of woman suffrage?"

"I am," he answered, thinking thus to win her.

"Then I cannot be yours," she said. "My husband must regard me not only as his equal, but as a tender child whom he has taken to love and to cherish."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Was a Freebooter.

"Let me see," said old Gotrox to young Mainchantz, who had just asked for his daughter's hand, "didn't I overhear you referring to me the other night as 'an old pirate?'"

She Matched His Phrase.

Mitigating Circumstances.

"I should think," said the lady to the big, husky specimen of humanity who had come for the clothes, "that you would be ashamed to let your wife take in washing."

"I reckon 'tis kinder hard on the old woman," replied the man, who was too heavy for light work and too light for heavy work, "an' I wouldn't let her do it but for one thing."

"And what is that?" asked the lady.

"I've got ter have somethin' ter eat an' wear," answered the victim of circumstances.—Chicago News.

At An Afternoon Tea.

The only daughter of the miner from the West, who had been a day-laborer before he made his millions, was pouring tea this afternoon.

An Eastern exotic in spats, knowing the value of money in his business, had asked for an introduction. He was charmed by the accomplished manner in which she asked him if he would have a cup of tea, and bowed low to say that he would be only too happy.

"Will you take sugar in your'n?" she asked, sweetly.

Then, for the first time, he experienced the influence of her lineage.—Baltimore Sun.

What a Good Name Does.

Chicago, Ill., Aug. 11th.—Mr. Vahlberg of 223 South Peoria St., this city, had for years been an invalid with liver complaint and kidney trouble, which was fast hastening him to the grave. The doctors gave him up, and the neighbors all declared he could not live.

His brother came from Minneapolis to see him before he died, and inquired if he had tried Dodd's Kidney Pills.

On being told that this remedy had not been used, he at once went and bought a box, feeling satisfied from what he knew of Dodd's Kidney Pills and the noble work they had been doing in Minnesota, that they would save his brother's life.

The first two days Mr. Vahlberg seemed to grow worse, but after that he gradually improved under the treatment, and was soon restored to complete good health.

Shake Hands With Fate

'Tis a sad old world, and a bad old world,
It is scarce worth while at all;
Its sorrows cling and its friendships sting,
And even its joys will pall.
But dear is life for all its strife,
And love is better than hate—
You'll find a grace in the surliest face
If you just shake hands with fate.

With light in your glance and right in your glance,
And your lips in a curve to the sky;
A spring in your walk and a ring in your talk,
Sure, hope will not pass you by.
The path that you will winds over a hill,
But it leads to an open gate;
So trill you a song to lure love along,
And just shake hands with fate.

'Tis in yourself is the demon elf,
'Tis in yourself is God;
And you'll never stray from yourself away—
God's light or the devil's prod.
Whatever your mind you'll meet in kind,
And what is yourself create:
The world will view what is really you—
Therefore, shake hands with fate!

The Flight of the Fearless.

BY HENRY DAVIS MIDDLETON.

(Copyright, 1902, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

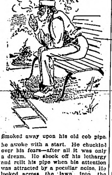
Bob Brown, commonly known among the inhabitants of Ebonville as "Uncle Bob," was considered fearless. No one was skeptical regarding his fearlessness nor dared harbor the least suspicion as to his being superstitious. If, like most of his dusky brethren, he "ruther not" begin a job on a Friday, the invariable cause was physical incapacity rather than superstitious fear. If, perchance, during his nocturnal perambulations myriad phantoms darted about his pathway as he neared the village cemetery, he would approach the hideous spectre, and discovering it to be only an inanimate illusion, he would pass unperturbed on his homeward way, always attributing sundry bruises and scars visible upon various portions of his anatomy at the time of these escapades, to his bad sight and his haste to reach home.

It was not surprising, then, that when the new hospital desired a strong orderly for night duty in the two male wards, he alone volunteered to accept the position, while the timidity of his fellows permitted them only to pass the frowning institution at a safe distance and with much trepidation.

When the first month ended "Uncle Bob" was pretty well initiated into the mysteries of the hospital. For weeks he had astonished his dusky auditors with wild and weird stories of his triumphs in the wards, operating room and morgue of the institution; never failing to impress them with the fact that it would be impossible to run the institution without his services. He was indeed the most fearless man in Ebonville, and was regarded by his peers with "superstitious reverence."

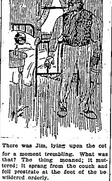
* * * * * *

It was midnight. The stillness of the hour was only broken by the soft tread of the nurses on their periodical rounds of the wards. Uncle Bob, seated upon bench on the lawn, just outside the door of the basement ward, occupied by the colored male patients, smoked away upon his old cob pipe, and hoped for the approach of the morning when he should be off duty. He fell asleep. He dreamed. He saw visions. Yes, there they were—all the patients, both white and black, who had died since his incumbency. They were after him—he fled. They pursued him—he sought refuge under the front steps of his home. They followed menacingly. There was no escape. Oh, there was Jim, wicked Jim, now a black demon! He had died muttering curses and imprecations. He was leading the other demons. His bloodshot eyes glared just as they had in his dying moments; the bandage was about his head, the white gown thrown loosely about his emaciated form. They sought to kill the orderly. Fire issued from their mouths, smoke from their nostrils. He shouted for help—



Smoked away upon his old cob pipe.

he awoke with a start. He chuckled over his fears—after all it was only a dream. He shook off his lethargy and relit his pipe when his attention was attracted by a peculiar noise. He looked across the lawn into the pitch darkness of the night whence the strange sound came. My! there were the same grotesque figures he had seen in his dream. He was not afraid, but as it was getting a little chilly he decided to withdraw—which he did unceremoniously, falling over the bench in his haste. He closed and bolted the hall door and went into the basement ward. He glanced up and down the double rows of white cots, scarcely visible in the darkened place. His eyes rested upon the cot upon which wicked Jim had died—yes, there was Jim, lying upon the cot—no, impossible, for it had not been occupied since his death. He approached it cautiously; not a sound was emitted. He turned on the nearest light—yes, it was wicked Jim's ghost! The fearless orderly stood for a moment trembling. What was that? The thing moaned; it muttered; it sprang from the couch and fell prostrate at the feet of the bewildered orderly.



There was Jim, lying upon the cot

A broken sash and a wrecked pane, of the picket fence left in his wake, gave practical evidence of the brave orderly's senile agility and an inkling of his sprinting qualities.

Wicked Jim's twin brother, delirious of fever, lost to the hospital a fearless, valuable "ord'ly," whose back pay still awaits his return, and who, like the hospital, is running yet, in spite of his contrary predictions.

When the Goat Swore.

"Did you ever hear a goat swear?" asked Gen. Parker of New Jersey. He represents, by the way, the district in which the rifle range at Sea Girt is situated.

"Over at the rifle range one day,' said Gen. Parker, "there was a team from Georgia, which had with them a colored boy and a goat as mascots. The boy was dressed in brilliant uniform and the goat had a fuzzy tail. Along came a rifleman who belonged to a rival team.

"'I'll give you a nickel for one of your buttons,' he said to the boy, and the trade was made. Then the rifleman, plucking some hairs from the goat's tail, rubbed them on the button. 'Now,' he said, 'I have hoodooed your team. You will never win the Hilton trophy.'

"The colored boy burst into tears and the goat said 'D-a-a-m-n' just as plainly as anything you ever heard in your life."—Washington Post.

Kaiser's Costly Cannon.

The German emperor takes great pride in a cannon of solid gold, inlaid with precious stones, which he possesses. Its value purely as a piece of jewelry is set at $25,000, and a special guard watches over it. The trustees of the Hamburg museum, who had cherished it for two centuries, gave it to the German government some time ago.

Would Dispense With Locks.

Charles De Lesseps is quoted by Figaro as saying that he believes that the Americans will decide to complete the Panama canal without locks and that it may be opened in six years' time. To dispense with locks would add greatly to the cost, but it would be a vast saving in time and trouble after the canal is opened.

Many are the pretexts resorted to by men anxious to escape jury service. An unwilling juror, when called upon to serve in trial term, Part Four, of the supreme court, this week, said:

"Your honor, I must ask to be excused. I do not approve of the injustice of the justice administered in these courts."

"Are you an Anarchist?" inquired the trial justice.

"No; but I do not believe in some of the laws of this state. They are outrageous, there is too much injustice—"

"That will do," exclaimed the justice, sternly. "You are a disgrace to citizenship. You are unfit for service. You are excused."

One of the women passengers, who had been gushing considerably during the voyage, ran up to Risk and exclaimed:

TO YOUNG LADIES.

From the Treasurer of the Young People's Christian Temperance Association, Elizabeth Caine, Fond du Lac, Wis.

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—I want to tell you and all the young ladies of the country, how grateful I am to you for all the benefits I have received from using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I suffered for eight months from suppressed menstruation, and it effected my entire system until I became weak and debilitated, and at times felt that I had a hundred aches in as many places. I only used the Compound for a few weeks, but it wrought a change in me which I felt from the very beginning. I have been very regular since, have no pains, and find that my entire body is as if it was renewed. I gladly recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to everybody."—Miss Elizabeth Caine, 69 W. Division St., Fond du Lac, Wis.—$5000 forfeit if above testimonial is not genuine.

At such a time the greatest aid to nature is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It prepares the young system for the coming change, and is the surest reliance for woman's ills of every nature.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all young women who are ill to write her for free advice. Address Lynn, Mass.

MISS ELIZABETH CAINE.

Why Syrup of Figs is the best family laxative

It is pure.
It is gentle.
It is pleasant.
It is efficacious.
It is not expensive.
It is good for children.
It is excellent for ladies.
It is convenient for business men.
It is perfectly safe under all circumstances.
It is used by millions of families the world over.
It stands highest, as a laxative, with physicians.
If you use it you have the best laxative the world produces.

Because

Its component parts are all wholesome.
It acts gently without unpleasant after-effects.
It is wholly free from objectionable substances.

It contains the laxative principles of plants.
It contains the carminative principles of plants.
It contains wholesome aromatic liquids which are agreeable and refreshing to the taste.

All are pure.
All are delicately blended.
All are skillfully and scientifically compounded.

Its value is due to our method of manufacture and to the originality and simplicity of the combination.

POLITICAL NOTES.

Ezra G. Valentine, candidate for the Republican nomination for congressman, spent Thursday, Friday and Saturday of last week in Red Lake county. Mr. Valentine met many friends in Thief River Falls who assured him their hearty support. In St. Hilaire his reception was also cordial, and many of the active Republican workers of that town and laboring men pledged their support. At Red Lake Falls over two-thirds of the party leaders announced themselves for Valentine, and promised to take off their coats and work for him until election day. The country around Red Lake Falls will also be strong for Mr. Valentine. Many of the leading French Republicans from the various townships around there, whom the met, assured him their support. In fact Mr. Valentine has friends in every township in this county, and in the three cities, which casts the bulk of the Republican vote, he is unusually strong.

As the day of the primary election approaches it becomes more evident that Ezra G. Valentine will easily be the winner. He will carry the counties of Wilkin, Otter Tail, Becker and Red Lake. Steenerson will carry Polk, Beltrami and Roseau, and in all three of these counties Mr. Valentine will be second, in fact, owing to local matter, it is predicted that Valentine will carry Roseau county by some of the leaders up there. Grindeland will carry Marshall, Norman and Kitson. The last named county, however, is claimed by the Steenerson people, and Valentine also has some good friends up there. In Marshall county Valentine will take second place and in Norman county Valentine and Steenerson will be about tie for second place.

Clay county is the home of Mr. Comstook and has all the time been conceded to him. Mr. Comstock has done so little active work, and stands so little show of being successful that reports from that county indicate that the vote there will be badly split up, and if Comstock does not enter the field, Valentine will carry the county.

Mr. Valentine's support is not confined to any particular locality. He is strong all over the district, and he has put up such an honorable campaign that he has the respect and friendship of the his opponents.

The Press says that a shrewd man in political affairs who resides upon the East Side says that Grindeland will carry Thief River Falls. It will be remembered that last fall the Press quoted several shrewd men to the effect that F. Hibner would be elected municipal judge by a large majority, and out of a total vote of about 500, Mr. Hibner received but 35. For the benefit of Mr. Grindeland we hope the Press interviewed a shrewder man this time.

Sometime ago Nels K. Nelson, who is working for Andrew Grindeland in the eastern part of Marshall county, wrote a communication which was published in the Press to the effect that everyone he met was for Grindefand. C. M. Peterson, a prominent farmer living in Germantown, takes exception to this and writes the News as follows:

"If Nelson can't find anybody but Grindeland men out here, as he claims in the Press, it leads me to believe that he goes only to those whom he knows to be for Grindeland or else the farmers are deceiving him."

Mr. Peterson also tells why Mr Nelson is for Grindeland. But that is another story.

The main supporters of Mr. Valentine are farmers, and he proposes to do what he can to better their condition when he gets to congress. One of the matters which will receive his attention will be the mail service in the rural districts, and he proposes to better it in every possible way. When he gets to Washington he wants the farmers living in the different localities in the district to suggest needed changes and to point out wherein the service can be bettered. This is a matter that interests many of the farmers living north of here, and many changes in mail routes have already been suggested.

We are willing to bet our best job font against a busted shooting stick that the "shrewd man in affairs political" who furnishes the republican congressional prophecis to the Press is not a republican at all and has not been in Red Lake County long enough to know anything about "political affairs" in this vicinity. We will further gamble that he has yet to cast his first vote here.

The Advocate, published by Brenden and Lofgren at Pelan, Kitson county, says that Ezra G. Valentine is best man in the district, and will give the other boys a long run for the nomination in that section.

Sheriff Sampson was in the city the first of the week. Mr. Sampson is a candidate for re-nomination on the Republican ticket, and from all accounts is going to have no trouble to get the nomination.

As will be noticed by an announcement in another column, Thomas A. Crompe is the candidate for the Republican nomination for register of deeds. Mr. Crompe is an active and energetic young man, well qualified for the position and will make a good run.

W. J Kelley has filed as a candidate for the Democratic candidate for sheriff, and is contested by Hank Draper. Both reside in this city.

N. W. Tarrant has filed as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for judge of probate. Red Lake Falls politicans succeeded in bringing him out and have promised their support. It now remains to be seen whether or not they will act square.

A MAN SHOT

Near One of the Sporting Houses West of Depot.

Sade Dein, a pedlar, was shot in the back Monday afternoon on the street in front of one of the sporting houses west of the depot. Dein, in company with two other pedlars are said to have been driving by the resort much to the annoyance of the inmates who were engaged practice in shooting at a target with 22 caliber rifles. The inmates claim that if the man was hit by any one of their party it was entirely accidental, while the pedlars claim that it was done intentionally. Upon the advice of County Attorney Grady a warrant was issued for the arrest of all that were at the house—Fred Nolan, George Teeple, Oscar Johnson, Torval Ness, Ettie Demers and Ollie Clark—charging them with the shooting.

Dein is in the hospital on the East Side, and, while the bullet in him cannot be located, the doctors are of the opinion that nothing serious will result, and that he will be able to be about in a few days.

The first preliminary hearing in the case was held yesterday morning, and upon the motion of the county attorney the case was posponed for one week, and the men released upon a bond of $100. There are many conflicting stories regarding the affair, and considerable interest is being taken in the matter.

Under the constitution the railroads do not pay any direct tax on their tracks, cars, engines, depots or any property used by them for railroad purposes. In place of all other taxes, however the railroads pay a tax of three per cent of all their earnings from the operation of their lines within the state This includes all business done beginning and ending in the state, and a just proportion of their earnings on all interstate business passing through, coming into or going out of the state. This three per cent tax last year was about $1,600,000. It is now proposed to make this tax four per cent which would this last year have made it $2,100,000. The vote of the people on this will be absolute and final. No law will be required to carry it into effect and the supreme court has already held that this increase can be made as to all roads organized since Minnesota became a state and Attorney General Douglas holds it has the same power as to the roads organized while Minnesota was a territory. In any event this vote will simply show if the people want this railroad tax increased; any question to the right to increase it as to a part of the roads, the courts can settle, It is "up to the people".

POLITICAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

I hereby announce to the voters of Red Lake county that I will be a candidate for the republican nomination for register of deeds for Red Lake county, at the primary election to be held Sept. 16, 1902, and respectfully solicit your votes for the same.

DISMISSED.

The Case of the State Against Nolan, Teeple, Johnson and Ness.

The case of the state against Fred Nolan, George Teeple, Oscar Johnson and Torval Ness, charged with shooting Sade Dein, an Arabian pedlar, in the back was tried yesterday before Judge Tarrant. The testimony of the complaining witnesses was that Oscar Johnson was the person who shot him, while all the witnesses for the defense said that Johnson did not have a gun in his hands at the time. They also testified that Ettie Demers and Ollie Clark, the two girls connected with the affair, and who could not be produced, each had guns, but they were not sure as to Nolan.

Judge Tarrant held that there was not sufficient evidence to hold the men on the charge and dismissed them.

NO OBJECTION

Indians Are Willing to Have Treaty Amended.

Mayor Kratka returned from his trip to the Red Lake Agency last week where he met most of the chiefs and Indians. He reports that they are all willing that an amendment be made to the treaty for the cession of the 11 townships, which will provide for the Indians receiving their payment for the lands as it is paid by the settlers, Mr. Kratka has notified Maj. McLaughlin and it is expected that he will soon make arrangements to come here and fix the matter up with the Indians.

SUCCESSFUL

The Shoot of the Gun Club Last Week.

The shoot held by the Thief River Falls Gun Club last week was a success in every way There was a large number present from Crookston and Warren, and some very high scores were made. Stone took the prize for highest average shooting, while Spurgeon was second and Staples was third. Nason made the lowest average and was followed by Farrell and Dorbin.

HAIL STORM

Swept portion of Southern Red Lake County.

A severe hail storm swept over the southern part of this county Sunday evening and did considerable damage. The hail fell with a roar that was deafening and that could be heard by people living at a distance of three miles. The crops that were not in the hail belt were laid flat wherever the growth was heavy, and much of it will not likely come up so that a harvester will cut it.

That portion of the country visited by hail comprises the eastern part of Gentilly, Louisville Lake Pleasant, Red Lake Falls Gervais, Terrebonne and Poplar River. These towns are all in Red Lake county except the first named. They did not all get the force of the storm, but over a considerable portion the loss was partial, and in some cases the crops over a large area are totally ruined. The worst destruction is in Lake Pleasant, Red Lake Falls and Terrebonne. In addition to the loss of crops several barns were struck by lightning and damaged and some stock killed. In Red Lake Falls the loss from breakage of window glass was considerale, and the west exposures suffered, the breakage being total on that side of some of the buildings. Coming as it does with the harvest just beginning the loss seems doubly severe. Over a large portion of the district the crop was excellent and the loss will be severe.

GREAT ALARM AT HOPKINS.

Community Is Threatened With a Quarantine.

Minneapolis, Aug. 15. — Secretary Bracken and other representatives of the state board of health are greatly exercised over the discovery of a singular, most alarming and almost unexplainable condition of things at Hopkins, a station on the Minneapolis & St. Louis road about six miles west of Minneapolis. Dr. Catherine A. Burns, health commissioner of Hopkins, claims to have discovered twenty-seven cases of scarlet fever in five dwellings. It is said that this unfortunate condition is attributable to the incompetence of physicians of that place. It is also reported that the disease has been communicated to a considerable number of people in Minneapolis. The state board of health is acting upon information furnished by Dr. Burns. The latter maintains with absolute positiveness that it is scarlet fever. The local physicians, it appears, do not agree with this diagnosis of the cases. Dr. Bracken seems disposed to accept Dr. Burns' diagnosis. The state board will probably establish a close quarantine.

SLEUTHS CAN'T TELL.

Undecided Whether the Burlington Robbers Are in Custody.

Waseca, Minn., Aug. 15.—B. Buckley of Galesburg, Ill., a secret service man, arrived here to examine the three alleged desperadoes who are in jail here, and to assist in following up clues. The Burlington road has two detectives here also. Buckley seems to know John Price, the man who shot at Sheriff Collins, but is reticent and has not said whether he believes him connected with the Burlington hold-up. The other men give the names of Michael Tobin and John McDonald. Tobin says his father lives in Minneapolis. This is disputed by the Minneapolis Tobins, but in any event he seems to know a good deal about the city and its environs. J. Garrow, a fisherman of Savanna, Ill., who asserts that he saw the train robbers before the hold-up, says the men in custody are not the ones wanted. Buckley, the secret service agent, contends that Garrow did not see the men plainly enough to identify them, and is awaiting the arrival of others who, he says, can give more light than Garrow. All the clues will be followed up and something may develop in a day or so.

ARMY OF PHILIPPINES.

Two Thousand Delegates Attend Reunion at Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Council Bluffs, Iowa, Aug. 15. — The third annual reunion of the society of the army of the Philippines began in this city yesterday with nearly 2,000 delegates and veterans in attendance. After a brief reception early in the day the society was called to order in Arcanum hall by the president, Gen. Irving Hall. Following the address of Gen. Hall, routine business was taken up, the session lasting a greater part of the afternoon. Last night a reception was held at Lake Manawa. There was an address of welcome by Gov. Cummins of Iowa and other addresses by Gov. Savage of Nebraska and Gen. Hale.

GO INTO A TRUST

MAKERS OF THRESHING MACHINES ARE GETTING TOGETHER.

ARE PLANNING A COMBINATION

WILL FOLLOW LEAD OF THE MANUFACTURERS OF HARVESTERS.

ALL-EMBRACING IN ITS FIELD

SYSTEMATIC EFFORT WILL BE MADE TO PROMOTE FOREIGN MARKET.

Chicago, Aug. 17.—If plans now being made are carried out, threshing machines will be a trust commodity. With the harvester machines already in a trust, the indications are that the grain of this country will be gathered and threshed next season with machines made by trusts.

Half a dozen representative threshing and separator apparatus manufacturers of this country met in Chicago a few days ago for the purpose, it is said, of discussing prices for next year. Those familiar with the trade, however, assert that such a purpose is at varience with custom, as that is the busiest time of the year.

Among the plants said to be destined for the trust are the J. I. Case Threshing Machine Company of Racine, Wis.; Nichols & Shepard Threshing Machine company, Battle Creek, Mich.; Reeves & Co., Columbus, Ind., and the Minneapolis Threshing Machine Company of Minneapolis and Hopkins, Minn. Competition has in the last few years cut down the profits of the business. The result is that the leaders are that will be all-embracing in its field. With the growing market in Siberia still greater returns in the future are looked for if the cutting of prices and competition can be stopped.

Another meeting will be held, probably in Chicago, next week, when the combination will likely be launched. In discussing plans for the organization it is said that the proposed capitalization will be $75,000,000.

The intention may be to consolidate the threshing machine industry with the harvesting machine trust to control all the valuable inventions that have made it possible to farm the great fields of the West and Siberia and South America.

The foreign markets for farming machinery are now controlled by American manufacturers, but with the two greatest industries in that line in a combination or combinations the intention is said to be a systematic and concerted effort to promote the foreign market by educating the tillers of the soil in various countries to the use of labor-saving devices.

WOMAN TARRED AND FEATHERED.

Second Coat for Woman Suspected of Making Love to Dead Sister's Husband.

Rock Falls, Ill., Aug. 17.—Mrs Florence Wolfe of Mount Morris, who a few weeks ago was tarred and feathered on suspicion of being too familiar with the husband of her dead sister while the body lay on its bier, was last evening again treated with a coat of the unpleasant material. Mrs. Wolfe hurriedly left the town when she received the first coat, but returned. Her appearance enraged the citizens and they surrounded her house and bombarded it with rocks and stones and several shots were fired. Every window was broken and she was finally driven from the house. She was captured and taken to the edge of the city, close to the cemetery where her dead sister was buried, and there the tar and feathers were applied. With the taunts and jeers of the population she was driven from the city. The cause of all her unpleasantness arose from the alleged report that she made love to the husband of her dead sister while the body lay in another room.

ACTOR IN TRAGEDY.

F. H. Dennis Drinks Carbolic Acid and Dies.

Peoria, Ill., Aug. 17. — F. H. Dennis, an actor, or musician traveling with a troupe, committed suicide by drinking carbolic acid. His age is about thirty-five years. Papers in his pockets show him to be a probable resident of Chicago or Toledo. He was found along the roadside near the water works pumping station, a hundred feet from the Rock Island tracks.

Charged With Swindling.

Cherokee, Iowa, Aug. 17.—N. P. Jenson was arrested at Aurelia yesterday and placed in jail here, charged with swindling. He represented himself as belonging to the Eureka Stock Food company of Paton, Iowa. He sold stock food and hog cholera remedy among the farmers, took their notes, which were said to be non-negotiable. He then erased the "on" and sold the paper.

Absconder Is Captured.

San Francisco, Aug. 17.—William H. Dillard, the absconding messenger of the customs house here, has been arrested at Vancouver, B. C. Dillard is accused of having issued no less than forty-two froudulent certificates of registration to Chinese in this country and is believed to have realized thousands of dollars.

Babe Drowns in a Tub.

Sleepy Eye, Minn., Aug. 17.—The sixteen-months-old child of Mr. and Mrs. Hans H. Anderson yesterday was drowned by falling into a tub of water at the home of Mrs. Jepple Jenden, eight miles west of this city.

PROFIT FOR THE FARMERS.

Grain Rate Reduction in Effect Within a Week.

St. Paul, Aug. 17.—The reductions in grain rates promised Minnesota and the Dakotas by the Great Northern and Northern Pacific systems will go into effect, President James J. Hill of the Great Northern said last night, within a week.

"We will lower grain rates in the Northwest within a week," Mr. Hill said. "We want the rates to benefit Northwestern farmers, and we want them effective in time to move the immense crop of the Northwest. I cannot say off-hand what the reduction will save the farmers this year, but you may state that it will be a large sum—a very large sum in fact. The reductions will cover the entire Northwest, and other lines than the coast lines will join them. Farmers everywhere will get the benefit."

DUAL LIFE DISCOVERED.

Man, Drowned in Indiana, About to Marry, Had Wife and Family.

Kenosha, Wis., Aug. 17.—The drowning of John T. Bishop of this city at Mishawaka, Ind., last night revealed the fact that Bishop, who was one of the best known men in Kenosha, had been leading a dual life. Bishop had a wife and two children in this county, and, according to reports received from Mishawaka, he was to have been married on next Sunday to a woman at Mishawaka. As Bishop was a son of Hon. I. T. Bishop, and a member of one of the most prominent families in this part of the state, his death under the circumstances has caused a considerable sensation.

NEGRO RAVISHER CAPTURED.

Gives Posse a Hard Fight, Escapes and Is Recaptured.

Lodi, Wis., Aug. 17.—A negro brutally assaulted Anna Zimmerman, daughter of a farmer living about a mile east of the village of Dane Thursday night, and, after leaving her in a senseless condition for several hours, returned to the scene of his crime and confessed to two men who happened to be in the neighborhood. The men failed to capture the negro but immediately informed the father of the girl and a posse was formed. The posse captured the negro, but after a desperate struggle he escaped. Later in the evening he was recaptured and lodged in jail.

TWO BROTHERS DROWNED.

Lose Their Lives in Pike Bay—Accidentally Discovered.

Cass Lake, Minn., Aug. 17. — George and Henry, the young sons of Nic Henry, were drowned in Pike Bay. The whistle at the Scanlon-Gipson planing mill had just blown for the completion of the day's work, and James Allen, an employe of the company, was crossing on some boom sticks when he discovered a straw hat lying on top of the water. He looked in the water, and a short distance from the hat discovered the body of a boy. While searching for the body another child was discovered, lying but a few feet distant in exactly the same position.

MORRIS NOT A CANDIDATE.

Congressman Reiterates His Former Declaration.

Duluth, Minn., Aug. 17.—Page Morris will not be a candidate for the Republican nomination. He was greatly surprised and annoyed to learn that during his absence from the city a general report had been spread to the effect that he would again seek congressional honors as the result of good fortune in a mining property investment.

LIKENS HIMSELF TO DREYFUS.

Capt. Carter Appeals to American Public to Suspend Judgment.

Duluth, Minn., Aug. 17.—Capt. Oberlin M. Carter appeals to the American public to suspend judgment against him and likens himself to Capt. Dreyfus of France in a letter written to his chief counsel, Judge H. G. Stone, who is now in Duluth. Carter asks that his desire be made known through the press to his fellow countrymen.

WORKMEN INJURED.

Floor Falls, Carrying Down Three—One May Die.

Faribault, Minn., Aug. 17.—A fireproof floor which was being built in the upper story of the Minnesota school for the deaf, gave way and dropped three workmen thirty-eight feet. One of them, Warren Smith, is seriously injured internally and may die.

BISMARCK WILL CELEBRATE.

First Train Over the Soo Will Arrive on the 23d.

Bismarck, N. D., Aug. 17.—The first train over the completed extension of the Soo railway will be run Aug. 23. Arrangements are being made by the citizens of Bismarck to celebrate the occasion.

REAPS AS HE SOWED.

Ross, Murderer of Thomas Walsh, Sentenced to Death.

Bottineau, N. D., Aug. 17.—William Ross was yesterday sentenced to death for the killing of Thomas Walsh in Willow City July 5. The date for the execution will be fixed in a few days.

Grade Crossing Accident.

Milwaukee, Aug. 17.—While driving over the Mineral street grade crossing late yesterday afternoon, James McKay was badly hurt, and his nephew, Robert Burkhardt, aged seven, was so badly injured that he died, by being struck by a passenger train.

Escaped From Iowa Jail.

Pocahontas, Iowa, Aug. 17. — Albert Beelow broke jail last night. He was arrested for assault on his fourteen-year-old daughter.

Sheriff Recognizes John Price.

Waseca, Minn., Aug. 17.—Sheriff Bernard Sheridan of Fond du Lac, Wis., positively identifies John Price, one of the three suspects held in jail here as a burglar who robbed an old German farmer near Fond du Lac, on July 5.

Injured by Runaway.

Osceola, Wis., Aug. 17. — Word has reached here that Ralph Henry, who is canvassing for the Chicago Portrait company, had his leg broken below the knee while attempting to stop a runaway team at Howard, S. D.

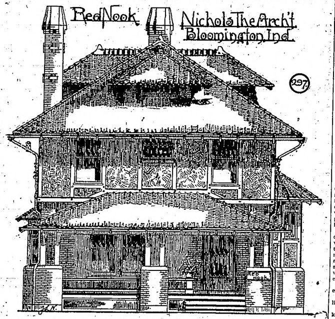
Beautiful Home That Can Be Built for Comparatively Little

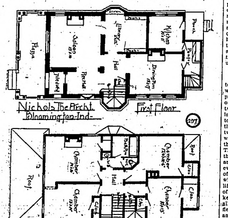
A beautiful home is not necessarily a matter of lavish expenditure of money with the modern principals of imitative art governing the production of art, metal and stone work and with the assistance of the wonderful wood-working machinery we are enabled to reproduce from original designs results that a few years ago would have been thought of only by the wealthy.

Yet you secure the same results, the sublime purity of the designs, the lack of any attempt at undignified ornamentation, the fascinating repose of the simple outline, have a quiet, restful, homelike feeling that at once enraptures us in admiration of the taste and appreciation of the beautiful.

This is a square plan, yet a most beautiful, dignified and chaste elevation. The first story of buff Voman brick in white mortar and buff stone trimmings. The second story, old oak timbered work, with buff cement panels comed. The roof is of red Spanish tile. The hall and three main rooms are finished in mahogany with wood mosaic floors. The walls are burlapped and decorated in oil; divans, book cases, buffets, etc., built in; second story finished in native hard woods.

Plate and art glass, hot water heat and modern plated plumbing. As good as a house can be built, complete outside of hot water heat and plumbing, $3,800.





THIS COIN WAS "CURSED."

Misfortunes That Befell the Persons Who Happened to Own It.

An old resident of Carthage tells a reporter for the Press a strange story of a cursed coin. Among some money turned over to Dick Griffith, treasurer of Jasper county years ago, was a $20 gold piece with a singular design cut in it. The design represented a cross with snakes coiling around it. The "old resident" says that when it was passed across the hand it caused a "peculiar squeamishness" to pass over one.

"Now, the singular part of the whole thing," he continued, "was that every man who held that coin in his hand had a long spell of sickness afterward, and some died. I saw Griffith a year or two later, and he said he had never fully recovered, and never expected to.

"Griffith got interested in that coin when he heard what it had done, and began to trace back its history. He remembered Cal Davis had paid it to him, and asked him where he got it. Davis had got it from a man named Holt, and Holt got it from the guerrilla chief, Sam Hildebrandt.

"Hildebrandt got the coin from a Spaniard in a stage robbery. The Spaniard told him the coin had been cursed by the Pope, as it was part of an American booty captured by pirates in Chinese waters and sent to Rome as a peace offering. The coin was stolen from Rome by a Spaniard, and he, fearing to pass it, gave it to his friend, who was coming to America. Hildebrandt nearly died of fever while carrying it, and Holt died from some peculiar ailment which baffled the doctors.

"What became of the coin I do not know, but every word of this story is as true as anything I ever told."—Carthage (Mo.) Press.

Art and Athletics.

The universally increasing attention now being given, especially in Anglo-Saxon countries, to out-of-door sports and to physical culture is a sign of the best omen. No class can have a greater solicitude for the furtherance of this movement than the artists, for they cannot create beautiful forms without having beautiful forms around them from which to draw inspiration, says a writer in Outing. The art of a nation is a mirror of that nation's ideals, and faithfully reflects their slightest change. The new conception of the value of athletics will add dignity, interest and standing, making it a factor second to none in the development of our civilization. It will be a mighty influence in the creation of a new and superior type of men and women. That women are growing more and more to realize this is evidenced by the athletic tendency of the modern girl. If she will combine therewith an intelligent effort after well-balanced and harmonious development, the results are bound to be satisfying in the extreme.

Decline of German Jews.

A statistical return of the religions professed in the German Empire, based on the census of 1900, has recently been issued. It appears that the number of Roman Catholics has increased in a greater proportion than the number of Protestants, while the increase in Judaism as compared with the Christian professions has been very small. The Protestants numbered 35,231,104 in 1900, as against 31,026,810 in 1890, or an increase of 13.6 per cent; while the Catholics numbered 20,327,913 in 1900, as against 17,674,921 in 1890, or an increase of 15 per cent. The number of professing Jews has only increased from 567,884 to 586,948, which gives a percentage of 3.4. Of every 1,000 persons in the German Empire 625 are Protestants, 361 Catholics, 10 Jews, and 4 of different or undetermined religious creeds.

A Queer Test.

An old lady applied at a registry office for a maid.

"I want a little girl, between eighteen and twenty-two years of age, who is fond of mushrooms."

"Fond of mushrooms?" inquired the agent. "That is something I never inquire about from my applicants. I don't understand."

"Well, I am very fond of mushrooms myself, and there are so many mistakes made. The idea came to me several years ago, and it was a dispensation of Providence that it did, or I should have been killed. I make my maid eat a portion of all mushrooms brought to my house before any are served to me. I always require it," replied the old lady. "I have lost two excellent maids from toadstools during the last five years, and, of course, I could not think of taking the risk of eating mushrooms unless I had a maid to test them."

Cure for Ingrown Nails.

Tardif says that he has been able to cure all cases of ingrowing nail without recourse to the knife. He proceeds as follows: With a flat probe or a match he slips a bit of cotton between the edge of the nail and the inflamed flesh. Another strip of cotton is put along the outer margin of the ulcerated area and the space between these two strips of cotton, and which is occupied by the ulcer, is thickly powdered with nitrate of lead. The whole is covered with cotton and the toe is bandaged. The dressings are repeated the following day, and every day until the incarcerated edge of the nail is plainly visible. Then, with patience, the edge of the nail is lifted away from the flesh and a bit of cotton is introduced under it to keep it up. As it grows it will gradually take its proper position above the flesh, this having meantime shrunk and shriveled by reason of the application of lead nitrate.

GAS IN COAL MINES.

Dangerous Explosive Accumulates in Spite of Greatest Care.

Being reminded of some of his own experiences by the recent disaster in the Cambria mine, Frederick E. Saward of the Coal Trade Journal gives the following account of the phenomena in a gaseous mine.

"I had been invited," said he, "to visit a property which was said to possess a seam of coal of unusual thickness and purity. It was, nevertheless, a notoriously gassy mine, insomuch that the fire boss made regular rounds to test the working places and calk up warning signs if too dangerous vapor was discovered.

"Going down a 300-foot shaft on a platform elevator without sides (simply the guide rods), in company with the fire boss, I walked along the main entry for one-half a mile, viewing the coal by the light of our little tin-cup lamps. Presently, on approaching a visibly cracked roof, my guide said that he would show me what gas was and how it was put out. He held his lamp up near the crevice in the roof and forthwith there was a floating of blue gas along the roof near the crevice, like burning alcohol in a basin of water.

"'We will not let it get ahead of us,' said the guide, and with that he took off his coat and brushed out the flaming gas, driving it away from the crevice. If he had driven it toward the crevice the roof might have come down. As if this were not enough, the guide said: 'I will show you where it is not even safe to go with an ordinary lamp.' He thereupon lit his safety and blew out the other tin-cup lamps. We walked along the entry until we came to a place which led up the face of the coal. Climbing upon that which had been broken down the guide lifted his safety lamp and the blue flame began to dance around the gauze.

"This daily tour of the fire boss no doubt saves many lives, but there is often a quick accumulation in places where he has found nothing dangerous."

HIS PRIDE WAS HURT.

And Frenchman Threatened to Take a Mean Revenge.

A story was told at a recent dinner of a New York literary club which goes back to the time when a certain famous man was governor of Massachusetts. The tale sounds like a revival of a newspaper yarn contemporaneous with its hero. At any rate it is worth retelling.

Along a country road in the north of Maine plodded a French-Canadian with a trained bear, making his way to a county fair. At a cross road he met a long-whiskered yankee driving a mule. They nodded to each other and were continuing on their ways when suddenly the Frenchman pricked up his ears.

"G'long there, Napoleon!" the farmer drawled to his mule.

The Frenchman stopped short and listened again.

"Git ap, Napoleon," called the yankee.

"I say, ma fren," called the Canadian, bringing his bear to a halt, "what for you call zo zhackass Napoleon?"

"That's his name," replied the farmer, indifferently.

"Well, he is no name for a zhackass. Napoleon was a great general."

"So's my mule," replied the other, good-naturedly. "Geddap, Napoleon."

The Frenchman lost patience. "Look 'ere, me fren," he said, "you call zat zhackass Napoleon wance more time, I tell you w'at I do. You see zat black bear? Wall, I poke his one eye out an' call him Ban Butler."—Youth's Companion.

Apples of the Northwest.

An account of how the great northwest has been made to grow most of the winter apples for this country is valuable in connection with the increase in plant values. The early farmers of the vast prairies could find no apple tree hardy enough for the climate. They spent fortunes in nursery stock, and in planting trees, without success. In 1855 Gideon M. Mitchell of Minnesota planted thirty varieties of apple trees and a bushel of seed. In nine years he planted, all told, 9,000 trees. At the end of the tenth year he had left, after the winter's cold, only one tree, a small seedling crab. From that, however, has come the fine apple known in the market as the "Wealthy," a fruit from which the northwest now annually reaps millions of dollars. During these nine long years of planting and failure Mr. Mitchell's friends told him that nowhere in all that region would an apple ever grow, says Success. His success was a triumph in which he must have experienced emotions similar to those of Columbus when, in 1492, he sighted the island of Guanahani.

Two Startling Suggestions.

It is rather startling to find that all the most effusive signs of affection in use to-day are nothing more or less than relics of barbarism—a modified form of attack. Such, at least, is the opinion of "Student" (Oxford), who claims to be an authority on the subject.

"Take, for example," he says, "a kiss. What is it but a pretence to bite? It is an action plainly intended to convey the meaning: 'I could bite you, you see, but I won't.'

"In the same way the playful pats and slaps which a lover gives to his sweetheart are obviously a mimicry of blows, regarded simply as privileged marks of endearment. When he clasps her in his arms it is the sense of capture which thrills him, and of being captured which thrills her."—London Tit-Bits.

HOME AND FASHIONS.

STYLES AND MATERIALS THAT ARE NOW CORRECT.

Effective Evening Toilette for Warm Weather Wear—Appetizing Dishes Composed of Tomatoes—Pretty Things to Wear.

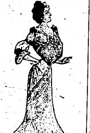
Pretty Things to Wear.

Silk underslips of taffeta and India silk to wear with thin gowns and all the transparent materials are made with deep godet flounces, having a little fulness at the edge. This gives fulness around the bottom of the skirt, which is needed under gowns of light texture. The linings to wear under the bodices are made with fulness at the waist line in both front and back. These slips may be of any color, and are really the most economical way of making a summer gown answer many purposes, as it may be worn with different colored slips on as many occasions; but the sash, belt, bows or stock must correspond in color with that of the slip.

For early fall wear the covert coat, in short box styles, will be a leader. For overcoats there is a demand for the long, loose Chesterfield in friezes, kerseys and meltons. The semi-ulster, belted effects in rough cheviots, Scotch plaids and mixed materials make a close second.

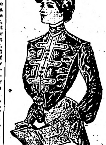
Effective Evening Toilette.

Many of the evening frocks are as capable of development in mercerized mull, or cotton grenadine, for warm weather wear, as in the more costly chiffons and crepe de chines which go to make up the original models, intended for the ball room. This gown might be charmingly reproduced in pale green silk mull. This material must not be confused with mousseline de soie, or silk muslin, this being all silk and requiring a silk foundation, while silk mull is silk one way, cotton the other, and does very well over a lawn slip exactly matching in color. This frock shows quite a new effect on the skirt by means of the unusual arrangement of the tucks, stitched with green Corticelli sewing silk. The flounce heading rises to a point in front and slopes downward at the back. Edging the flounce and the groups of tucks are placed rows of ecru applique, which is also used to define a bolero of plain material on the tucked blouse. The pretty sleeve and shoulder-knots are of velvet ribbon.



The Fashionable Blouse.

The odd waist has become a necessity, and one would not know how to get on without it. For people who travel much, it has certainly gone far to simplify, if not entirely to solve the question of excess of luggage. This is a pretty blouse, simple in style, but hardly to be denominated a shirtwaist. It is of Liberty satin, cut with a long shoulder seam, which is overlaid with a strap, below which the so-called "Gibson" pleat descends to the girdle. The front is made after the "Duchess" model, that is opening over a vest which is almost invisible. The finish is of tan cloth carefully stitched with Corticelli sewing silk of self color, and terminating at either side in straps buttoned over a lace scarf. The sleeves are quite new, tucked from the shoulder to several inches below the elbow, and falling free from there to form a sort of glorified bishop's puff. The little cuff is fitted very closely, and finished with straps of cloth, stitched with Corticelli silk, as is also the edge of the pointed collar. This blouse is pretty enough for any ordinary occasion, and being without bouffant trimming, has the further advantage of permitting the coat to be readily slipped on and off.



An Appetizing Dish.

Tomatoes, because of their pleasant acidity, are suited to a great variety of combinations. An appetizing breakfast dish is prepared with eggs and the vegetables. Wash as many round, apple shaped tomatoes as there are persons to be served. Cut a thin slice from the top of each for a cover and scoop out a sufficient space to admit the egg. Put in each a little butter, drop in the unbroken white and yolk, salt and pepper, place a dot of butter on the top of the egg, replace the cover and bake for about twenty minutes, or until the tomato is tender. Grated cheese may be sprinkled over the egg before the cover is put on.

Thre is no end of delicious stuffings for tomatoes. They may be filled with rice seasoned with salt, pepper and butter, and a dash of curry or paprika if it is wanted with a forcemeat made of chopped meat flavored with onion juice and parsley or with bread crumbs mixed with the tomato pulp and seasoned to taste. They will need to bake in a moderate oven about twenty minutes.

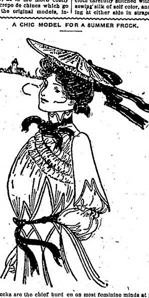
A CHIC MODEL FOR A SUMMER FROCK.



Summer frocks are the chief burden on most feminine minds at present. This little model is good in its suggestions and could be made up in linen combined with a thinner material, or entirely in one of the many cotton novelties or gingham.

The points can be outlined with velvet ribbon, with braid or merely with stitching, as taste and the material employed dictate.

The hat is one of the woody straws that have somehow a rather Chinese effect. It is raised from the face by a wreath of Michaelmas daisies set under the brim.

NEW TREATY MADE

TARIFF ARRANGEMENT WITH CHINA HAS BEEN CONCLUDED.

SHARETTS' MISSION IS ENDED

CARRIES OUT IMPORTANT STIPULATION OF THE PEACE AGREEMENT.

WILL OPEN UP THE INTERIOR

ABOLITION OF THE LINKIN TAX WILL ENCOURAGE FOREIGN TRADE.

Washington, Aug. 19.—The state department has received a dispatch from T. S. Sharretts, the treasury expert who was commissioned by the state department to negotiate a tariff treaty between the United States and China, stating that the treaty was signed on the 15th inst., and that he would sail for the United States on the first steamer.

The announcement contained in Mr. Sharrett's brief dispatch to the state department brings to a successful conclusion negotiations which have been in progress for many months for a tariff treaty between China and this country. It was stipulated as one of the features of the peace agreement between China and the foreign powers at the close of the Boxer outbreak that an entirely new fabric, to trade treaties should be made. This carried out the purpose Secretary Hay had maintained throughout the pending negotiations for an "open door," the desire being to open up foreign communications with the interior of China and thus gain access to the vast markets of the empire.

Following the conclusion of peace arrangements Mr. Sharretts was selected to carry on the tariff negotiations in behalf of the United States. This selection was due to his long affairs, as he had assisted in the framing of recent tariff legislation before congress, and had also served as one of the general appraisers of New York. He went to China about a year ago, and has since been engaged in working out the details of a tariff agreement. It was announced about a month ago that the British commissioners had concluded a tariff treaty with China, and it was understood at that time the British treaty would serve as a basis for similar treaties with the United States and other foreign countries. The state department was advised at the time that the rates on imports entering China were 12 1-2 per cent and the export duties 7 1-2 per cent.

One of the most important provisions of the British-China treaty was that abolishing the Linkin tax. It is presumed that similar rates are made in the American treaty, and that the Linkin tax is abolished as far as it relates to American goods in transit. The abolition of the Linkin tax will go far toward encouraging foreign trade and traffic in the interior of China.

MURDERED AND ROBBED.

Thieves Then Set Fire to the House and Nearly Cremate Their Victim.

Knoxville, Tenn., Aug. 19. — Watkin Newman, aged twenty-four, was murdered, robbed and nearly cremated in his home six miles from Jefferson City, Tenn., Saturday night. His brother Isham, arriving hom at midnight, found the house in flames and his brother Watkin lying on a bed dead. He could not rescue the body on account of the fire. Examination made yesterday disclosed a terrible gash in the young man's head inflicted by some blunt instrument. The body was horribly burned. Money which had been in the house was missing, as was also a pistol and a watch.

BULLET FOR A BURGLAR.

Detroit Policeman Wings One Man and Captures Another.

Detroit, Mich., Aug. 19. — Edward Lenehan died at Emergency hospital yesterday caused by a bullet from Officer F. J. Lemond's revolver. Patrolman Lemond discovered four burglars entering a grocery on Brooklyn avenue yesterday. He endeavored to arrest them and they opened fire on him. Both men fired, but one shot was returned. The bullet struck Lenehan in the hip, penetrating his abdomen. Another one of the burglars is under arrest.

KILLED FOR OBJECTING.

Memphis Street Car the Scene of Fight and Murder.

Memphis, Aug. 19.—Henry Glenny, a well known railroad man connected with the Choctaw, Oklahoma & Gulf, was shot and killed by Cobb Teel. Teel and several companions were in a street car, and it is said used profane language to the conductor. Glenny, who was accompanied by his wife, objected, and in a fight he was shot by Teel.

GLADYS MAKES DENIAL.

Says She Is Not Betrothed to Crown Prince of Germany.

London, Aug. 19.—A letter from Miss Gladys Deacon, daughter of Mrs. Edward Parker Deacon, appears in the London papers this morning in which the writer asks the papers to emphatically contradict the rumors of an alleged betrothal between herself and Crown Prince Frederick William of Germany.

Cholera Scare at Manila.

Manila, Aug. 19. — Cholera reports show few cases of the disease here, but a large number in some provinces. The total number of cases reported to date is 23,630, with 17,596 deaths. Estimating the cases which have not been reported, the total number is believed to have reached 30,000.

Fatal Street Car Accidents.

St. Louis, Aug. 19.—Two persons were killed and eight others were injured, one probably fatally, in two street car accidents here last night.

LIVELY DAY FOR THE DUKE.

Chicago Keeps Her Distinguished Visitor on the Run.

Chicago, Aug. 19.—Chicago's visitor, Grand Duke Boris Vladimirowitch of Russia, was a much bewildered nobleman last night when he retired to his suite at the Auditorium hotel, mentally reviewing the various experiences that had made up the "quiet Sunday" assured him by his friends in this city. A rapid coach drive to the Saddle and Cycle club soon after breakfast, with two exhibitions en route of fire companies in action, luncheon at the North Shore clubhouse, an exciting automobile runaway in which his highness was the sole participant, a quick trip back to the city and a banquet at the Chicago club immediately following were some of the things that had made the day, so the duke thought, far from being uneventful.

STRUNG UP BY A MOB.

Outlaws Are Thus Forced to Give Information About Their Leaders.

Cordell, Okla., Aug. 19. — A mob of several hundred men took Levi Reed and Bud Wingo, outlaws captured recently in a raid on the Casey Cravens gang, from the county jail here and strung them up to trees to force them to reveal the whereabouts of their leaders and to give information regarding their crimes. The outlaws finally gave the desired information and the mob returned them to jail, disappearing, apparently to run down the band. Reed was so badly strangled he was revived with difficulty. The Cravens gang is one of the worst that infests this country. Recently they have committed many outrages in Southern Oklahoma.

MARTYR TO SCIENCE.

Young Doctor Contracts Tuberculosis While Making Investigations.

New York, Aug. 19.—Dr. E. H. Scofield has fallen a victim to tuberculosis in his investigations at Yale. When in the medical school he made a special study of the disease and was sent to Denver almost on the eve of his graduation, suffering from the disease which he had contracted from his patients. His condition improved there and he completed his studies in the medical college in that city. He recently suffered a relapse and has failed rapidly for two weeks. Dr. Scofield is about twenty-five years old.

COURT-MARTIAL ENDS.

Verdict in Penrose Case Is Sent to Washington.

Erie, Pa., Aug. 19.—The court-martial detailed to try Past Assistant Postmaster Charles W. Penrose on charges of making false returns, embezzlement, scandalous conduct, absence from duty and negligence, has arrived at a verdict and adjourned. The court deliberated four and one-half hours. The findings have been sent, sealed, to the department at Washington, where the proceedings of the court will be reviewed and the verdict made public by the secretary of the navy.

ONE OF POSSE KILLED.

Two Oregon Robbers Hold Their Pursuers at Bay.

Pendleton, Or., Aug. 19.—Sheriff Taylor and a posse of six men are engaged in a battle at a barn north of Athena with two robbers who Thursday night held up several men in Freewater. Deputy Scott Ritchie has been wounded in the thigh and is lying behind a mound, unable to escape the range of the robbers' guns if he should move. The last report is that the robbers, under cover of darkness, had succeeded in stealing horses from the posse and escaping.

CONFESSION ON A BANK NOTE.

Last Left of a $40,000 Fortune—Murdered Wife and Two Little Children.

Vandalia, Ill., Aug. 19.—On the back of a $2 bill taken in yesterday by the cashier of a local mercantile firm was written in red ink the following note: "This is the last left of a $40,000 fortune, and I have murdered my wife and two little children, and whosoever's hands this may fall into take the warning. William Coplin, Toledo, Aug. 10, 1902. Whisky did it."

CRAP GAME ENDS FATALLY.

Negroes Kill One Man and Wound Another.

Murphysboro, Ill., Aug. 19.—Six persons have met violent deaths in Jackson county in the last week. The latest outbreak of violence was in the shooting of William Smith and son Jacob yesterday near Raddleville. The father was killed but the son will recover. Negroes committed the crime, which was the outcome of a game of "craps" at a negro picnic.

COMES HOME UNEXPECTEDLY.

Husband Finds Man With His Wife and Shoots Both.

Kansas City, Mo., Aug. 19. — J. C. Surles, a blacksmith, coming home unexpectedly yesterday and finding Albert Hayes, a boarder, in company with his wife, shot both with a shotgun. Mrs. Surles probably will recover. Hayes may die. After the shooting Surles called a neighbor and sent him to notify the police, submitting to arrest without protest.

KILLED IN A WRECK.

Excursion Train Crashes Into a Freight Train.

Chicago, Aug. 19—One man was killed outright and another was probably fatally injured in a railroad wreck at Hammond, Ind., early yesterday. A Chicago & Erie freight train standing on the tracks of the Chicago & Western Indiana railroad was crashed into by a special train of the Chicago, Indianapolis & Louisville railroad bearing 600 excursionists from Cincinnati.

Storm Does Damage in Iowa.

Keokuk, Iowa, Aug. 19. — Another series of severe electrical and wind storms passed over Southeastern Iowa yesterday, doing much damage. In the last few weeks the number of barns struck by lightning is over a hundred.

Unknown Man Drowned.

Duluth, Minn., Aug. 19.—An unknown man was drowned in St. Louis bay last night. He was in a rowboat which was waterlogged. The crew of a tug made an effort to rescue him, but he was too exhausted to hang to the line.

TO BREAK STRIKE

PLAN TO RESUME WORK UNDER PROTECTION OF STATE TROOPS.

MOST IMPORTANT MOVE YET MADE

PROPRIETOR OF WASHERY DETERMINED TO COMMENCE OPERATIONS.

WILL MEET WITH OPPOSITION

STRIKERS EQUALLY DETERMINED TO STOP WORK IF IT IS STARTED.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Aug. 19. — The fifteenth week of the coal strike will start with one of the most important moves yet made by the operators.

The plan is to resume work under the protection of the state troops. The calling of the troops to Shenandoah was to suppress the rioting and guard the town. The expected calling of troops to Duryea will be to prevent interference with the workers and attacks upon the Warnke washery, which was stopped by the rioters on Thursday.

The proposition is simply this, that Warnke is to operate his washery with coal guards if it is possible, with the local police if they are capable, with the sheriff's deputies if they are able, and with the state troops if necessary. It is said an attempt will be made to start the Maltby colliery of the Lehigh Valley Coal company to-day. About twenty electric lights have been strung within the inclosure and fully fifty coal and iron policemen were last evening. The electric lights will enable the guards to be stationed at many points and have a clear view of all the surroundings. One of the under superintendents of the company, when questioned, said he was unable to say whether an attempt would be made to start work at the colliery. At strike headquarters some of the officers are considerably exercised over the matter.

The leaders of the strikers are holding meetings and warning the strikers to keep away from the washery and to avoid crowds, while peace committees have also been appointed for the same purpose, but there is no noticeable change in the sentiment of the crowds, for they are determined to stop work at the washery if it is started.

DEAD HERMIT AN HEIR.

Undertaker Discovers That Recluse Was Entitled to an Estate.

Florence, Colo., Aug. 19.—The undertaker who had charge of the funeral of Thomas Whaley, who died recently in a dug-out near Williamsburg, where he had lived for twenty years as a hermit, has discovered that Whaley was heir to a vast fortune in England. On account of a love affair Whaley left his home in Northwest Durham twenty years ago, and since that time his sister, Mrs. R. Wilson of Annesfield, Durham county, England, has made constant, though fruitless, efforts to find him. Remarks dropped shortly before his death led to the discovery of his relatives.

GREAT CANDY TRUST.

Combination Forming to Control Eighteen Large Factories.

St. Louis, Aug. 19. — A candy trust with a capital of $10,000,000 and headquarters in Chicago and St. Louis. That briefly tells the story of an organization of the candy interests now forming in the Central West. Twenty to twenty-five concerns are going into the combine. They are located in St. Louis, Chicago and Cincinnati. It is expected that the organization will be completed within the next three weeks. The trust is certain to control eighteen of the largest factories in the Middle West, and will have an output of 100,000,000 pounds a year.

HIS OWN UNDOING.

Freight Conductor Neglects His Duty and Is Killed.

Humboldt, Iowa, Aug. 19.—A serious rear-end collision between two stock trains going east occurred on the Chicago & Northwestern railroad three miles east of here yesterday morning. Conductor Roe Harlan of Eagle Grove jumped from the caboose, but a truck hit him, cutting his head in two. The caboose was hurley thirty feet. Six stockmen in it escaped with a few bruises. The engineer and fireman of the rear train jumped. The engineer had his arm broken. Blame is placed on the dead conductor for not placing red lights out.

ROBBED OF HIS ROLL.

Minnesota Man Loses the Proceeds of the Sale of His Farm.

Morris, Minn., Aug. 19.—Martin Dalgren of Melvin, Polk county, Minn., got off the east-bound Great Northern train here yesterday morning and reported that he had been robbed of $1,100 after he boarded the train at Crookston. He discovered his money was gone after he left Breckenridge. He had $150 in cash and the balance was in certificates of deposit on the Bank of Walnut Grove, Minn., and the Scandia Bank of Crookston. He had sold his farm near Crookston and was en route to his former home at Walnut Grove.

BEST WHEAT IN THE WORLD.

South Dakota Will Send Exhibit to the St. Louis Exposition.

Sturgis, S. D., Aug. 19.—Fred Borsch, who lives on a farm about two miles west of this city, is making arrangements to send some wheat raised by him this season to the St. Louis exposition as an exhibit of what the Black Hills can do. Mr. Borsch now has a $140 medal which he received at the world's fair for the best wheat raised anywhere, and what he has this fall is even better than that.

BOERS MEET THE KING.

Generals Botha, Dewet and Delarey Visit King Edward.

London, Aug. 19.—The Boer generals, Botha, Dewet and Delarey, who reached London Saturday from South Africa, left London yesterday for Cowes, Isle of Wight, to see King Edward on board the royal yacht Victoria and Albert. The hour of the generals' departure from London was kept secret, consequently the streets were deserted when the three generals, accompanied by their secretaries, but by none of the women of the party, started for Cowes. They were stylishly attired in frock coats and silk hats. Upon arriving at Southampton the Boer generals were welcomed on board the commander-in-chief's yacht Wildfire by Earl Roberts and Gen. Lord Kitchener. They immediately visited King Edward on board the Victoria and Albert, and were then taken for a trip around the fleet. They returned to London last night, accompanied by Earl Roberts and Gen. Lord Kitchener, who took leave of the Boers at Waterloo station.

WHIRR OF HARVEST

CUTTING NOW GENERAL THROUGHOUT THE SPRING WHEAT DISTRICT.

CONDITIONS ARE SATISFACTORY

WILL BE BUSY WITH THE BIG FLAX CROP IN A COUPLE OF WEEKS.

BRILLIANT BUSINESS OUTLOOK

COUNTRY MERCHANTS EXPECT BEST YEAR IN HISTORY OF NORTHWEST.

North Dakota and Northern Minnesota, which have presented the most interesting features of this year's crop, are progressing well with a much drawn out harvest. Wheat cutting under favorable weather conditions is becoming general in the northern counties. Some early flax is ready for the binder, and it is expected that the harvesters will be busy in most of the crop in the big flax district in two weeks. The possibilities for business in the present northwestern crop are great. Country merchants expect the best business year in the history of the entire territory tributary to the Twin Cities. The Northwest will have a great surplus of feed grains to sell. Development of the smaller towns and cities as well as the big centers will establish new records.

Conditions in the Valley.

On the whole the Red river valley counties of Minnesota and North Dakota have done well. The Red river valley proper, which comprises a territory about thirty miles wide along the banks of that stream, has brought its grain crop along excellently considering the handicap of flooded lands during the spring, but the valley proper has had too much grief to make a satisfactory showing. In Minnesota, Kittson county, and especially the section from Kennedy north, has a good crop. Around Warren it is not bad. Below Warren it is worse. From Crookston south along the Great Northern to the Northern Pacific the crop generally is poor, although the region must be given credit for the showing it has made under the conditions. The eastern portions of these counties have a good yield. While western Polk has suffered from an unfavorable spring, the eastern part of the county raised its usual fine crop of grain. The same is true of the eastern portions of other counties in this spring's wet district. From Fertile south on the Northern Pacific there is a good crop. From Fertile to Grand Forks it is unsatisfactory.

The western portions of Pembina, Walsh, Grand Forks and Cass counties have held their own on grain yields and partly equalized the unsatisfactory showing in the section along the Red river. Cass county suffered more from the surplus of moisture in the spring than the rest of the valley counties. Richland county was outside the wet district and has raised a fine crop of grain on nearly all of its acreage. Wilkin county, Minn., has also secured a fair yield.

Weather Has Been Favorable.

Up to date conditions for maturing and harvesting the crop in western North Dakota have been more satisfactory. One night when the mercury sagged down close to the frost line in some sections the northern counties shuddered, but that has been the only exception to a generally satisfactory weather program. There is little difference in the general crop story in the entire country west of the Red river valley. La Moure, Ransom, Sargent and Dickey counties in the southern part of the state which have faced unequal weather conditions through a period of years have produced good crops. There is a difference of opinion as to the prospective flax yield of this year compared with that of last in the western counties. Some of the best grain authorities in the state do not expect to see flax average as well in the western counties as last year.

Depressing Factors in Wheat.

Northern Minnesota and North Dakota present the most interesting feature in the study of the Northwest's grain acreage. It is largely told in the wet district in the Red river valley and the stampede to flax in the West. There has been an increase in the wheat acreage of some of the western counties, but in the immense amount of new land cultivated for the first time this year in North Dakota wheat has been given a small place. It is almost unanimous for flax. Wheat has also lost to some extent on the older land. This is true in the counties immediately west of the Red river valley. The big flax district is in Benson, Pierce, Bottineau, McHenry, Towner, Ramsey, Ward, Wells, Eddy, Foster and Nelson. In the new land recently opened along the Northern Pacific and in what new acreage there is west of the Missouri river wheat was seeded to a greater extent than in the counties further north. The counties south of the Northern Pacific have been turning their attention more to stock which explains the shrinkage in wheat acreage in that section.

A New Producing Section.

The Mouse river valley in Northwestern North Dakota enters the grain lists this year for the first time as a heavy producer. While the settlement of this valley and the adjacent country has been in progress for some years, the past two years have seen the larger area of land broken. Flax is the principal story in that region.

Along the Soo road from Valley City to Portal flax is the leading crop. If the grain matures without much damage flax will cut a big figure in Soo earnings. This is the second year in which farmers along the Soo line seeded flax heavily, and with a fair price the venture will be satisfactory. The Northwest has begun a new story of prosperity for its railroads for the coming year. The Soo's earnings ought to increase largely, taking into consideration the grain tonnage in sight and the transportation of merchandise incident to the development of a new country. The merger lines, with the exception of a small mileage in the Red river valley, share in the same excellent results. The Northwestern and Milwaukee will pull well for South Dakota and Southern Minnesota. The branch lines of the Great Northern, Northern Pacific and the Soo in Minnesota and North Dakota will be a big factor in the earnings of the coming year.

General Condition Good.

Many of the Northwestern cities and towns are making extensive developments both in residence and business sections. Sioux Falls, Watertown, Aberdeen, Brookings, Huron, Mitchell, Redfield and Canton, as well as many other smaller places, have erected a large number of new buildings. Fargo and Grand Forks usually lead the work of improvement in North Dakota, but there is hardly a town in that state which has not erected new and substantial buildings this summer. Machinery concerns which do much of their transfer business for North Dakota at Fargo, have found present quarters inadequate and are preparing to add to the long list of machinery warehouses in that city. Crookston, the county seat of Polk county, is growing at a rapid rate. Its business men now claim a population of 7,000. Its building record for the year has been big. There is a general tendency toward brick buildings and fewer frame structures.—W. E. Davis in Minneapolis Journal.

PROFIT FOR THE FARMERS.

Grain Rate Reduction in Effect Within a Week.

St. Paul, Aug. 17.—The reductions in grain rates promised Minnesota and the Dakotas by the Great Northern and Northern Pacific systems will go into effect, President James J. Hill of the Great Northern said last night, within a week.

"We will lower grain rates in the Northwest within a week," Mr. Hill said. "We want the rates to benefit Northwestern farmers, and we want them effective in time to move the immense crop of the Northwest. I cannot say off-hand what the reduction will save the farmers this year, but you may state that it will be a large sum—a very large sum in fact. The reductions will cover the entire Northwest, and other lines than the coast lines will join them. Farmers everywhere will get the benefit."

DUAL LIFE DISCOVERED.

Man, Drowned in Indiana, About to Marry, Had Wife and Family.

Kenosha, Wis., Aug. 17.—The drowning of John T. Bishop of this city at Mishawaka, Ind., last night revealed the fact that Bishop, who was one of the best known men in Kenosha, had been leading a dual life. Bishop had a wife and two children in this county, and, according to reports received from Mishawaka, he was to have been married on next Sunday to a woman at Mishawaka. As Bishop was a son of Hon. I. T. Bishop, and a member of one of the most prominent families in this part of the state, his death under the circumstances has caused a considerable sensation.

MORRIS NOT A CANDIDATE.

Congressman Reiterates His Former Declaration.

Duluth, Minn., Aug. 17.—Page Morris will not be a candidate for the Republican nomination. He was greatly surprised and annoyed to learn that during his absence from the city a general report had been spread to the effect that he would again seek congressional honors as the result of good fortune in a mining property investment.

NEGRO RAVISHER CAPTURED.

Gives Posse a Hard Fight, Escapes and Is Recaptured.

Lodi, Wis., Aug. 17.—A negro brutally assaulted Anna Zimmerman, daughter of a farmer living about a mile east of the village of Dane Thursday night, and, after leaving her in a senseless condition for several hours, returned to the scene of his crime and confessed to two men who happened to be in the neighborhood. The men failed to capture the negro but immediately informed the father of the girl and a posse was formed. The posse captured the negro, but after a desperate struggle he escaped. Later in the evening he was recaptured and lodged in jail.

TWO BROTHERS DROWNED.

Lose Their Lives in Pike Bay—Accidentally Discovered.

Cass Lake, Minn., Aug. 17.— George and Henry, the young sons of Nic Henry, were drowned in Pike Bay. The whistle at the Scanlon-Gipson planing mill had just blown for the completion of the day's work, and James Allen, an employe of the company, was crossing on some boom sticks when he discovered a straw hat lying on top of the water. He looked in the water, and a short distance from the hat discovered the body of a boy. While searching for the body another child was discovered, lying but a few feet distant in exactly the same position.

FRANCE TORN UP

BONAPARTISTS MAKE THE MOST OF PRESENT ALARMING CONDITIONS.

THEY GLORIFY NAPOLEON'S BIRTH

MOMENT CONSIDERED AUSPICIOUS FOR A MOST FERVID CELEBRATION.

FIGHT PREMIER COMBES' AGENTS

DESPERATE ATTEMPTS OF WOMEN TO IMPEDE PROGRESS OF SOLDIERS.

Paris, Aug. 16. — With the peasant women of Bretagne throwing themselves beneath the feet of the horses to impede the progress of the troops sent to dispossess the nuns and empty the convents; with village belfries sounding midnight alarms and rousing farmers to fight Premier Combe's agents with harp sticks and pitchforks, the Imperialists consider the moment auspicious for the most fervid celebration of Napoleon's birth, which also marks this year the completion of a century since France first honored that date, as well as the century of the date on which the conqueror was made first consul for life.

All the Imperialists in France have been invited by the Bonapartist group in Paris to come to the capital to assist in the demonstration, which will include balls in the open air, banquets and an imposing baronial barbecue in the forest of Fontainbleau. Victor Napoleon, on whose shoulders the Bonapartists hope the mantle of "the Little Corporal" may fall, will be represented at the fetes by a long address which he is sending to his faithful adherents.

Thousands of orderly non-partisan French citizens, who have not hitherto considered the Bonapartists of the Orleanist pretender seriously, now shake their heads and confess that the mood of the provinces borders on unpleasant savageness. Anti-ministerial leaders affect to believe that the entire peasant population will pledge support to any form of government on the condition of the return of "the good Sisters."

A Martyr to His Faith.

Capt. Douince, who joined Col. De Saint Remy in his protest against the closing of the schools of the religious associations, has been arrested and placed in confinement in a fortress at Belle Isle.

Col. De Saint Remy was ordered to close a nun's school at Lanoeun and refused to do so, saying: "I am a Christian and will not share in an act that is contrary to my faith and religious sentiments."

He was relieved of his command and sent to Belle Isle to undergo imprisonment in a fortress.

Soldiers have been requisitioned in several places in Finisterre during the past two or three days to protect police commissaries engaged in closing religious schools from threatening crowds.

At St. Meen scouts on horses, bicycles and even automobiles are reconnoitering in order to give alarm of the coming of the police. The peasants declare that they will throw beehives among the gendarmes, and will put beehives in the barricades.

MURDER ON A TRAIN.

Saloonkeeper Shot and Killed by a Politician.

Guthrie, Okla., Aug. 16.—James Feverely, a saloonkeeper of Glenco, Okla., was shot and instantly killed by James McMurty, on a Santa Fe passenger train near Glenco yesterday. McMurty is prominent in Oklahoma politics and organized the first free home league in the territory. The trouble arose over an attempt made by the anti-saloon league to prevent a liquor license being issued to Feverely and Henderson. Feverely attacked McMurty in the smoking car and the killing resulted. To prevent a lynching McMurty was removed to Pawnee county for safety.

TUG EXPLOSION KILLS FOUR.

The Jacob Kuper Literally Blown to Pieces Off Staten Island.

New York, Aug. 16.—The tug Jacob Kuper, while coming down the bay and when near St. George, Staten Island, yesterday morning, blew up.

Four of the crew were killed or drowned. Two men were picked up by the ferryboat Carleton.

The cause has not yet been learned.

MANY ARE INCINERATED.

Cape Haitien Fire Consumes a Great Many Persons.

Paris, Aug. 15. — An official telegram from Cape Haitien says that very many persons were incinerated during the burning of Petit Goave, on Saturday last. The telegram adds that the blockade of Cape Haitien by the Firminist gunboat Crete-a-Pierrot, has not been recognized by the American government.

JAPS LAND GUNS.

Take Possession of the Island of Kothnesan and Erect Batteries.

Paris, Aug. 15.—A St. Petersburg dispatch to the Globe says that the Japanese naval officers on their own responsibility have landed guns, constructed a battery and posted guards on the Island of Kothnesan, and that Korean officials who were sent out to investigate were driven away by the Japanese.

NORTH DAKOTA INVADED.

Nineteenth Rifles and a Host of Winnipeg Civilians Welcomed to Grand Forks.

Grand Forks, N. D., Aug. 16.—The Nineteenth rifles, the crack military organization of Western Canada, arrived here on a special train at 2 p. m., preceded by another special which was loaded with civilians from the Manitoba metropolis. Grand Forks has been turned over completely to the visitors. About all the city officials of Winnipeg are here. There was a splendid reception for the visitors at the station, after which a parade took place. An address of welcome was delivered by J. P. Bosard and the response was made by Mayor Arbuthnot of Winnipeg. The Nineteenth then stacked arms in the city hall and was escorted to dinner. The afternoon was given up to street sports, and in the evening a grand masked street ball, the most spectacular event ever seen in the city was the crowning feature.

DIVORCE IN HIGH LIFE.

Daughter of Late Pierre Lorillard Secures Separation From T. Suffern Tailer.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Aug. 16. — Mrs. Maud Lorillard Tailer of New York city, youngest child of the late Pierre Lorillard, the millionaire tobacco merchant, was yesterday in the state circuit court at Salem, S. D., granted a divorce by Judge Jones from T. Suffern Tailer, who has for years been prominently identified with the coaching interests of New York. The ground upon which the divorce decree was granted is simply that the defendant, T. Suffern Tailer, abandoned the plaintiff with intent to desert her, and that such desertion has existed for more than one year.

BOY ROBBERS LASHED.

West Superior Judge Imposes the Sentence.

West Superior, Wis., Aug. 16—"Twenty-one lashes across the back" was the sentence yesterday imposed by Judge Hally of the municipal court upon two thirteen-year-old twin boys who were before him on the charge of burglary. Their confessions led the police to believe that, with the aid of a companion, who is missing from home, the boys have committed a large number of burglaries. The boys are the sons of the late John W. Scott, a very prominent citizen, and one time mayor of West Superior.

Plainfield, Wis., Aug. 16—The village of Cotoma, this county, yesterday had a $10,000 fire, nearly all the business houses on one side of the main street being destroyed. F. J. Luce & Co. are the heaviest losers.

MURDER IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

Bartender Shoots and Kills a Colored Prize Fighter.

Custer, S. D., Aug. 16.—Roy Streeter, a colored prize fighter, was killed here yesterday afternoon by Jack Gorum, a white bartender, who shot Streeter twice with a shotgun. One shot took effect in the arm and the other in the face. Streeter's face was riddled with buckshot and he died instantly. The shooting occurred over Streeter's attentions to a white woman here.

CASTRO DONE FOR

UTTER DEFEAT OF THE VENEZUELAN PRESIDENT NOW SEEMS CERTAIN.

HEMMED IN BY THREE FORCES

EACH FORCE OVERWHELMINGLY SUPERIOR TO THE PRESIDENT'S.

CAPTURE THE TOWN OF CUMANA

NOW ENGAGED IN SACKING AND BURNING THE PLACE—MANY KILLED.

Washington, Aug. 16.—From information received here by the state and navy departments, it is evident that President Castro of Venezuela is being hemmed in by three forces of revolutionists, each force overwhelmingly superior to that commanded by the president.

Castro is supposed to be in the vicinity of Caracas, probably in the city. Gen. Matos, the revolutionary leader, has advanced from Bolivar to the northwest to a place called Orituco, about sixty miles south of Caracas. Ten days ago Castro was reported as having left the capital to meet the revolutionary general, but subsequently returned. More recent advices indicated that a battle was imminent on the plains immediately south of Caracas. Early this week the revolutionists took Barcelona, to the Eastward of Caracas, and now, according to a late dispatch from Commander Nickols, they have obtained control of Porto Cabello to the westward.

The fact that the government had seized three of the steamers of the Orinoco company at San Felix is not a cause of concern here, as it is understood that these ships fly the Venezuelan flag, and the for government use is well settled. No further steps have been taken toward sending additional ships to Venezuela, and no fresh instructions have been sent to the commanders of the American warships there, as the reports received from them are considered satisfactory. Commander Nickols of the Topeka, at Porto Cabello, states that the revolutionists were in control, and that there was no danger of an attempt to retake the town by the government forces. Commander Nickols stated that the necessity for landing a force had not arisen.

It is reported from St. Thomas, D. W. I., that the Venezuelan insurgents have captured the town of Cumana, after a fierce battle in which many were killed, and that they are engaged in sacking and burning the place. Advices received from La Guayra state that anarchy reigns throughout the Republic of Venezuela. Both the government and the insurgent troops are engaged in looting the places of foreigners. The American residents of Porto Cabello, Barcelona and Cumana were robbed and John Scott, employed by an asphalt company, was shot at Barcelona because he refused to permit a mob of soldiers to pillage his place.

Americans Ask for Help.

Americans at La Guayra, Caracas, Barcelona, Porto Cabello and Cumana have made an urgent appeal to United States Minister Bowen to ask the United States to send a strong naval force to Venezuela immediately. A large force of marines is said to be needed immediately at Barcelona, where every residence occupied by foreigners has been sacked and the people driven into the streets. The Venezuelan government is utterly unable to cope with the insurrection, and President Castro's defeat seems certain. Under date of Wednesday, Minister Bowen at Caracas reports to the state department that the situation there is very critical. At the navy department a cablegram has been received from Commander McLean reporting the arrival of the Cincinnati at Barcelona. The Marietta is at Port-of-Spain, Trinidad, and is subject to the orders of Commander McLean.

The revolutionists now hold the custom ports, Ciudad de Bolivar, Guiria, Cano, Colorado, Coro, Carupano and Barcelona. It is said that Great Britain and another power are willing to grant the rebels belligerent rights.

ODELL AT SAGAMORE HILL.

New York Governor Dines With President Roosevelt.

Oyster Bay, Aug. 16.—Gov. Odell of New York was the president's guest at luncheon yesterday at Sagamore Hill. The governor was unaccompanied and his visit evidently was not known in advance to the citizens of this place, for no official of the town was at the depot to greet him. The president's trap was in waiting and the governor was driven directly to the president's home. Before starting for Sagamore Hill, Gov. Odell stated that his visit was purely social.

AMERICANS KILLED.

Automobile Crashes Into a Tree, Killing Mr. and Mrs. Fair.

Evreux, France, Aug. 16. — Mr. and Mrs. Charles Fair, Americans, who are related to Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr. (Miss Virginia Fair), were returning to Paris from Trouville when their automobile swerved and crashed into a tree fifteen miles from here. Both were killed. The chauffeur became insane as a consequence of the shock.

WILL COLLECT THE TAX.

Banks Must Pay Aggregate of About Three Hundred Thousand.

Washington, Aug. 16.—Commissioner Yerkes of the internal revenue bureau, has directed that immediate steps be taken for the collection of the tax on profit and loss accounts, or undivided profits accounts of banks, trust companies or private banks under the war revenue act of June, 1898. The amount to be collected will approximate, it is said, $300,000.

MAYOR AMES CAN'T LET GO.

Minneapolis City Council Pigeonholes His Resignation.

Minneapolis, Aug. 15. — Mayor Ames will continue as head of Minneapolis' government until the new year if the present apparent disposition of the city council is not changed. The mayor, so it is said, has intimated in a semi-official way that he has ceased to be a resident of Minneapolis, and that he calculates on remaining permanently at West Baden. Still, this declaration does not make the city council take the mayor's resignation seriously. The absent mayor's message was presented to the city council at its meeting last evening. Ald. McCune, a member of the Republican majority, moved that Mayor Ames' resignation be referred to the committee on ways and means. This was done without any apparent opposition. This disposition simply means that the resignation is pigeonholed.

ENFORCE SUNDAY LAWS.

Chaplain Knowles of Duluth Starts a Movement.

Duluth, Minn., Aug. 15.—Rev. Harry W. Knowles, pastor of Grace Methodist Episcopal church in this city, and chaplain of the state legislature, has inaugurated a movement having in its purpose the suppression of crime and enforcement of Sunday laws throughout the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin. He has asked the support of Catholic as well as Protestant clergymen in the work, and declares that already there is the greatest enthusiasm over the venture.

PRIEST PLEADS GUILTY.

He and His Housekeeper Fined for Assault on Little Girl.

Milwaukee, Wis., Aug. 15.—The Rev. Charles Jungblud, a Catholic priest of Neillsville, and his housekeeper, Lizzie Nolan, pleaded guilty before Judge Webb to-day to a charge of assault and battery, the victim being Marion Prieur, aged 10 years, a ward of the priest. Jungblud was fined $100 and costs, a total of about $500, and Miss Nolan was fined $50.

ON SERIOUS CHARGE.

Newport Man Is Held at Stillwater for Assault.

Stillwater, Minn., Aug. 15. — Albert Schluser, a farmer of Newport, was lodged in the county jail on a charge of making a criminal assault upon his sister-in-law, Ida Walgate, last April. The girl is at the poor farm, in a delicate condition. The neighbors of Schluser claim the man is the victim of a trumped-up charge.

CAR TURNS HANDSPRING.

Caboose Brake Beam Breaks and Two Men Are Hurt.

Des Moines, Iowa, Aug. 15. — While running at full speed near Dunreith, the brake beam under the caboose of a Wabash freight train broke, causing the car to spring into the air and turn over. The conductor and two brakemen were in the car at the time, escaping miraculously with serious though not fatal injuries.

NORTH DAKOTA'S WEALTH.

Assessed Valuation of the State Is Fixed at $134,000,000.

Bismarck, N. D., Aug. 15.—The state board of equalization adjourned yesterday. The total valuation of all classes of property in the state is $134,000,000, an increase of $10,000,000 in the past year. Real property increased $7,000,000 over last year. The assessment companies was reduced about $50,000 from last year.

SHOT BY A TRAMP.

Northern Pacific Brakeman Viciously Assaulted.

Bismarck, N. D., Aug. 15.—Fred Stevens, a railroad brakeman, was shot twice with a revolver by a hobo whom he had ejected from a Northern Pacific passenger train. One shot pierced his hand and the other passed through the thigh, breaking the bone. His injuries are serious.

WOMAN BURNED TO DEATH.

Explosion of Alcohol Causes a Terrible Tragedy.

St. Paul, Aug. 15.—Mrs. Frances Markel, a widow living in this city, was burned to death in an explosion of alcohol at her home yesterday morning. Her body was roasted. She lingered in agony several hours after the accident.

Has a Wife at Aitkin, Minn.

Sioux City, Iowa, Aug. 15.—H. T. Gilmore, the sentimental swindler, was bound over to the grand jury at Vermillion, S. D., in $400 bonds, which he has not yet furnished. A letter received by Chief Davenport, of this city, says Gilmore, alias Porter, has a wife and child living at Aitkin, Minn.

KILLED HIS FATHER.

Iowa Man Defends His Mother, Who Was Attacked by Husband.

Ottumwa, Iowa, Aug. 15.—John Sims shot and killed his father, J. H. Sims, near Bassey. The elder Sims was a wealthy farmer. He was intoxicated, and was endeavoring to kill his wife with a butcher knife.

QUARRYMEN KILLED.

Blown From Ledge, Falling Fifty Feet on Jagged Rocks.

La Crosse, Wis., Aug. 15.—J. August Lund, a quaryman, was blown from a ledge by a blast of dynamite and killed on the jagged rocks fifty feet below.

Farmers Establish Creamery.

Fisher, Minn., Aug. 15.—A creamery association has been organized here, with the stock all subscribed. The association starts out with over 400 cows owned by the stockholders.

Cloudburst in Iowa.

Davenport, Iowa, Aug. 15.—A cloudburst north of this city yesterday flooded the streams, cut Davenport off from the country and raised the Mississippi a foot. Three inches of rain fell here in a few minutes.

Elks Select Baltimore.

Salt Lake, Utah, Aug. 15.—The grand lodge of Elks yesterday selected Baltimore as the place of meeting for the annual reunion of the grand lodge in 1903, and practically completed its business.

TO GET GAYNOR AND GREENE.

Various Means Discussed by Department of Justice.

Washington, Aug. 16.—Three methods are discussed by department of justice officials by which the extradition of Gaynor and Greene may be accomplished, though Acting Attorney General Beck is careful not to make public his plans of action. One way is to secure a new indictment, covering an extraditable offense not included in the old indictment. Another plan is to have the state department make a direct request upon Canada for the fugitives, which, it is said, Canada could not well ignore. A third plan is to obtain legislation to cover the case. The alleged acts of Gaynor and Greene constitute a crime according to the laws of both countries, and it is argued that a statute might be framed to fit their case under the existing treaty, without being ex post facto legislation.

SHAKE-UP DUE IN DEPARTMENT.

Treasury Employes Likely to Hear Something Drop.

Washington, Aug. 16. — News has reached Washington from a trustworthy source at Oyster Bay that the long predicted shake-up in the treasury department is imminent. Gen. O. L. Spaulding will be relieved at an early date as assistant secretary of the treasury and assigned to other duty in the government service that will not be so trying to his impaired health. His successor has not been announced, although E. A. Tichenor of New York is the man most favorably considered for the office. Secretary Shaw and the president have been studying the treasury situation for some time, and they are nearly ready to make reforms through new men in important places in the service at New York and other large ports of the country.

SAILORS IN HOT FIGHT.

Training Ship's Complement and Warship's Crew Fight Negroes.

New York, Aug. 16. — It was learned for the first time yesterday from the crew of the training ship Hartford, recently arrived at the Brooklyn navy yard from a six months' cruise in the West Indies, that a stiff fight occurred on March 15 between natives of Port of Spain, Island of Trinidad, and the crews of the Hartford and the battleships Indiana and Massachusetts. One of the crew of the Indiana, whose name is not known, is said to have been severely injured in the fight, and there were many bruised heads and cut faces, while some of the negroes had to be carried away on stretchers. It is understood that apologies for the affair were made by the commanders of the three ships to the mayor of Port of Spain, who was in turn fully as apologetic, and the affair was hushed up.

ACCOMMODATES POLICE.

Murder Suspect Makes Confession and Then Says It Is False.

Chicago, Aug. 16.—Becoming desperate while being subjected to a vigorous examination last night by Inspector Hunt, Oscar Thompson, who is detained pending investigation of the Bartholin-Mitchell murders, confessed to everything that the police have been trying to make him tell. When he had finished Thompson laughed derisively and said: "Inspector, that story is a lie. You wanted me to tell you all these things. I have admitted all, but I must confess that it is all a lie." The bogus confession came just at a time when a confession was expected, and Inspector Hunt was greatly disappointed. After Thompson was returned to his cell, Inspector Hunt said: "I believe that strange confession is Thompson's last card, and that he will tell a terrible story before long."

MONEY FOR THE CROPS.

No Stringency Will Result From Moving the Crops.

New York, Aug. 16.—The one important subject in financial circles at present is the question as to the immediate effect of the big crops on the money market and whether the expected and probable demands on the New York banks for money with which to harvest and move them will cause such a financial stringency as to bring about an enforced liquidation in the stock exchange securities market. The consensus of opinion of the local New York bankers, both foreign and domestic, is that there is no need for apprehension, that, notwithstanding the low surplus reserve of the associated banks, all the money necessary would be forthcoming.

ABDUCTION IS CHARGED.

Chicago Young Woman Forcibly Taken From Her Home.

Chicago, Aug. 16.—A story of alleged abduction last night was reported to the police by relatives of Mamie Reinert, 1018 Belmont avenue, who stated that the young woman, who is seventeen years of age, had been forcibly taken from her home by a young woman named Graham and a male companion, said to be from St. Paul. The girl was dragged into a hack and was driven rapidly away. An effort was made to intercept the party at the railway station, where they were supposed to take a train for St. Paul, but without avail. The Reinert girl recently returned from St. Paul, where she is said to have lived with the woman who took her away.

BULLET-PROOF VEST.

Public Tests at Sheriff's Meeting Are Successful.

Bloomington, Ill., Aug. 16.—The session of the Police Chiefs and Sheriffs' Association of Illinois was marked by a test of a bullet-proof vest. Phil Holland, the editor of the Chicago Detective allowed a revolver to be fired at him. The bullets did not penetrate the garment.

Red Men's Barbecue.

Yankton, S. D., Aug. 16.—Five thousand Red Men and their friends gathered here yesterday from all parts of South Dakota for a clam bake and barbecue, which were held at noon without a hitch.

Caught at the Icebox.

Albert Lea, Minn., Aug. 16.—George Bettinger, thirty years of age, was caught burglarizing the Albert buffet, and is now in jail. He was caught after he had the door of the refrigerator opened.

The Crimson Blind

By Fred M. White

CHAPTER XXXV—(Continued.)

"I let the man keep it," Chris went on, more slowly, with an eye to the future. "The man had stolen the thing and I was in a position to prove it. He would be pretty sure to pawn the star—he probably has done so by this time—and, therefore, we have him in our power. We have only to discover where the diamonds have been 'planted'—is that the correct expression?—I can swear an information, and the police will subsequently search the fellow's lodgings. When the search is made the missing Rembrandt will be found there. Mr. Merritt would hardly dare to pawn that."

"Even if he knew its real value, which I doubt," Bell said, thoughtfully. "Henson would not tell his tool too much. Let me congratulate you upon your idea, Miss Chris. That diamond star of yours is a powerful factor in our hands, and you always have the consciousness of knowing that you can get it back again. Now, what are you going to do next?"

"Going to call upon Mr. Merritt, of course," Chris said, promptly. "You forget that I have his address. I am deeply interested in the welfare of the criminal classes, and you are also an enthusiast. I've looked up the names of one or two people in the directory who go in for that kind of thing, and I'm going to get up a bazar at Littimer Castle for the benefit of the predatory classes who have turned over a new leaf. I am particularly anxious for Mr. Merritt to give us an address. Don't you think that will do?"

"I should think it would do very well indeed," Bell said.

The quaint and somewhat exclusive town of Moreton Wells was reached in due course, and the street where the Rev. James Merritt resided located at length. It was a modest, two-storied tenement, and the occupier of the rooms was at home. Chris pushed her way gaily in, followed by Bell, before the occupant could lay down the foul clay pipe he was smoking and button the unaccustomed stiff white collar around his throat. Merritt whipped a tumbler under the table with amazing celerity, but no cunning of his could remove the smell of gin that hung pungently on the murky atmosphere.

Merritt dodged his head back defiantly, as if half-expecting a blow. His eyes were strained a little anxiously over Bell's shoulder as if fearful of a shadow. Bell had seen the type before—Merritt was unconsciously looking for the police.

"I am so glad to find you at home," Chris said, sweetly.

Merritt muttered something that hardly sounded complimentary. It was quite evident that he was far from returning the compliment. He had recognized Bell, and was wondering, fearfully, if the latter was as sure of his identity. All the same, he was following Merritt's uneasy eye till it rested on a roll of dirty paper on the mantel shelf. That roll of paper was the missing Rembrandt, and he knew it.

"Won't you offer me a chair?" Chris asked, in the sweetest possible manner.

Merritt sulkily emptied a chair of a pile of cheap sporting papers, and demanded, none too politely, what business the lady had with him. Chris proceeded to explain at considerable length. As Merritt listened his eyes gleamed, and a broadened grin spread over his face. He had done a great deal of that kind of thing, he admitted. Since Henson had taken him up the police had not been anything like as inquisitive, and his present pose was fruitful of large predatory gains. The latter fact Merritt kept to himself. On the whole the prospect appealed to his imagination. Henson wouldn't like it; but, then Henson was not in a position to say too much.

"I thought, perhaps, if you came over and dined with us at the castle," Chris suggested. She spoke slowly and thoughtfully, with her eyes on the ground. "Say to-night. Will you come?"

Merritt grinned extensively once more. The idea of his dining at the castle appealed to his own peculiar sense of humor. He was at his ease, seeing that Bell failed to recognize him. To dine at the castle, to note the plate, and get a minute geographical knowledge of the place from personal observation. His mouth watered at the thought.

"They ought to be more carful yonder," he suggested. "There's plate and there's pictures."

"Nothing has ever been stolen from Littimer Castle," Bell said, crisply. He read the leer in Merritt's eyes as he spoke of pictures. "Nothing whatever."

"What, not lately?" Merritt asked. "Didn't I hear tell of a—"

He paused, conscious of saying too much. Bell shook his head again. An utterly-puzzled expression crept over Mr. Merritt's engaging countenance. At the present moment an art treasure of price stood in that very room, and here was a party from the castle utterly ignorant of the 'robbery.' Chris glanced at Bell and smiled.

"I love the pictures," she said, "especially the prints. That Rembrandt, 'The Crimson Blind,' for instance. I found a fresh light on it this morning, and called Lord Littimer's attention to it before we started. I should lock that up if it were mine."

Merritt's eyes fairly bulged as he listened. Had he not suspected some deep "plant" he would have been vastly amused. But then, he had got the very picture those people were speaking about close at hand at the very moment.

"Tell you what," he said, suddenly. "I ain't used to swell society ways, but I'm always ready to sacrifice myself to the poor fellows who ain't found the straight path like me. And if you gets up your bazar, I'll do what I can to help."

"Then you will dine with us to-night?" Chris asked, eagerly. "Don't say no. I met a man once with a past like yours at Lady Roslingham's, and he was so interesting. We will call for you in an hour's time with the wagonette. Then we can settle half our plans before dinner."

Merritt was graciously pleased to be agreeable. Moreover, he was utterly puzzled and absolutely consumed with an overpowering curiosity. It seemed also to him a sheer waste of Providence to discard such an offer. And the plate at Littimer Castle was superb!

Meanwhile Chris and Bell walked down the street together. "He was puzzled over the Rembrandt," Chris said. "Seeing that he has our picture—"

"No doubt about it. The picture was rolled up and stood on the mantelshelf. I followed Merritt's gaze, knowing perfectly well that it would rest presently on the picture if it was in the room. At the same time our interested friend, in chuckling over the way he has deceived us, clean forgot the yellow pawn ticket lying on the table."

"Dr. Bell, do you mean to say that—"

"That I know where you diamond star is pledged. Indeed, I do. Merritt had probably just turned out his pockets as we entered. The pawn ticket was on the table, and related to a diamond aigrette pawned by one James Merritt—mark the simple cunning of the man—with Messrs. Rutter & Co., 117 High street. That in itself, is an exceedingly valuable discovery, and one we can afford to keep to ourselves for the present. At the same time, I should like very much to know what Rutter & Co. are like. Let me go down to the shop and make some simple purchase."

Rutter & Co. proved to be a very high-class shop, indeed, despite the fact that there was a pawnbroking branch of the business. The place was quite worthy of Bond street, the stock was brilliant and substantial, the assistants quite above the provincial class. As Bell was turning over some sleeve-links Chris was examining a case of silver and gold cigarette cases and the like. She picked up a cigar-case, at length, and asked the price. At the mention of fifty guineas, she dropped the trifle with a little moue of surprise.

"It looks as if it had been used," she said.

"It is not absolutely new, madam," the assistant admitted, "therefore, the price is low. But the gentleman who sold it to us proved that he had only had it for a few days. The doctor had ordered him not to smoke in future, and so—"

Chis turned away to something else. Bell completed his purchases, and together they left the shop. Once outside, Chris gripped her companion's arm excitedly.

"Another great discovery!" she said. "Did you see me looking at that cigar-case—a gun-metal one set with diamonds? You recollect that Ruth Gates purchased a case like that for that—that foolishness we thought of in connection with Mr. Steel. The case had a little arrow-shaped scratch, with the head of the arrow formed of the biggest diamond. Enid told me all this the night before I left Longdean Grange. Dr. Bell, I am absolutely certain that I have had in my hand just now the very case bought by Ruth from Lockhart's in Brighton!"

CHAPTER XXXVI.

A Brilliant Idea.

Bell was considerably impressed with the importance of Chris' discovery, although at the same time he was not disposed to regard it in the light of a coincidence.

"It's a useful discovery in its way," he said; but not very remarkable when you come to think of it. Somebody with an eye to damaging Steel changed that cigar-case. How the change affected Steel you know as well as I do. But the cigar-case purchased by Ruth Gates must be somewhere, and we are as likely to find it near Reginald Henson as anywhere else, seeing that he is at the bottom of the whole business. That change was made either by himself or by somebody at his instigation. Once the change was made, he would not bother about the spare cigar-case. His ally probably came here to see Henson; the latter, as likely as not, threw him over, knowing that the fellow would not dare to talk; hence, the thing is turned into money. I am merely speculating, of course, under the assumption that you are quite sure of your facts."

"Absolutely!" Chris cried, eagerly. "Two long, irregular scratches leading up in arrow-headed shape to the big diamond in the center. Ruth told Enid all about that, the very last time they discussed the matter together."

"How came Ruth Gates to remember it so clearly?"

"Well, she did it herself. She was rubbing some specks off the case at the last moment, and the scratches were made accidentally with the stones in one of her rings."

Bell was fain to admit that the discovery was an important one. "We'll leave it for the present," he said. "In a small place like this so valuable an article is likely to remain in stock for some time. I'll call again to-morrow, on the pretense of getting further goods, and obtain all the information there is to be gained as to who sold the case and what he was like. There is just time for a little lunch before we take up our reverend friend. Where shall we go?"

Chris would like to see the Lion. There was a marvelous coffee room there, with pannelled walls and a ceiling by Pugin, and an ingle-nook filled with rare Dutch tiles. They had the beautiful old place by themselves, so that they could talk freely. Chris crumbled her bread and sipped her soup with an air of deep abstraction.

"A great idea is forming itself in my mind," she said.

"What, another one?" Bell smiled. "Is it the air of the place, or what? Really, there is a brilliancy about you that is striking."

Chris laughed. She was full of the joy of life to-day.

"It is the freedom," she said. "If you only knew what it is to feel free after the dull, aching, monotonous misery of the last few years. To be constantly on the treadmill, to be in the grasp of a pitiless scoundrel. At first you fight against it passionately, with a longing to do something, and gradually you give way to despair. And now the weight is off my shoulders, and I am free to act. Fancy the reward of finding Reginald Henson out!"

"Reginald Henson is the blight upon your house. In what way?"

"Ah, I cannot tell you. It is a secret that we never discuss, even among ourselves. But he has the power over us, he has blighted all our lives. But if I could get hold of a certain thing the power would be broken. That is what I am after, what I am working for. And it is in connection with my endeavor that the new idea came to me."

"Can't you give me some general idea of it?" Bell asked.

"Well, I want to make Merritt my friend. I want him to imagine that I am as much of an adventuress as he is an adventurer. I want to let him see that I could send him to prison—"

"So you can, by telling the police of the loss of your star."

"And getting Merritt arrested and sent to gaol, where I couldn't make use of him? No, no. The thing is pretty vague in my mind at present. I have to work it out as one would a story; as David Steel would work it out, for instance. Ah!"

Chis clapped her hands rapturously, and a little cry of delight escaped her.

"The very thing!" she exclaimed. "If I could lay all the facts before Mr. Steel, and get him to plan out all the details! His fertile imagination would see a way out at once. But he is far away, and there is no time to be lost. Is there no way of getting at him?"

Chris appealed, almost imploringly, to her companion. She made a pretty picture, with the old oak engravings behind her. Bell smiled as he helped himself to asparagus.

"Why not adopt the same method by which you originally introduced yourself to the distinguished novelist" he asked. "Why not use Littimer's telephone?"

Chris pushed her plate away, impetuously.

"I am too excited to eat any more," she said. "I am filled with a new idea. Of course, I could use the telephone to speak to Mr. Steel, and to Enid, as well. If the scheme works out as I anticipate I shall have to hold a long conversation with Enid, a dangerous thing so long as Reginald Henson is about."

"I'll keep Henson out of the way. The best thing is to wait until everybody has gone to bed to-night, and call Steel up then. You will be certain to get him after eleven, and there will be no chance of your being cut off at that hour of the night in consequence of somebody else wanting the line. The same remark applies to your sister."

Chris nodded, radiantly.

"Thrice blessed telephone," she said. "I can get in all I want without committing myself to paper or moving from the spot where my presence is urgently needed. We will give Mr. Steel a pleasant surprise to-night, and this time I shall get him into no trouble."

The luncheon was finished at length, and an intimation sent to Merritt that his friends were waiting for him at the Lion. As his powerful figure was seen entering the big Norman porch Henson came down the street driving a dog-cart at a dangerous rate of speed.

"Our man is going to have his trouble for his pains," Bell chuckled. "He has come to interview Merritt. How pleased he will be to see Merritt at dinner time."

Merritt shambled in awkwardly, obviously suppressing a desire to touch his forelock. There was a sheepish grin on his face, a suppressed triumph in his eye. He had been recently shaved and his hair cut; but, despite these improvements, and despite his clerical garb, he was not exactly the class of man to meet in a dark lane after sunset.

Chris, however, showed nothing of this in her greeting. Long before Littimer Castle was reached she had succeeded in putting Merritt quite at his ease. He talked of himself and his past exploits, he boasted of his cunning. It was only now and again that he pulled himself up and piously referred to the new life that he was now leading. Bell was studying him carefully; he read the other's mind like an open book. When the wagonette finally pulled up before the castle, Littimer strolled up and stood there, regarding Merritt quietly.

"So this is the gentleman you were going to bring to dinner?" he said, grimly. "I have seen him before, in the company of our dear Reginald. I also—"

Chris shot Littimer an imploring glance. Merritt grinned, in friendly fashion. Bell, in his tactful way, piloted the strange guest to the library before Littimer and Chris had reached the hall. The former polished up his eye-glass and regarded Chris critically.

"My dearest young lady," he said, smoothly, "originality is a passion with me, eccentricity draws me as a magnet; but as yet I have refrained from sitting down at table with ticket-of-leave men. Your friend has 'convict' writ large upon his face."

"He has been in gaol, of course," Chris admitted, cheerfully.

"Then let me prophesy, and declare that he will be in gaol again. Why bring him here?"

"Because it is absolutely necessary," Chris said, boldly. "That man can help me—help us, Lord Littimer. I am not altogether what I seem. There is a scoundrel in your house, compared with whom James Merritt is an innocent child. That scoundrel has blighted your life and the lives of your family; he has blighted my life for years. And I am here to expose him, and I am here to right the wrong and bring back the lost happiness of us all. I cannot say more, but I implore you to let me have my own way in this matter."

"Oh!" Littimer said, darkly, "so you are masquerading here?"

"I am. I admit it. Turn me out if you like; refuse to be a party to my scheme. You may think badly of me now, probably you will think worse of me later on. But I swear to you that I am acting with the best and purest motives, and in your interest as much as my own."

"Then you are not entitled even to the name you bear?"

"No; I admit it, freely. Consider, I need not have told you anything. Things cannot be any worse than they are. Let me try and make them better. Will you, will you trust me?"

Chris' voice quivered, there were tears in her eyes. With a sudden impulse Littimer laid his hands upon her shoulders and looked long and searchingly into her eyes.

"Very well," he said, with a gentle sigh. "I will trust you. As a matter of fact, I have felt that I could trust you from the first. I won't pry into your schemes, because if they are successful I shall benefit by them. And if you like to bring a cartload of convicts down here, pray do so. It will only puzzle the neighbors and drive me mad with curiosity, and I love that."

"And will you back me up in all I say and do?" Chris asked.

"Certainly I will. On the whole, I fancy I am going to have a pleasant evening. I don't think dear Reginald will be pleased to see his friend at dinner. If any of the spoons are missing I shall hold you responsible."

Chris went off to her room, well pleased with the turn of events. Brilliant audacity had succeeded where a timid policy might have resulted in dismal failure. And Littimer had refrained from asking any awkward questions. From the window he could see Bell and Merritt walking up and down the terrace, the latter talking volubly, and worrying at a big cigar as a dog might nuzzle at a bone. Chris saw Littimer join the other two presently, and fall in with the conversation. His laugh came to the girl's ear more than once. It was quite evident that that eccentric nobleman was enjoying the ex-convict's society. But Littimer had never been fettered by conventional rules.

The dog-cart came up presently, and Henson got out. He had an anxious, worried look; there was an ugly frown between his brows. He contrived to be polite as Chris emerged. He wanted to know where Littimer was.

"On the terrace, I fancy," Chris said, demurely. "I guess he is having a long chat with that parson friend of yours—the brand plucked from the burning, you know."

"Merritt!" Henson said, hoarsely. "Do you mean to say that Merritt is here? And I've been looking for—I mean, I have been to Moreton Wells. Why did he come?"

Chris opened her eyes in innocent surprise.

"Why," she said, "I fetched him. I'm deeply interested in brands of that kind."

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Another Telephone Message.

Henson forced a smile to his face and a hand from his side as he approached Merritt and the rest. It was not until the two found themselves alone that the mask dropped.

"You infernally insolent scoundrel!" Henson said, between his teeth. "How dare you come here? You've done your work for the present, and the sooner you go back to your kennel in London, the better. If I imagined that you meant any harm I'd crush you altogether!"

"I didn't come on my own," Merritt whined. "So keep your 'air on. That young lady came and fetched me—regular gone on me, she is. And there's to be jinks 'ere—a bazar for the benefit of pore criminals as can't get work to do. You 'eard what 'is lordship said. And I'm goin' to make a speech, like as I used to gull the chaplains. Lor', it's funny, ain't it?"

Henson failed to see the humor of the situation. He was uneasy and suspicious. Moreover, he was puzzled by this American girl, and he hated to be puzzled. She had social aspirations, of course; she cared nothing for decayed or reformed criminals, and this silly bazar was only designed so that the ambitious girl could find her way into the county set. Then she would choose a husband, and nothing more would be heard of Merritt & Co. Henson had a vague notion that all American girls are on the look-out for English husbands of the titled order.

"Littimer must be mad!" he muttered. "I can't understand Littimer. Which reminds me that I have a crow to pluck with you. Why didn't you do as I told you last night?"

"Did," Merritt said, curtly. "Got the picture and took it home with me."

"You liar! The picture is in the corridor at the present time."

"Liar yourself! I've got the picture on my mantel shelf in my sitting room, rolled up as you told me to roll it and tied with a piece of cotton. It was your own idea as the thing was to be left about casual-like, as being less calculated to excite suspicion. And there it is at the present moment, and I'll take my hoath to it."

Henson fairly gasped. He had been inside that said sitting room not two hours before, and he had not failed to notice a roll of paper on the mantle shelf. And, obviously, Merritt was telling the truth. And, equally obviously, the Rembrandt was hanging in the corridor at the present moment. Henson had solved and evolved many ingenious puzzles in his time, but this one was utterly beyond him.

"Some trick of Dr. Bell's, perhaps," Merritt suggested.

"Bell suspects nothing. He is absolutely friendly to me. He could not disguise his feelings like that. Upon my word, I was never so utterly at sea in all my life. And, as for Littimer, why, he has just made a fresh will more in my favor than the old one. But I'll find out. I'll get at the bottom of this business if it costs me a fortune."

He frowned moodily at his boots; he turned the thing over in his mind until his brain was dazed and muddled. The Rembrandt had been stolen, and yet there was the Rembrandt in its place. Was anything more amazing and puzzling? And nobody else seemed in the least troubled about it. Henson was more than puzzled; deep down in his heart he was frightened.

"I must keep my eyes open," he said. "I must watch day and night. Do you suppose Miss Lee noticed anything when she called to-day?"

"Not a bit of it," said Merritt, confidently. "She came to see me; she had no eyes for anybody but your humble servant. Where did she get my address from? Why, didn't you introduce me to the lady yourself, and didn't I tell her I was staying at Moreton Wells for a time? I'm goin' to live in clover for a bit, my pippin. Cigars and champagne, wine and the rest of it."

"I wish you were at the bottom of the sea before you came here," Henson growled. "You mind and be careful what you're doing with the champagne. They don't drink by the tumbler in the society you are in now, remember. Just one or two glasses and no more. If you talk too much and let your tongue run, your stay here will be pretty short."

Apparently the hint was not lost on Merritt, for dinner found him in a chastened mood. His natural audicity was depressed by the splendour and luxury around him; the moral atmosphere held him down. There were so many knives and forks and glasses on the table, such a deal of food that was absolutely strange to him. The butler behind him made him shiver. Hitherto in Merritt's investigations into great houses he had fought particularly shy of butlers and coachmen and upper servants of that kind. The butler's sniff and his cold suggestion as to hock slightly raised Merritt's combative spirit. And the champagne was poor, thin stuff, after all. A jorum of gin and water or a mug of beer was what Merritt's soul longed for.

ALPHABET ON A PINHEAD.

Feat in Engraving Accomplished by William L. McLean of Gloversville.

William L. McLean of Gloversville has engraved on the head of an ordinary brass pin the entire alphabet in script capital letters. The work was done with an ordinary engraving tool, with the aid of a powerful magnifying glass.

The alphabet is arranged in two circles around the pin, four letters which it was impossible to include in them being placed in the center. No part of one letter touches another.

In the first circles are all the letters up to and including M. A smaller circle contains the letters which follow up to V, while in the center are the four remaining letters.

A few years ago Mr. McLean engraved the Lord's Prayer upon a silver 5-cent piece.—Utica (N. Y.) Dispatch to New York Sun.

Some Shop Talk.

It was midnight in the machine shop, and all was silent until the rasping voice of the file was heard to say:

"I have rubbed up against lots of hard things in my life, but this Harveyized steel job has completely worn me out."

"Well," said the lathe, sympathetically, "I have done many a hard turn myself."

"Life is a great bore," supplemented the gimlet."

"A continual grind," put in the emery wheel, roughly.

"With many a broken thread," added the steam pipe, in hollow accents.

"Calm yourselves," advised the damaged fly wheel, "there may be a revolution soon."

"Don't mind him," said the soldering fluid, acidly. "Everyone knows he is cracked."

And in the confusion that followed the gas escaped.—Judge.

Could Be Worse.

"Life is a hollow mockery!" groaned the pessimistic person.

"Not so bad as that," soothingly said the optimist.

"But it is," averred the pessimist. "Could anyone have as much bad luck as I? Disappointed in love; failed in business; property stolen, burned, shipwrecked and lost; blown up by cyclones and burned by volcanoes, kicked by mules and stung by mosquitoes; thrown out of hotels because of my poor garb; barred from charity hospitals because of my respectable appearance; arrested for fast driving in my automobile; slammed against the roadway and telegraph poles."—Baltimore American.

The Pompadour Is Going!

The pompadour has been given all sorts of treatment. It has stood aloft on the head, like a mound of earth, has been pitched out over the forehead like a shade for the eyes, has been loosened out and let go into crinkles and waves, and now it is drawn into a bunch and suspended over the left eye, where it will stay for a little while. The big, aggressive pompadour, however, has not many months before it. Curls and crinkles and low chignons are being brought to us from Paris. We are loth to let the pompadour go, for it has stood by us for three long years.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

"Stonewall" Jackson's Baptism.

Robert E. Lee and Thomas Jonathan ("Stonewall") Jackson were once stationed at Fort Hamilton, New York harbor, the former while it was being built. Jackson was baptized at old St. John's church, at Fort Hamilton, and the records contain the following entry: "On Sunday, 26th of April, 1849, I baptized Thomas Jonathan Jackson, major in the United States army; sponsors, Colonels Taylor and Dimmick, also of the army." The baptismal font used for this occasion is still preserved.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

The Logic of the Lunatic.

The sometimes faultless logic of the lunatic is delightfully illustrated in the following dialogue:

A visitor to an asylum saw a man capering along the hall astride of a stick. "Ah, ha!" said the visitor, wishing to be pleasant, "I see you are having a fine ride on your horse."

"This isn't a horse," answered the lunatic, contemptuously.

"Not a horse—what is it, then?"

"It's a hobby," was the reply. "If it was a horse I could get off."—London Chronicle.

Rain falls alike upon the just and unjust, but the latter use it as a chaser.

A Great Privilege.

"Lemme hav a chaw uv terbacker, Jim?" asked a street waif of the pugilist star of the alley.

"Nope," replied Jim, patronizingly, "but I'll let yer watch me spit."—Baltimore News.

A Successful Experiment.

A New York woman washed her carpets with gasoline. She did it so thoroughly that she will never have to do it again.

There was no insurance on the carpets, but she collected $1,550 on the house.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Jury Disagreed.

"Doctor," said the Cannibal King to his court physician, "I'm feeling mighty bad this morning. My stomach is all out of order."

"Um-m-m!" mused the court physician. "Been eating some more of those rich foreigners?"

"No," moaned the king. "The last banquet we had was twelve men that claimed to have been professional jurymen at home."

"Well," advised the court physician, "you had better send for your attorney general. The jury must have disagreed, and he should take charge of the case."—Judge.

Couldn't Live Without Them.

New York City, Aug. 18th.—Mr. Charles Back of 64 Rue de la Victoire, Paris, France, relates a most interesting experience:

"Ever since I was about three years of age I have suffered severely with Kidney Disease.

"Last year I spent some time at the baths at Carlsbad (Bohemia,) but I came back after five weeks' treatment with a severe pain still in my Kidneys.

"My doctors in Paris and Hamburg could do nothing for me.

"I was obliged to start from Paris to Montreal, Canada, and when I arrived in the Canadian city I was half dead.

"I read an advertisement of Dodd's Kidney Pills in a newspaper there, and began to use this remedy, and after two days' treatment I felt that my pains were leaving me, and in a week I had no pains at all.

"Dodd's Kidney Pills are the most wonderful remedy in the world. I keep them always with me, for I believe I could not live without them."

No Plus Ultra.

"How dare you try to kiss me?" she cried, indignantly. "Don't you know any better?"

"If I did try to kiss her," replied he, "but, really, you're the best ever."—

SEQUENCE OF CALAMITIES

"Misfortunes never come singly," is a proverb well known in every language and devoutly believed by the people of every nation. There seems something fatalistic in the promptitude with which calamities tread on one another's heels. One of the earliest sacred books of the Jewish canon furnishes an illustration in point, for in a single day the oxen and sheep, the camels and other beasts of burden of the patriarch of Uz were swept away, his servants were slain, his children destroyed, the messengers following each other so quickly that hardly was there time for one dismal narrative to end ere another began. But we do not need to go as far back as the days of Job to find examples of the rapid sequence of misfortunes, according to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. Every one knows that one accident or disaster is certain to be followed by another, sometimes of similar character, and having a visible connection with its predecessor, sometimes entirely dissociated, so far as appearances go, from everything that has preceded. The clustering of accidents is well known among men in particular lines of business.

Every railroad superintendent knows perfectly well that an accident involving considerable loss of life will within a few days be followed by another so similar in its leading features as to make it seem as though the second had been carefully prepared on the details and after the plan of the first. All fire departments understand that a great conflagration is usually followed by a second and often by a third within a few days; insurance men have noticed that a fire occurring in a building devoted to an unusual occupation is also followed at a short interval by a second fire in a similar line, and that the rule also applies to buildings devoted to a particular, often common, kind of business. For a month or two it sometimes seems to the insurance men that all the hat stores in the country are devoted to destruction; then for a long time the hat stores will have immunity, while the shoe stores, dry-goods stores and groceries are burning. The principle even applies to smaller accidents and misfortunes.

A surgeon in a large manufacturing plant bears testimony to the queer fact that whenever a mechanic comes in with an injured thumb, necessitating amputation, another accident of identical character will occur within three days. No explanation is furnished, perhaps in our present state of knowledge no explanation is possible, but the fact that one accident follows another without visible connection is too well known to be doubted.

SHADOWING A TELLER

"I have had all sorts of experiences," said a Pinkerton detective whom I met at luncheon in a Broadway restaurant Friday noon, "but last night I had an entirely new one. Two days ago the president of a Wall street banking house sent for me and said that he feared there was something wrong with his assistant teller, who appeared to be laboring under some excitement, and who showed signs of late hours and dissipation. I was asked to shadow him and to look out for evidence of irregularities.

"It was then noon and I started at once by following my man to a cheap restaurant in Ann street. I supposed that he was going to his luncheon, but he went into a telephone booth and closed the door. It was impossible for me to hear with whom he was talking, so I went to the proprietor of the place and made some inquiries, and learned that my man telephoned every day at that time and seldom bought more than a sandwich.

"That day he paid the telephone toll but bought nothing. As I followed him into the street I made up my mind that he was in communication with a stock broker, and that financial trouble in Wall street was the cause of his strange actions. That was nothing new in my experience.

"When he left the bank that afternoon he was in a great hurry, and I followed him toward his home, in St. Nicholas avenue, in the car behind the one he was in; but by some means he gave me the slip, for he didn't get off at the corner nearest his home or for several blocks afterward, as far as I saw. I went to his apartment to wait for him, and meeting a little girl just entering the street door, I inquired if she knew him.

"'He is my papa,' she answered, 'and will be home in a few minutes. He always stops to see the doctor after he leaves the bank, because mamma is very ill and we are afraid she will die. The doctor comes every noon and telephones to papa, and then he stops there on his way home. If you will come in you won't have long to wait, or you can call again, for he never leaves mamma after he comes home, and sits up all night with her.'

"I said that I might call again, but instead I went to the home of the bank president and made my report. This morning that teller got a letter from the bank granting him two weeks' vacation and telling him that his salary was increased $20 a month."—New York Herald.

OUR POPULATION IN 1910

An interview with Census Commissioner Merriam in which he predicted 100,000,000 as the total population of the United States in 1910 has been commented upon in some quarters as extravagant and as probably wide of the mark.

The official count of two years ago gave the population at that time as 76,303,300, and it showed that these have been the percentages of increase between censuses since 1870, not taking into account Alaska, Hawaii, Indian Territory or the Indian reservations: From 1870 to 1880, 30 per cent; from 1880 to 1890, 24 per cent; from 1890 to 1900, 20 per cent.

It is a well established rule in the computation of population that as the number of inhabitants increases, the percentage of gain declines, and should the population of the states and territories of the United States increase in the present decade in no greater ratio than 15 per cent, which is abnormally small and below the record of any previous decade in the country's history, there would be a gain of 10,250,000 in population, which, with the addition of 750,000 for Alaska, Hawaii and Indian Territory, would bring up the total to more than 88,000,000, without making any account of the increase in population of the American islands in the Pacific or an increase in the population of Alaska.

There are now 9,000,000 inhabitants in the Philippine Islands and 950,000 in Porto Rico, and even without any allowance for gain in either, the total population of the United States and the countries under its sovereignty would be 98,583,000.

Under these circumstances, an estimate of 100,000,000 Americans under the Stars and Stripes eight years hence, so far from being extravagant, is really quite modest and conservative, and there does not appear to be any reason why the total population of the country in 1900 should not considerably exceed, as it probably will, that figure.

If the present rate of immigration continues, the rate of increase in population will be much beyond the 15 per cent.

Mountain dew has caused torrents of trouble.

DINGY, LOW-BUILT LONDON.

Described as a Workshop, a Salesroom and a Sleeping Apartment.

London is not a beautiful city. It has a dingy, though comfortable look. Paris is a grand garden of glory; London is a workshop, a salesroom and a sleeping apartment. The English metropolis is blessed with a multitude of parks, which afford the breathing place for the enormous population, but the parks are largely open meadows unspotted with statues and unadorned with art galleries and museums. There are no sky-scraping structures in London. They are not allowed. Valuable as land is—in the city proper it sells at $5,000,000 an acre!—the use of the sky for building sites is not permitted, and there are few structures over five or six stories in height. More than this—there are open courts and grass plots in the very midst of the most intense life, and space set apart in this way is not thought wasted. The American buys a lot of ground 150 by 25 feet in a city for building purposes and builds on every inch of it. The Englishman saves at least a third for a court yard or a grass plot.—Columbia Herald.

Future of Senator Platt.

There is still some talk that Senator Thomas C. Platt may retire at the close of his present term. It is recalled, in connection with this rumor, that since Thurlow Weed's day every leader of the Republican party in New York state has been a United States senator—William H. Seward, Reuben E. Fenton, Roscoe Conkling and Thomas Collier Platt. It is said that though Senator Platt is certain of election he would not, even in that event, serve another full term.

Gift of Emperor of Japan.

The Emperor of Japan has sent to the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, through Sir Claude McDonald, the British minister at Tokio, a portrait of himself for the Passmore Edwards' Sailors' palace, which is the society's new headquarters in London. The portrait will be hung beside those of the English, German, Dutch and Russian rulers.

SLAUGHTER OF THE BUFFALO.

Thirty-one Million of Them Were Killed in Thirteen Years.

In the forties, when the American Fur Co. was in the heyday of its power, there were sent from St. Louis alone in a single year 100,000 robes; and the company bought only the perfect ones. The hunter usually kept an ample supply for his own needs, so that for every robe bought by the company three times as many were taken from the plains. St. Louis was only one port of shipment. Equal quantities of robes were being sent from Mackinaw, Detroit, Montreal and Hudson bay. A million would not cover the number of robes sent each year in the forties. In 1868 Inman, Sheridan and Custer rode continuously for three days through one herd in the Arkansas region; and in 1869 trains on the Kansas Pacific were held from nine in the morning until six at night to permit the passage of one herd across the tracks. Army officers relate that in 1862 a herd that covered an area of seventy by thirty miles moved north from the Arkansas to the Yellowstone. Catlin and Inman and army men and employes of the fur companies considered a drove of 100,000 buffalo a common sight along the line of the Santa Fe trail. Inman computes that from St. Louis alone the bones of thirty-one million buffalo were shipped between 1868 and 1881.

HOW GRANT GAVE ORDERS.

Promptness in Decision Characteristic of the Man.

"Grant was a great smoker even when I knew him," says Mr. Weber, a Missouri neighbor of Grant's farming days, "but he wasn't a good talker. When it came to action, though, he never was at a loss." Mr. Dent, his father-in-law, owned a fine specimen of Durham bull. The big animal was as powerful and as vicious as any I have ever seen. He broke through every fence that was put about him, and the farmers for miles around suffered ruined orchards and devastated garden patches. The animal would go among the trees, and, dashing from right to left, would scatter the fruit on the ground for yards about. One day, after a night in which the old fellow had been especially annoying, we sent over to the Dent place for aid. Grant rode back with our messenger. The bull was racing about the fields, terrorizing the neighborhood. Grant asked two or three questions as to losses, then he told some one to get a spoke.

"'Now,' he said, as if he were directing a simple task, 'catch the bull and tie this in his mouth, bit fashion.'

"If anyone else had made the suggestion he would have been laughed at, but Grant's direction was taken as a command. He took no part in the proceedings, but turned his horse about and rode away. The men went out, caught the animal, gagged him, and turned him loose again. After a few days of starving he was completely broken of his bad habit."

SEAMY SIDE OF LIFE.

Pathetic Incident Noted in a New York Barroom.

The lines of dissipation were ill concealed by rouge and powder, and she was singing a ribald song in the back room of a Houston street saloon, when a younger girl entered with a man of more than twice her age, says the New York Times.

The wayward girl's voice left her, and she gazed in horror at the fair youngster holding a glass of whisky in her hand. She got up, went quietly over to the table, and said to the man:

"You go, or I'll have you arrested for bringing a child in here, and don't you ever dare to follow this baby again."

The man slunk away.

"Now go home, dearie," begged the other girl, with a strange tremor in her voice, "and be a good girl. You don't want to be like me. It's worse'n hell to be bad. Come, I'll see you to the door."

And the two went out.

"The youngun's her sister," said the bartender.

What Constitutes "News."

The Buffalo Commercial says that Charles A. Dana once defined news in this way: "If you see a dog biting a man don't write it up. But if you see a man biting a dog spare no pains or money to get the details to the Sun office." This is a poor paraphrase of a good story. When "Doc" Wood was night editor of the Sun a young reporter asked him: "What constitutes news?" Mr. Wood considered for a moment and then replied: "Here's an illustration which will probably give you a correct idea of what I think on that subject. If you should see a dog running down Broadway with a tin can tied to his tail it isn't worth a line. But if you should see a dog with a tin can tied to his tail—walking down Broadway it's worth a column."

A Matter of Fractions.

A West Philadelphia boy whose grandmother had been attractive enough when made a widow to marry the second time, recently asked his mother:

"Why doesn't Uncle Will call grandpa 'Father?'"

"Because Grandpa isn't Uncle Will's father," she replied.

"Then he can't be your brother, mamma," said the lad.

"O! yes, dear; he is my half-brother."

"Your half-brother?" asked the child, amazed. "Where's the other half?"

"I SUFFERED TERRIBLY WITH FEMALE WEAKNESS;"
SAYS MRS. ESTHER M. MILNER.

"I Had the Headache Continually---Could Not Do My Work---Pe-ru-na Cured."

Mrs. Esther M. Milner, DeGraff, Ohio; writes:

"I was a terrible sufferer from female weakness and had the headache continually. I was not able to do my housework for my husband and myself. I wrote you and described my condition as near as possible. You recommended Peruna. I took four bottles and was completely cured. I think Peruna a wonderful medicine and have recommended it to my friends with best results." —Mrs. E. M. Milner.

Miss Mamie Groth, Platteville, Wis., writes: "Accept a grateful girl's thanks for the wonderful help I have received through the use of Peruna. Although I looked well and strong I have for several years suffered with frequent backache and would for several days have splitting headaches. I did not wish to fill my system with poisonous drugs, and so when several of my friends advised me to take Peruna, I asked my physician what he thought of it. He recommended it and so I took it and am entirely without pain of any kind now." —Miss Mamie Groth.

Dr. S. B. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, has had over fifty years experience in the treatment of female catarrhal diseases. He advises women free of charge. If you are suffering from any female derangement write him a description of your symptoms and he will give you the benefit of his experience in the treatment of women's diseases.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case, and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Cuticura SOAP MEDICINAL TOILET

BABY'S DELIGHT

MOTHER'S COMFORT

FOR IRRITATIONS, CHAFINGS, ITCHINGS, Rashes, Heat, Perspiration, Lameness, and Soreness no other application so soothing, cooling, and healing as a bath with CUTICURA SOAP, followed by gentle anointings with CUTICURA, the Great Skin Cure. It means instant relief for skin-tortured babies and rest for tired mothers.

No amount of persuasion can induce mothers who have once used these great skin purifiers and beautifiers to use any others for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, scalp, hair, and hands of infants and children. CUTICURA SOAP combines delicate emollient properties derived from CUTICURA, the great skin cure, with the purest of cleansing ingredients, and the most refreshing of flower odours. Together they form the only speedy, economical, and infallible cure of itching, scaly, and crusted humours, rashes, and irritations of the skin, scalp, and hair from infancy to age. Guaranteed absolutely pure.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured
by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

POLITICAL NOTES.

Leonard Erickson, of Warren manager of Andrew Grindeland's congressional campaign, has sent out the following letter to supposed Grindeland supporters all over the district:

Will you kindly send us an interview bearing upon the congressional situation of this district, particularly emphasizing Mr. Grindeland's chances of success in your county—the more rosy the better.

We are trying to arrange for the publication of several interviews from prominent men throughout the district and I trust that yours may be one of the most encouraging.

Mr. Erickson evidently believes that some loud whistling will have to be done to keep the boys in line.

The Fergus Falls Free Press, published in the heart of the Ninth congressional district, says: "The contest today is between Valentine and Steenerson with the chances greatly in favor of Valentine".

Thomas A. Crompe, candidate for the Republican nomination of register of deeds of Red Lake county, was in the city yesterday. Mr. Crompe received the assurance of considerable support here, and was well pleased with the outlook. He is one of the most popular men of southern Red Lake county and secure a big vote down there.

A. E. Burgland of Thorwick, Marshall county, was in the city Tuesday. The sentiment in his town is becoming stronger for Valentine every day, and Mr. Burgland is of the opinion that Valentine will receive more than half of the votes in the town of Holt.

This is the way the Fergus Falls Globe comments on the "Steenerson club" organized in that city:—

They have a stuffed political club in this city, the work of a shady character, who has loafed here a month or two in a pay of a congressional candidate.

Henry Wiggie, of Ringbo, Marshall county, was in the city last Saturday. Mr. Wiggie is for Valentine for congressman first, last and all the time, and he told the people here in no uncertain words that Valentine would secure a big vote in his portion of Marshall county.

W. C. Smiley was down to Red Lake Falls last week and filed as a candidate for the Republican nomination for county surveyor. Mr. Smiley is a thoroughly competent man for this position, and will greatly strengthen the ticket in this section.

Thomas Germo, who will secure the Republican nomination for county attorney without opposition, was in the city yesterday. Mr. Germo is of the opinion that the Republicans will win out all along the line in Red Lake county this year.

Carl Steinbaur, of Holt, Marshall county, was in the city Tuesday. Mr. Steinbaur says that a large number of his neighbors are supporting Ezra G. Valentine for congressman and that Grindeland will not carry that township.

Orbin Hamory, candidate for the People's Party nomination for register of deeds, was in the city last week. His father run for this office two years ago, and Orbin is a chip of the old block.

Herb Forder, of the town of Rollis, Marshall county, was in the city last week. Mr. Forder is a strong supporter of Ezra G. Valentine for congress, and says that most of the boys in his section are going to vote for the Breckenridge man. They believe that his work as president of the state drainage board entitles him to the support of the farmers. Mr. Forder says that many who a short time ago were for Grindeland—and who still have the kindest feeling for that gentleman—are now announcing themselves for Valentine.

C. G. Rapp, of St. Hilaire, announces that he will not again be a candidate for the Republican nomination for representative from this district, Mr. Rapp has at all times been the choice of the people, and had he decided to make the run would have had no opposition. His reasons for not again making the run are poor health and business affairs.

From every part of the Ninth district comes the report that Valentine is making "a vigorous campaign." If there is one attribute that, more than another, the Ninth district requires in its congressman, is the capacity to do things vigorously. We want to know that our congressman is in Washington during session, without waiting till he comes home, to ask him.—Warroad Plaindealer.

The conductors, engineers, firemen, brakemen and railroad mechanics of the Ninth congressional district have all officially endorsed the candidacy of Ezra G. Valentine for the Republican nomination for congressman, Breckenridge, the home of Mr. Valentine, is a division point, and consequently there has always been a large number of railroad men employed there, and he has proven to be their firm friend on many occasions in the past. The boys evidently appreciated this, and have now endorsed his candidacy. The work was all done without Mr. Valentine's knowledge.

Dan Robertson, of Argyle, superintendent of schools of Marshall county, spent a few days in this city last week. Mr. Robertson met many Eastern Marshall county voters while here and was assured of considerable support.

Andrew Grindeland was in Crookston last Friday and the Times of that city says:

Senator Grindeland is not given to making vociferous claims of what he will do, but it is learned that he is confident of obtaining a clear majority in Norman and Kittson counties, and possibly in Red Lake county, with a very large majority in Marshall county.

We do not know much about the other counties but Grindeland will surely be the third in this county. About all the support Grindeland has in Red Lake county is in Thief River Falls.

E. J. Swedback, of Bemidji, has announced his candidacy for the Republican nomination for senator from this legislative district. Mr. Swedback says that he is "a Republican and stands squarely with the Van Sant administration," which is a good recommendation. Red Lake county, however, may have a candidate that will do the same.

Ed Moran, of Red Lake Falls was in the city yesterday. Ed states that he is a candidate for the Populist nomination for judge of probate.

County Attorney Grady has announced his candidacy for nomination on the Populist ticket.

Ezra G. Valentine was in the city Tuesday on his way to Bemidji in the interests of his candidacy for the Republican nomination for congress in the Ninth. Mr. Valentine has met with unusual flattering indorsements in the northern part of the state and now feels that there is no question but that he will easily land the nomination. Mr. Valentine is a hard campaigner and has been putting in some hard work, having practically made a house to house canvas of the district. At the primaries he will show so much strength in some localities that the opposing candidates will be greatly surprised.—East Grand Forks Valley View.

Daniel Shaw returned to this city yesterday from a business trip to St. Paul.

John Havel, editor of the Eastern Marshall County News, was in the city last week.

E. Buse, of Red Lake Falls, has for sale cheap, four heavy horses and two sets of harnesses.

Mrs. H. B. Kanfer, of Red Lake Falls, visited her daughter, Mrs. Wm. Murphy the first of the week.

Henry Knudson has sold his house in Porter's addition and expects to leave next spring for Alberta.

The ladies of St. Bernard's church will meet at the new parsonage on Thursday, Sept. 4. All are invited.

Sotheran and Cyr went to Red Lake Falls Monday with their merry-go-round and will remain there this week.

John Patterson and daughter left the first of the week for St. Paul where Miss Patterson will have her eyes treated.

O. J. and Martin Sorum left last week for Alberta, Canada, where they have purchased land and expect to locate.

Chas. Alexander left last week for Tamarac river, where he will remain until next spring scaling logs for Bulman Bros.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Borry and children leave Saturday for Minneapolis. Mr. Borry goes to attend the photographer's convention.

The first new wheat to be marketed in Thief River Falls this year was received at the O. K. mill last Saturday. It graded No. 1 Northern.

Edward Kelley and Miss Mary Zavoral were married Sunday afternoon at the home of the bride's parents on the East Side by Judge Tarrant.

Miss B. M. Remmem leaves Saturday for St. Paul to purchase her fall stock of millinery and visit friends. Miss R. M. Rust will be in charge of her store during her absence.

Everyone should attend the Minnesota State Fair which opens at Hamline, Minn. Stptember 1st. The Good Roads Exhibition given free will especially interest many of our readors. Very cheap rates to the Twin Cities via Great Northern Railway. See agent for particulars.

Eight bars of good laundry soap for 25 cents at the Brick Store.

Borry, the photographer, is going to Minneapolis Saturday August 30th, to attend the Photographer Convention. He will return Sept. 6th or the 8th.

Dr. J. G. Vigen will be at his father's place, town of New Solum, from Sept. 14 to 21, excepting on Thursday, Sept. 18 when he will be at Ole A. Lee's place in the town of Newfolden.

The good roads exhibition to be given free at the Minnesota State Fair Hamline, September 1st to 6th, will be worth to you the cost of attendance. See Great Northern agent about low rates in effect.

A large number of men and teams left this city Tuesday for North Dakota, to work in the harvest fields this fall. Among those going were Chas. Shirley, Albert Voss, George Humphry and W. W. Crawford.

T. Olson, the blacksmith, became the proud father of a daughter last Thursday. As Mr. Olson's increasing business requires the assistance of more blacksmiths, a son would probably have been more acceptable.

John Cyr has sold his barber shop here to A. N. Newman, of Aitkin, who has taken possession. The new owner will run an up-to-date shop, and solicits the patronage of the public.

The city schools will be opened on Monday for the fall term. The new high school building has not been completed, and for the first few weeks all departments will be greatly over crowded. It is doubtful if all can be accommodated.

Vaughan Bros., the progressive and up-to-date merchants of Germantown, have commenced the erection of a large new store building. When it is completed they will have the largest and best store in Eastern Marshall county.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Crowe very pleasantly entertained a large company of friends Tuesday evening in honor of their guests, Mrs. C. A. Coon and Miss Anna Coon. Card playing was the amusement and a very enjoyable time was had by all.

Andrew Clements, the veteran gardner, will not call upon his customers very much during the remaining part of the season. The fence around his garden was out of order Mondy evening and a herd of about twenty-five cows took advantage of it.

This is the opportunity our readers have been looking for visits the Twin Cites and the State Fair, September 1st, to 6th. One railroad fare and 50c takes you to the Twin Cities and return, and admits you to the Fair Grounds. See the good roads exhibition free. Ask Great Northern agent for other information.

Work of building the race track for the new fair grounds was commenced the first of the week, and it is expected to have it completed in a short time. The work is done under the supervision of Dr. Cummerford, and he is of the opinion that when the job is finished it will be one of the best in this section of the state.

The Great Northern Railroad has made it possible for you to attend the greatest State Fair West of the Mississippi River, which opens at Hamline, September 1st. One fare and 50c buys your round trip ticket, and your admission to the Fair Grounds. This is your opportunity to visit the Twin Cities. See Great Northern agent for other information.

There will be communion services and reception of members at the Presbyterian church next Sunday morning at 11:00 o'clock; Sunday school at 12:00; C. E. meeting at 7:00 and regular preaching service at 8:00. There will be a meeting of the church society on Monday evening at 8:00 o'clock to consider the matter of calling a pastor. All of the above meetings will be held at the tent.

S. F. Staples and J. D. Ward, who are selling shares for the fair association have sold nearly $1500 worth, which is the amount the association desires to dispose of. Each share is sold for $25, and anyone desiring to become a stockholder is requested to see either Mr. Staples or Ward at once.

School Year.

City Schools will open on Tues. Sept. 2nd.—For the Benefit of those who may enter the schools the following information is given:

Free Text Books—Text books are furnished free to all pupils in both grades and high school. Aside from the regular text books furnished, there is also a considerable amount of supplementary reading material.

Tuition—Non-resident pupils upon examination, may be assigned to vacant seats in the school by paying the uniform tuition fee of $2.50 per term. High school pupils from other states are required to pay tuition.

The course for the eight grades shall be practically as out lined in the State Board Manual.

It is very much desired that students entering the high school consult their parents and teachers in the selection of the course they wish to pursue, and after making the choice continue with the same to the end.

Until the high school building is completed the pupils will meet at the same rooms as before with the following changes:

The seventh grade of the entire city will assemble at the Central building, while the pupils of the fifth and sixth grades will meet in their respective rooms on east side of the river. The first grade which formerly occupied the Evenson building will meet with Miss Hill in the building just south of Hotel Northern on Labree avenue.

TAKE A THINK!

Did you ever think about what kind of coffee you drink? Some of it is pure—some impure—some no earthly good—some is the very best and looks like amber and has the taste of nectar. We keep that kind.

12½c a lb.	Is a good mixture for the money. No one can keep a better at the price.
20c a lb.	Is a fine coffee—the best we know of for the money. It makes an elegant drink. Try it and you will come back for more.
30c and 35c a lb.	Are both Mocha and Java and the very best coffee you can buy—you get purity, strength and flavor in these.

THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN

Tennessee has developed a second Tracy and we have yet to hear from Texas.

The Russian authorities are afraid to arrest Tolstoi, and Tolstoi is afraid they won't.

Japan is again supplying arms to China, but they are old arms which Japan has discarded.

Somebody ought to teach young King Alfonso the old song. "A Boy's Best Friend is His Mother."

Newport is to have a horse show before long. The milliners are now working overtime getting it ready.

An astrologer says Helen Gould will marry happily. If ever a woman deserved happiness, that person is Miss Gould.

If the Rockefellers and Rothschilds effect a merger of their capital there will be no place big enough to hold the goods.

Late reports from San Francisco are to the effect that Mr. Fitzsimmons has taken his share of the money and quit weeping.

The end of Outlaw Tracy seems to have been in accordance with all the proprieties, taking everything into consideration.

They say that Mrs. Mackay knows how to make money fly. This is an art in which women seem generally to be very proficient.

According to reports John B. Gates averted a panic by refusing to call. This shows how closely the stock game resembles poker.

Japan seems to have come to the conclusion that women have rights, which is considered a great discovery in the flowery kingdom.

Rev. Ziedler says some good men go wrong in politics. We have also noticed that some wrong men "go good" in the same occupation.

A New York policeman has discovered that London is much more wicked than Gotham. That doesn't, however, make New York good and pure.

That injunction to restrain a man from speaking to his wife may work all right, but think of the trouble to enforce such a ruling if the case were reversed.

It may be cheaper to cross the English channel by swimming, but recent experiments continue to indicate that the old way is better in all other respects.

The Duchess of Marlborough is coming to this country to visit her ma and stepfather. She may also throw a few kisses over the back fence to pa.

The last collision of Vanderbilt's auto was with a market wagon, and he got the worst of it. What has he not brought up against this side of a broken neck?

The Chicago man who was engaged in twenty minutes after he met the lady and married in an hour ought to be due for a divorce in at least twenty-four hours.

Spain is said to be recuperating financially. This is probably due to the fact that the crown clothes for a boy are much less expensive than those for a woman.

The plutocratic Vanderbilt auto was knocked into smithereens by a common farm wagon loaded with cabbages the other day. The plain people still run this country.

The kaiser and the czar are paying each other nice compliments these days. But the kaiser's big army doesn't forget to drill and fight sham battles while the boss is away.

The citizen of Albany, N. Y., who has just wasted a stamp and envelope in forwarding to United States Treasurer Roberts a conscience contribution of 1 cent is just two-centsitive for anything.

The Michigan man who has just adopted a whole orphan asylum of 22 children must have a large heart. If the average man were going to adopt a whole institution, he would probably prefer Vassar college.

In New York it is found that a good bed of gravel laid at intervals on roads where automobiles are not wanted quenches their ardor wonderfully. The automobile is quite helpless in gravel a foot deep.

Kipling has had a quarrel with his English neighbors. He also quarreled with his American neighbors while living here, which goes to show that the place of Kipling's residence has nothing to do with his quarrels.

The woman who sent a $20 bill to a New York brokerage firm with the request that it be "invested" so as to make $200 right away appears to have received a touch of the true Wall street spirit. The incident, by the way, also illustrates where the evil of speculating is doing the most harm.

The News Of the Week

Personal.

O. M. Hopkins, of the Scientific American staff, died at Chester, Mass., at the age of sixty.

Luther R. Marsh, a noted spiritualist, is dead at Middletown, N. Y., aged eighty-nine.

W. A. Hemphill, founder of the Atlanta Constitution, is dead at Atlanta, Ga., from apoplexy, aged sixty.

Henry T. Rainey of Carrollton, Greene county, was nominated for congress by the Democrats of the Twentieth Illinois district.

Dr. Frank Crane, of the People's church, Chicago, has accepted a call from the Union Congregational church of Worcester, Mass.

Augustus Torrey of Detroit, chief civil engineer of the Michigan Central railroad, died at Harper hospital in Detroit. His death was the result of injuries sustained near Albion, Mich.

Charles H. Thompson, better known as "Butch" Thompson, died at Saratoga, N. Y., after a long illness following injuries received in a runaway accident ten years ago at Long Branch. The direct cause of his death was Bright's disease.

Friends of ex-Gov. Alonzo B. Cornell of New York are saddened at the news of his failing mental condition. According to advices from Ithaca, N. Y., Mr. Cornell is suffering from softening of the brain, and physicians fear he will never recover. It is said at times he imagines himself governor of New York.

Accidental Happenings.

A special bearing 600 excursionists from Cincinnati, ran into a freight at Hammond, Ind, killing one and injuring one.

A regular Pennsylvania train on the New York & Long Branch road was run into from the rear at the Belmar station, near Asbury Park, N. J., by a New Jersey Central special. Six cars were smashed, several persons were killed and a number injured.

Barney Flynn, the comedian with West's Minstrels, fell from a second-story window in the Washington hotel at Buffalo, sustaining a fracture of his left knee, a compound fracture of the right knee, a fractured hip and a fractured skull. How he came to fall from the window is not clear.

Patrick Sweeney of Hazelton, Pa., decidede to cut down expenses during the strike, and concluded to cut his hair himself. After cutting his hair he wanted a shampoo, and for this purpose used a mixture of cloride of lime anad water. As a result his scalp is badly blistered and his hair is burned away in many places.

Crimes and Criminals.

Audrey Newman, a boy fifteen years old, was shot and killed by the guard of a watermelon patch at Knoxville, Tenn.

Lewis Salden and Wayne Shoup, porter and barber on the Union Pacific Overland Limited train, were caught robbing patrons while in the barber chair.

Ex-Gov. Pattison of Philadelphia recently received an infernal machine, but the senders failed to place means for ignition in the parcel, and it failed of its purpose.

Levi Perham, aged 19, of Bennington, Vt., confessed that he and Mrs. Marcus Rogers murdered the latter's husband to get possession of his life insurance of $500.

Manuel Chevese, a wealthy Cuban, shot and killed J. C. Allen and wounded Mrs. Allen, at Tampa, Fla. Jealousy of the dead man is supposed to have led to the trouble.

After causing the arrest of two plasterers on a charge of stealing $2,000, Miss Frances A. Spur of Chicago has found the money in one of her old slippers, where it had been placed without her knowledge.

Oscar Thompson, held at Chicago in connection with the Bartholin-Mitchell affair, confessed to having committed all the crimes attributed to him by the police, and then derisively told Inspector Hunt that it was all a lie.

John A. Hinsey who, as president of the board of control of the endowment rank of the Knights of Pythias, was accused of misappropriating $500,000, was suspended until his case shall have been disposed of by the grand tribunal of Illinois.

White laborers erecting oil tanks at Houston, Tex., objected to the singing of negroe employes at creosote works, near by, which disturbed their slumbers. A fight followed, the result being one negro dead and two wounded and one white man fatally hurt.

The grave of C. S. Morris of Madison, Kan., reported to have been murdered, was opened at Guthrie, Okla., and the coffin found to contain about two pounds of ice. Insurance companies and fraternal orders in which he carried policies, were suspicious and caused caused the exhumation.

From Other Shores.

D. WARD KENNEDY IN THE TOILS.

Departing From Wisconsin Penitentiary He Is Arrested by Minnesota Official.

Waupun, Wis., Aug. 24. — D. Ward Kennedy, who was sentenced to serve one year in the state prison from Black River Falls for forgery, was arrested at the prison gate yesterday morning on his release by Deputy Sheriff Glennon of Minnesota State prison at Stillwater, where he is wanted for violating the conditions of his parole. Kennedy was sent to Stillwater from Duluth in June, 1892, on a sentence of from one to ten years, and was paroled in June, 1900. In all probability he will be made to serve the maximum time of his sentence, after which he will be taken to St. Paul to face an indictment charging him with forgery. Kennedy is fifty-three years old.

CIGARETTES ARE BLAMED.

Death of Heir to English Estate Leads to Other Suspicions.

Winnipeg, Aug. 24.—The mysterious death of James Noble, a Warroad, Minn., resident, is being investigated by the authorities of Minnesota. R. H. Mendicraft, state's attorney of Roseau county, and Mayor Book of Warroad are here investigating the matter. Noble died shortly after getting on a train at Warroad on his way to a Winnipeg hospital a few days ago. Death was said to be due to excessive cigarette smoking, but as he was the only heir to an estate in England it is believed other motives may have caused his end. He lived with his mother and stepfather, who were anxious that he should leave home, although his health has been failing ever since his arrival from South Africa last winter.

TONS OF SUGAR MISSING.

Young Business Man of Duluth Accused of Theft.

Duluth, Aug. 24.—Edward McClure, a young man prominent in business and social circles at the head of the lakes, is missing. One hundred and ten thousand pounds of sugar belonging to the sugar trust and stored here for distribution to Western cities is also missing and a warrant charging McClure with the theft of the property is in the hands of the police. It is alleged that McClure stole the sugar from a local warehouse and sold it in St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth and Superior for $6,000. McClure is said to have gone to St. Paul.

BEREAVED MOTHER A SUICIDE.

Prairie du Chien Woman Drinks Acid and Soon Dies.

Prairie du Chien, Wis., Aug. 24.—Mrs. Louis Caya, committed suicide last night by swallowing two ounces of carbolic acid. She had sent a sister to get the acid. The two prepared the evening meal and Mrs. Caya locked herself up in a room and took the acid. She was found unconscious shortly afterward. Physicians succeeded in reviving her and kept her alive nearly an hour and a half. She was about twenty years old. A little daughter died a few days before and her grief may have unbalanced her mind.

ONE THOUSAND MEN IDLE.

Thrown Out of Work by Fire in Butte Reduction Works.

Butte, Mont., Aug. 24.—The reverbatory building of the Butte reduction works, owned by Senator W. A. Clark, was totally destroyed by fire yesterday. The fire originated at Furnace No. 1, and was caused by the roof of the furnace falling in. The fire communicated to the roof of the building and spread rapidly. The loss of the reverbatory will necessitate the closing of the smelter and three mines which supplied it with ore. About 1,000 men will be thrown out of work for two months.

IOWA STATE FAIR OPENS.

Forty-Eighth Annual Exposition Begins at Des Moines.

Des Moines, Aug. 24. — The forty-eighth annual Iowa State fair opened yesterday and will continue through next week. Exhibits will not all be in until to-night, but enough have already arrived to make it certain that as a live stock exhibition it will completely eclipse all past fairs. The dedication of the new stock pavilion, erected at a cost of $50,000, will take place Monday. The cattle entries exceed by 100 those at the international stock show at Chicago last winter.

CONGRESSMAN ARRESTED.

Charged With Being a Statesman, He Pleads Not Guilty.

Janesville, Wis., Aug. 24.—H. A. Cooper, congressman from the First district of Wisconsin and a candidate for reelection, was arrested here yesterday afternoon by the Elks police of the carnival and fined 50 cents for being a statesman. He pleaded not guilty, but paid the fine and was released. Prof. Milton Whitney, head of the bureau of soils of the United States, was fined 50 cents in the same mock court for laughing at the statement that Cooper was a statesman.

ALLEGED TO BE HORSE THIEF.

Black River Falls Justice Holds Man for Trial.

Black River Falls, Wis., Aug. 24—Justice Livingstone held a man brought here yesterday from Sparta in $2,500 bonds to answer Sept. 1 to the charge of stealing a horse from B. J. Meek of this city. He refused to give any name and is in jail in default of bail.

MAN BURNS TO DEATH.

South Dakota Barn Burns and Charred Body Is Found.

Lead, S. D., Aug. 24.—Peter Carr was burned to death yesterday morning in a fire that destroyed the barn belonging to M. C. Campbell. Carr had been employed by the Burlington railway on the grade, and is supposed to have been sleeping in the loft when the fire started. His blackened remains have been taken from the debris. Two teams of horses were also burned.

WELCOME IS WARM

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT STARTS ON HIS TOUR OF NEW ENGLAND.

HARTFORD WAS IN GALA DRESS

THOUSANDS TURN OUT TO TENDER GREETING TO THE PRESIDENT.

PLEASING FEATURE OF THE DAY

PRESENTATION OF A LARGE FLORAL PIECE BY THE WORKINGMEN.

Hartford, Conn., Aug. 24.—President Roosevelt was welcomed in Hartford on his New England tour yesterday by a great burst of enthusiasm. The president showed his pleasure at the reception he received and delivered a well-received speech last night on important rational relations. To President Roosevelt the feature of the day was the presentation of a large floral piece by the workingmen of Hartford. Hartford was in gala dress to welcome the president, the weather was perfect and there was not a hitch to mar the proceedings.

In Poke Park, one of the beautiful outlying recreation spots of the city, the president was greeted by 10,000 workingmen, who presented him with a magnificent floral horseshoe inscribed: "Workingmen's welcome to our president."

Father Michael Sullivan made a few remarks of welcome, in which he commended the

of purpose of the president in all his acts. The president responded, and his remarks were frequently interrupted by applause. He said:

"Father Sullivan: I came here to say a few words myself, but nothing that I can say will in any way have the significance that the gift from the wageworkers of Hartford has. I should, of course, be wholly unfitted for the position I occupy if I did not give my best thought and best purpose to trying to serve the interests of the toiler of America. (Cheers). My most resolute purpose shall be given, and, if I may say so, in being given, to trying to do anything that can be done to help our people. Perhaps I can do this best by trying to help as well as I can their best purpose and their best thought. (Cries of 'Good, good.') I should like to accept that gift as in some way personal to myself, but I would rather accept it as I know it is meant, as a

Gift From Americans

to a man who for the time being embodies American governmental principles. (Cries of 'Good, good' and cheers.)

Five thousand men and women crowded the Coliseum here last night to hear the address of President Roosevelt. At least two-thirds of the audience were workingmen, and the enthusiasm manifested by them when the president alluded to the rights of the toiler aroused the keenest interest. Again and again during his prefatory remarks, which were based on the afternoon—the presentation of a floral horseshoe by the workingmen—the president was interrupted by vociferous applause. Such side remarks as the following: "I do not care how honest a man may be, if he is timid he is no good," evoked loud laughter. Again, in speaking of the isthmian canal, he aroused mirth by saying that one of the problems in connection with the great engineering feat would be to procure fifty-thousand-dollar patriotic, ambitious men to work for a ten-thousand-dollar fee.

WAR GAME STILL ON.

Pillsbury Has Only Two More Nights in Which to Make Landing.

Rockport, Mass., Aug. 24.—In the light of the knowledge gained in those hot, anxious days at Santiago four years ago, that readiness and watchfulness are half the battle, the officers and men of Admiral Higginson's home defense squadron are keeping as keen a lookout for the appearance of Commander Pillsbury's supposedly hostile naval force as they did for Cervera in 1898. During the early part of last evening the conditions were ideal for an attempt by Pillsbury to carry out his part of the war problem. A thunderstorm, which came up about Rockport's supper time, left behind it a heavy pall of fog that enveloped the town shore and made it hard to distinguish large objects. Shortly after 9 o'clock the mist lifted, the moon and the stars came out and Pillsbury's best chance was gone. He only has two more nights within which to attempt a landing. If he has not established a base ashore by noon on Monday he will lose the game.

CABLE CAR GETS AWAY.

Gripman Is Killed and Twenty Passengers Injured.

Kansas City, Aug. 24. — A cable car crowded with passengers got away from the gripman at the top of the Ninth street incline at the union station here last night and, dashing to the bottom at a terrific speed, crashed into a train that was stalled ther. The passengers were hurled in every direction and the grip car on the runaway train and the rear coach of the other train were reduced to a mass of twisted iron and splinters. W. B. Taylor, the gripman on the first train, was killed instantly and at least twenty persons were injured.

EXTENSIVE FOREST FIRE.

Camping Parties in Colorado in Peril—Valuable Timber Burned.

Walsenburg, Colo., Aug. 24.—A forest fire of immense proportions is burning on the western slope of the Green mountain range, thirty miles from here, in the northwestern corner of Huerfano county. Much valuable timber has been destroyed and the fire is beyond control. Pueblo Martinez, a prospector, is believed to have perished, and there are fears for the safety of a number of camping parties.

WARRANT OUT FOR JUDGES.

Game Warden Fullerton No Respecter of Persons.

St. Paul, Aug. 24.—Judge Simpson of the Hennepin district bench, Judge Steele, who, as chairman of the Republican state central committee, managed the Eustis campaign for governor, Supt. Frank L. Randall of the St. Cloud reformatory and Dr. Hoyt, a St. Cloud dentist, will be prosecuted in Becker county on a charge of shooting prairie chickens and ducks out of season. They were invited to hunt on the White Earth Indian reservation by Agent Simon Michalott, and gladly accepted the invitation. Game Warden E. O. Stevens of Detroit secured evidence of their killing game, and notified Executive Agent S. F. Fullerton of the state game and fish commission. The party broke up in the meantime, but Mr. Fullerton instructed the warden to secure warrants for the hunters, and to have the sheriff of Becker county take them back for trial.

PAT CROWE OF WISCONSIN.

Farmers Are Ordered to Give Up Money or Suffer Dire Result.

Prairie du Chien, Wis., Aug. 24.—The little town of Montfort, Wis., across the Wisconsin river, is excited over letters which have been received by Henry Delter, a well-to-do farmer. Delter a short time ago received a letter ordering him to leave $500 at a designated spot in a field or pasture in the town of Castle Rock, and if he did not comply with the demand his stock would be poisoned and himself and family murdered. Joe Hiebes of Castle Rock also received a letter containing threats in case he refused to leave $100 in a bottle on a certain stump. Delter has set a trap in the meantime and goes heavily armed, although he has received another letter telling him to take away his watchers.

IS AGAINST TRUSTS.

Transmississippi Congress Defines Its Attitude.

St. Paul, Aug. 24.—The anti-trust resolutions, which apparently died Thursday in the committee on resolutions of the Transmississippi Commercial congress, came to life yesterday morning and was passed by a close vote. They now stand as the attitude of the congress on the question of trusts. The vote stood 20 to 19 in favor of the resolution. The congress transacted no other business of importance at its last session. Votes of thanks were extended to the local entertainment committee. The retiring president, John Henry Smith of Salt Lake City thanked the delegates for the consideration shown him.

ARRESTED FOR LARCENY.

Two Pierre Men Charged With Collusion Against Employers.

Pierre, S. D., Aug. 24. — A sensation was sprung in this city by the arrest of George W. Carter and J. D. Adams, on a charge of larceny of blanks and records from the State Publishing company of this city. Carter was one of the members of the old Carter Bros.' Publishing company, and has been selling blanks on commission. Adams, who comes from St. Paul, was ruler for the company, and, it is claimed, they acted in collusion, Carter taking orders for blanks and records, which were filled by Adams from the stock of the State Publishing company.

WANT MINING CONGRESS.

Deadwod and Lead to Work Together to Get It.

Lead, S. D., Aug. 24.—Lead and Deadwood will work together in the effort to bring the next session to the International Mining congress to the Black Hills. The attendance of the sessions of the congress is about 10,000 annually, and it will tax the accommodations of both towns to entertain the visitors. A meeting of the delegates appointed in the two towns was held here at which it was decided to co-operate.

DOUBLE TRAGEDY.

Iowa Man Shoots His Wife and Himself.

Harlan, Iowa, Aug. 24. — A double tragedy occurred here yesterday morning. C. W. Knose, who has been drinking a good deal, shot his wife, from whom he had been separated for some time, and then shot himself. His wound is in the head and will prove fatal, while that of the woman is dangerous, but will probably not be fatal. A divorce case was pending.

VERY NEAR DEATH.

Three Women and a Baby in a Bad Runaway.

Faribault, Minn., Aug. 24. — Three women and a baby had a narrow escape from death in a runaway accident in the town of Cannon City, east of here, yesterday. Mrs. Hoover had her arm broken, Mrs. Mary Piper had two ribs broken and Mrs. Frank Piper had her shoulder dislocated. The baby escaped with a few scratches.

Trade Coffins for a Farm.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Aug. 24.—The purchase or possession of South Dakota land is considered such a good proposition that all kinds of offers are made owners for the transfer of their land. The most unique offer, however, of the season has just been received by a real estate dealer at Leola, who was approached by an Eastern man who wanted to trade him a stock of coffins for South Dakota farm land.

Life Crushed Out in Elevator.

St. Paul, Aug. 24.—Albert Zurawski was crushed to death in a freight elevator in the Globe building at 2:30 yesterday afternoon. His skull was fractured and his chest was crushed. It is not known how it happened.

Goes to Bluefields.

Lead, S. D., Aug. 24.—B. J. Treweek of Lead has started for Bluefields, Nicaragua, in the interest of the Allis-Chalmers Company of Chicago to erect a stamp mill on the property of an English mining company.

Not Guilty of Murder.

Helena, Mont., Aug. 24.—The jury in the case of Thomas Shufelt, charged with the murder of "Long Henry" Johnson at Glasgow, brought in a verdict of not guilty. Johnson had threatened to kill Shufelt.

The Crimson Blind

By Fred M. White

CHAPTER XXXVII—(Continued.)

And what a lot of plate there was on the table and sideboard! Some of it was gold, too. Merritt's greedy professional eye appraised the collection at some hundreds of pounds—hundreds of pounds—that is, after the stuff had been disposed of. In imagination he had already drugged the butler and stuffed the plate into his bag.

Henson said very little. He was too busily engaged in watching his confederate. He wished from the bottom of his heart now that Chris had never seen Merritt. She was smiling on him now, and apparently hanging on every word. Henson had seen society ladies doing this kind of thing before with well-concealed contempt. So long as people liked to play his game for him he had no objection. But this was quite different. Merritt had warmed a little under the influence of his fifth glass of champagne, but his eye looked lovingly and longingly in the direction of a silver spirit stand on the sideboard.

The dinner came to an end at length, to Henson's great relief, and presently the whole party wandered out to the terrace. Bell dropped behind with Chris.

"Now is your time," he whispered. "Henson dare not lost sight of Merritt before he goes to bed, and I'll keep the latter out here for a good long spell. I've muffled the striker of the telephone so that the bell will make no noise when you get your call back from Brighton, so that you must be near enough to the instrument to hear the click of the striker. Make haste!"

Chris dropped back to the library and rapidly fluttered over the leaves of the "Telephone Directory. She found what she wanted, at length, and asked to be put on to Brighton. Then she sat down in an arm chair in the darkness, close under the telephone, prepared to wait patiently. She could just see the men on the terrace, could catch the dull red glow of their cigars.

Her patience was not unduly tried. At the end of a quarter of an hour the striker clicked furiously. Chris reached for the receiver and lay back, comfortably in her chair with the diphragm to her ear. "Are you there?" she asked, quietly. "Is that you, Mr. Steel?"

To her great relief, the answering voice was Steel's own. He seemed to be a little puzzled as to who the questioner was.

"Can't you guess?" Chris replied. "This is not the first time I have had you called. You have not forgotten 218 Brunswick Square yet?"

Chris smiled as she heard Steel's sudden exclamation.

"So you are my fair friend whom I saw in the dark?" he said. "Yes, I recognize your voice now. You are Miss Chris—well, I won't mention the name aloud, because people might ask what a well-regulated corpse meant by rousing people up at midnight. I hope you are not going to get me into trouble again."

"No; but I am going to ask your advice and assistance. I want you to be so good as to give me the plot of a story after I have told you the details. And you are to scheme the thing out at once, please, because delays are dangerous. Dr. Bell—"

"What's that? Will you tell me where you are speaking from?"

"I am at present located at Littimer Castle. Yes, Dr. Bell is here. Do you want him?"

"I should think so!" Steel exclaimed. "Please tell him at once that the man who was found here, half-dead—you know the man I mean—got up and dressed himself in the absence of the nurse and walked out of the hospital this morning. Since then he has not been seen or heard of. I have been looking up Bell everywhere. Will you tell him this at once? I'll go into your matter afterwards. Don't be afraid; I'll tell the telephone people not to cut you off till I ring. Please go at once."

The voice was urgent, not to say imperative. Chris dropped the receiver into its space and crept into the darkness in the direction of the terrace.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

A Little Fiction.

Bell seemed to know by intuition that Chris required him, or perhaps he caught a glimpse of her white dress from the terrace. Anyway, he strolled leisurely in her direction.

"Something has happened?" he whispered, as he came up.

"Well, yes," Chris replied, "though I should like to know how you guessed that. I had no difficulty in getting Mr. Steel on the telephone, but he would say nothing directly he heard that you were here, beyond a peremptory request that you were to be told at once that Van Sneck has gone."

"Gone!" Bell echoed, blankly. "What do you mean by that?"

"He has disappeared from the hospital at Brighton to-day. Mr. Steel thinks they were extra busy, or something of that kind. Anyway, Van Sneck got up and dressed himself and left the hospital without being observed. It seems extraordinary to me."

"And yet quite possible," Bell said, thoughtfully. "Van Sneck had practically recovered from his flesh wounds; it was the injury to the head that was the worst part. He resembled an irresponsible lunatic more than anything else. Steel wants me, of course?"

"He suggests that you should go down to Brighton without delay."

"All right; I'll have some excuse to take the first train in the morning. We've got a fine start of Henson, and that's a good thing. If Van Sneck comes within his net we shall have a deal of trouble. I had hoped to get permission to operate on Van Sneck, and relied upon him to solve the mystery. And now you had better go back to your telephone."

Chris hurried back again. A whispered word satisfied her that Steel was still at the other end.

"Dr. Bell starts as early as possible to-morrow," she said. "If you will listen, carefully, I will give you a brief outline of all that has happened since I have been here."

Chris proceeded to tell her story, briefly and succinctly. From little sounds and signs she could tell that Steel was greatly interested. The story of the man with the thumb fascinated him. It appealed to his professional instincts.

"And what do you want to do with him?" Steel asked.

"Well, you see, I have him in my power," Chris explained. "We can get the other Rembrandt any time we like now; but that is quite a minor consideration. What I want is for Merritt to know that I can have him arrested at any time for stealing my star. It's Enid's star, as a matter of fact; but, that is a detail."

"An important one, surely," Steel's voice came thin and clear. "Suppose that our dear friend chances to recognize it. . . . No; don't ring off yet."

"I'm not. Oh, you are speaking to the Exchange people. . . . Yes, yes; yes; we shall be a long time yet. . . Are you there? Enid bought it just before the great trouble came, and, afterwards, she never had the heart to wear it."

"I understand. You want Merritt to know this?"

"Well, I do and I don't," Chris explained. "I am anxious not to frighten the man. I want to get him in my power, and I want to prove to him that it would be to his advantage for him to come over to my side. Suppose Enid gave it out that the star had been stolen? And suppose that I could save him at the critical moment? I shouldn't mind him thinking that I had stolen the star in the first place. This is why I am asking you, as a novelist, to help me."

"You would have made an excellent novelist yourself," David said, admiringly. "Give me five minutes. . . . Are you there? I fancy I have it. Can't you hear me? That's better. I'll see Miss Gates the first thing in the morning, and get her to go over to Longdean and see your sister. . . . Confound it, don't cut us off yet! What does it matter, so long as the messages are paid for? Nobody else wants the line. Well, I may for an hour more. . . . Are you there? Very sorry! It's the fault of the postoffice people. Here is the plot in a nutshell: Your sister has lost a diamond star. She gives a minute description of it to the police, and drops a hint that she believes it was taken away by mistake—in other words, was stolen—from her in London by a chance acquaintance called Christabel Lee—"

"Ah," Christabel cried, "how clever you are!"

"I have long suspected it," the thin voice went on, drily. "The full description of the star will be printed in the Police Gazette, a copy of which every respectable pawnbroker gets regularly. I suppose the people where the star was pawned are respectable?"

"Highly so. They have quite a Bond Street establishment attached."

"So much the better. They will see the advertisement and they will communicate with the police. The Rev. James Merritt will be arrested—"

"I don't quite like that," Chris suggested.

"Oh, it's necessary. He will be arrested at the castle. Knowing his antecedents, the police will not stand upon ceremony. You will be filled with remorse. You have plunged back into a career of crime again a being who was slowly climbing into the straight path once more. You take the blame upon yourself—it was at your instigation that Merritt pawned the star."

"But, really, Mr. Steel—"

"Oh, I know. But the end justifies the means. You save Mr. Merritt, there is a bond of sympathy between you, he will regard you as a great light in his interesting profession. You saved him because you had appropriated the star yourself."

"And go to gaol instead of Mr. Merritt?"

"Not a bit of it. The star you deemed to be yours. You had one very like when you saw Miss Henson, when you were staying in London at the same hotel. By some means the jewels got mixed. You are confident that an exchange has been made. Also, you are confident that if Miss Henson will search her jewel case she will find a valuable star that does not belong to her. Miss Henson does so; she is distressed beyond measure; she offers all kinds of apologies. Exit the police. You need not tell Merrit how you got out of the difficulty, and thus you increase his respect for you. There, that would make a very ingenius and plausible magazine story. It should be more convincing in real life."

"Capital!" Chris murmured. "What an advantage it is to have a novelist to advise one! Many thanks for all your kindness. Good-night!"

Chris rang off with a certain sense of relief. It was some time before she had a chance of conveying to Bell what had happened. He listened gravely to all that Chris had to say.

"Just the sort of feather-brained idea that would occur to a novelist," he said. "For my part, I should prefer to confront Merritt with his theft, and keep the upper hand of him that way."

"And he would mistrust me, and betray me at the first opportunity. Besides, in that case, he would know at once that I wanted to get to the bottom of his connection with Reginald Henson. Mr. Steel's plan may be bizarre, but it is safe."

"I never thought of that," Bell admitted. "I begin to imagine that you are more astute than I gave you credit for, which is saying a great deal."

Chris was down early the following morning, only to find Bell at breakfast, with every sign of making an early departure. He was very sorry, he explained, gravely, to his host and Chris, but his letters gave him no option. He would come back in a day or two, if he might. A moment later Henson came into the room, ostentatiously studying a Bradshaw.

"And where are you going?" Littimer asked. "Why do you all abandon me? Reginald, do you mean to say that you are going to refuse me the light of your countenance?"

"Is Dr. Bell going, too?" Henson asked, with just a suggestion of uneasiness. "I mean—er—"

"Business," Bell said. "I came here at great personal inconvenience. And you?"

"London," Henson replied. "A meeting to-day that I cannot get out of. A couple of letters by this morning's post decided me."

Chris said nothing; she appeared to be quite indifferent until she had a chance to speak to Bell alone. She looked a little anxious.

"He has found out about Van Sneck," she said. "Truly, he is a marvellous man! And he had no letters this morning. I opened the post bag personally. But I am glad he's going, because I shall have James Merritt all to myself."

CHAPTER XXXIX

The Fascination of James Merritt.

On the whole, Mr. James Merritt, exconvict and now humanitarian, was enjoying himself immensely. He did not sleep at the castle, for Lord Littimer drew the line there, but he contrived to get most of his meals under that hospitable roof, and spent a great deal of time there. It was by no means the first time he had been "taken up" by the aristocracy since his conversion, and his shyness was wearing off. Moreover, Henson had given his henchman strict instructions to keep his eyes open with a view to getting at the bottom of the Rembrandt mystery.

Still, there is always a crumpled rose leaf somewhere, and Merritt had his. A few days after Henson departed so hurriedly for town the stolen Rembrandt disappeared from Merritt's rooms. Nobody knew anything about it; the thing had vanished, leaving no trace of the thief behind. Perhaps Merritt would have been less easy in Littimer's society had he known that the missing print was securely locked away in the latter's strong room. Still, had Merritt been acquainted with the classics, carpe diem would like as not have been his favorite motto. He declined to worry over the matter until Henson's return. It was not for him to know, yet, that Chris had actually gone over to Moreton Wells, and, during the absence of Merritt's landlady, calmly walked into the house and taken the picture away.

"You are going to see some fun presently," she said, coolly, to the astonished Littimer, as she laid the missing picture before him. "No; I shall not tell you anything more at present. You shall hear the whole story when Reginald Henson stands in the pillory before you. You know now that Henson was at the bottom of the plot to destroy Bell's character?"

"I always felt that our Reginald was a great scoundrel," Littimer purred, over his cigarette. "And if you succeed in exposing him thoroughly I shall watch the performance with the greatest possible pleasure. I am not curious, my dear young lady, but I would give sixpence to know who you are."

"Keep your sixpence," Chris laughed, "and you'll know all in good time. All I ask is not to be astonished at anything that happens."

Littimer averred that he had long since lost the power of astonishment. There was a brightness and restlessness about Chris to-day that considerably added to her charms. It was nearly a week now since Bell and Henson had departed, and in the meantime Chris had heard nothing from Longdean. Half an hour before a telegram had arrived to the effect that a gentleman in a blue coat might be expected at Littimer Castle at any moment. The police were coming, and Merritt was late to-day. If Merritt failed to turn up the whole situation would be spoiled. It was with a feeling of unutterable relief hat Chris saw him coming up the drive.

"Come on the terrace," she said. "I have something very serious to say to you. Mr. Merritt, you have got us both into very serious trouble. Why did you do it?"

"Ain't done nothing," Merritt said, doggedly. He repeated the old formula, "What's up?"

"Er—it's about my diamond star," said Chris. "I lost it a few days ago. If I had known what was going to happen I should have put up with my loss. But I made inquiries through the police, without saying a word to anybody, and now I find the star was pawned in Moreton Wells."

"Oh, lor," Merritt gasped. "You don't mean to say the police know that, miss?"

"Indeed, I do. You see, once I allowed matters to get out of my hands I was powerless. The case now rests entirely with the police. And I am informed that they may come here and arrest you at any moment. I fear there is no escape for you—you pawned the thing yourself, in your own name. What a thousand pities you yielded to sudden temptation."

"But I found it," Merritt whined. "I'll take my oath I found it under the terrace. I—I—was rambling along the cliffs one day and found it. And I didn't know it was yours. If I had known it was yours I'd never have gone and done no such a thing."

Chris shook her head, sadly.

"And just as you were getting on so nicely," she said.

"That's it," Merritt whined, brokenly. "Just as I was properly spoofing everybody—I mean just as I was getting used to a better life. But you can save me, miss; you can say as you were hard up for money, and that, knowing as I knew the ropes, you got me to pawn for you. Put it in that way, and there's not a policeman in England as can touch me."

"I had thought of it," Chris said, with a pretty assumption of distress. "But, but—Mr. Merritt, I have a terrible confession to make. It was not I who started the police; it was somebody else. You see, the star was not my property at all. I—I got it in London."

Mr. Merritt looked up with involuntary admiration.

"You don't mean to say as you nicked it?" he asked. "Well, well!"

Chris bent her head lower to conceal her agitation. Her shoulders were heaving, but not with emotion. The warmth of Merritt's agitation had moved her to silent laughter, and she had made the exact impression that she desired.

"I have telegraphed to the lady, who is more or less a friend of mine," she said. "I have urged her to take no further steps in the matter. I fancy that she is a good and kind girl and that—but a reply might come at any time."

There was a reply on the way now, as Chris knew perfectly well. The whole thing had been carefully arranged and planned to the moment by Steel and others.

"I dare say they'll let you down easy," Merritt said, dispassionately. "But it'll be hot for me. I've copped it too many times before, you see."

"Yes, I see," Chris said, thoughtfully. "Mr. Merritt, I've made up my mind; if I had not—er—borrowed that star, it would not have been lost, and you would not have found it, and there would have been no trouble. My conscience would not rest if I allowed you to be dragged back into the old life again. I am going to save you—I am going to tell the police that you pawned that star for me at my instigation."

Merritt was touched, even to tears. There was not an atom of chivalry in the rascal's composition. He had little or no heed for the trouble that his companion appeared to be piling up for herself, but he was touched to the depths of his soul. Here was a clever girl who, in her own way, appeared to be a member of his profession, who was prepared to sacrifice herself to save another. Self-sacrifice is a beautiful and tender thing, and Merritt had no intention of thwarting it.

"Do that, and I'm your pal for life!" he said, huskily. "And I never went back on a pal yet. Ask anybody who really knows me. 'Tain't as if you weren't one of us, neither. I'd give a trifle to know what your little game is here, eh?"

Chris smiled, meaningly. Merritt's delusion was distinctly to be fostered.

"You shall help me, then, presently," she said, in a mysterious whisper. "Help me, and keep your own counsel, and there will be the biggest job you ever had in your life. Only let you and I get out of this mess, and we shall see what we shall see presently."

Merritt looked speechless admiration. He had read of this class of high-toned criminal sin, the gutter stories published by certain publishers, but he had never hoped to meet one in the flesh. He was still gazing, open-mouthed, at Chris, as two men came along the avenue. They were both in plain clothes, but they had 'policemen' writ large all over them.

"Cops, for a million!" Merritt gurgled, with a pallid face. "You can tell 'em when you're asleep. And they are after me; they're coming this way. It'll be all right presently."

"I hope so," Chris said, with a curling lip. "You look guilty enough now."

Merritt explained that it was merely the first emotion, and would pass off presently. Nor did he boast in vain. He was quite cool as the officers came up and called him by name.

"That's me," Merritt said. "What's the trouble?"

One of the officers explained. He had no warrant, he said, but, all the same, he would have to trouble Mr. Merritt to accompany him to Moreton Wells. A diamond star, not yet definitely identified, had been handed over to the police, the same having been pawned by James Merritt.

"That's quite right," Merritt said, cheerfully. "I pawned it for this young lady here—Miss Lee. Of course, if it is not her property—"

The officers were palpably taken aback. He knew more than he cared to say. The star had been pledged by Merritt, as he cheerfully admitted, but the owner of the star had lost the gem in London, under suspicious circumstances, in which Miss Lee was mixed up. At present it was not the policy of the police to arrest Miss Lee. That would come later.

"I am afraid that there has been a misapprehension altogether," Chris said. "Allow me to explain: Mr. Merritt, would you step aside for a moment? I have to speak of private matters? Thank you. Now, sir, I am quite prepared to admit that the ornament pledged does not belong to me, but to Miss Henson, whom I met in London. I took the star by mistake. You may smile, but I have one very like it. If Miss Henson had searched her jewels properly she would have found that she had my star—that I had hers. I heard of the business quite by accident, and telegraphed to Miss Henson to look searchingly among her jewels. She has a large amount, and might easily have overlooked the star. Here is a boy with a telegram. Will you take it from him and read it aloud? It is addressed to me, you will find."

It was signed "Enid Henson;" it went on to say that the sender was fearfully sorry for all the trouble she had caused, but that she had found Miss Lee's star with her jewels. Also, she had telegraphed at once to the police at Moreton Wells to go no farther.

"Looks like a mistake," the officer muttered. "But if we get that telegram—"

"Which has reached the police station by this time," Chris interrupted. "Come into the castle and ask the question over the telephone. I suppose you are connected."

The officer said they were; in fact, they had only recently joined the Exchange. A brief visit to the telephone, and the policeman came back with a puzzled air and a little more deference in his manner, with the information that he was to go back at once, as the case was closed.

"I've seen some near things in my time, but nothing nearer than this," he said. "Still, it's all right now. Very sorry to have troubled you, miss."

The officers departed with the air of men who had to be satisfied, despite themselves. Merritt came forward with an admiration almost fawning. He did not know quite how the thing had happened, but Chris had done the police. Smartness and trickery of that kind were the highest form of his idolatry. His admiration was nearly beyond words.

"Well, strike me!" he gasped. "Did ever anyone see anything like that? You, as cool as possible, and me with my heart in my mouth all the time. And there ain't going to be no trouble, no sort of bother over the ticket?"

"You hand over the ticket to me," Chris smiled, "and there will be an end of the matter. And if you try to play me false in any way, why, it will be a bad day for you. Give me your assistance, and it will be the best day's work you ever did in your life."

Merritt's heart was gained. His pride was touched.

"Me go back on you?" he cried, hoarsely. "After what you've done? Only say the word, only give old Jim Merritt a call, and it's pitch-and-toss to manslaughter for those pretty eyes of yours. Good day's work! Aye, for both of us!"

And Chris thought so, too.

(To be Continued.)

Escaped.

Many are the pretexts resorted to by men anxious to escape jury service. An unwilling juror, when called upon to serve in trial term, Part Four, of the supreme court, this week, said:

"Your honor, I must ask to be excused. I do not approve of the injustice of the justice administered in these courts."

"Are you an Anarchist?" inquired the trial justice.

"No; but I do not believe in some of the laws of this state. They are outrageous, there is too much injustice—"

"That will do," exclaimed the justice, sternly. "You are a disgrace to citizenship. You are unfit for service. You are excused."

As the man left the court room he smiled and remarked: "The old man was severe; but it worked all right."—

Only a Sojourner.

Capt. Groome, of the City troop, once rode from Galveston, Texas, to New York city on the Mallory Line steamship Denver, under the experienced and skillful but brusque and gruff Capt. Sam Risk. Several slight mishaps had put Risk in a very bad temper, which was not mellowed when they ran into a dense fog off Cape Hatteras. One of the women passengers, who had been gushing considerably during the voyage, ran up to Risk and exclaimed:

"Oh, captain! Isn't this an awful fog? Is it always as bad as this out here?"

"How should I know?" snorted the old skipper. "I don't live here!"—Philadelphia Times.

About the Same Thing.

"Do you think that our civilization tends to lengthen men's lives?"

"I don't know about that," answered the practical man; "but, with the increased facilities for travel and communication, a man can come pretty near living twice as much in a given space of time as he used to."—Washington Star.

Not Consistent.

"Do you remember that dark-complexioned girl who was visiting the Pringles last summer?"

"Yes."

"They said she had Indian blood in her veins. But I don't believe it."

"Why not?"

"If she had been anything of an Indian she wouldn't have married a bald-headed man."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

An Exception.

"Binks spent his vacation at an appropriate place."

"Where was that?"

"His uncle's."

"And why was that appropriate?"

"Because he was in soak every day he was gone."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

No Satisfying Her.

"Women are hard to understand."

"Think so?"

"You don't say!"

"Yes; and then I told her she didn't carry it well, and she wouldn't speak."—Exchange.

BRAVE GIRL SAVED TWO LIVES

Tale of Heroism and Fortitude Comes From England.

Perhaps 'tis even harder to be brave and calm in the midst of the suffocating smoke and dreadful heat of a burning building than to face the raging sea. But not so very long ago we had an instance of calm decision and thoughtfulness for others on the part of a young girl at a moment when the dreadful danger of being burnt alive would make most people frantic with fear. Alice Ayres lived with some relatives in a house in Southwark, and one night awoke to find the building in flames, and that escape by the staircase from the floor on which she and the children slept was impossible. She did not, however, lose her head, or think of herself alone. First she threw out of the window a bed, which the crowd below caught and held, and into this bed she threw, one after another, the three little children. Two of them were safely caught unhurt, but one sustained a fatal injury in striking against some projection from the house. Then the brave girl sprang out herself, but being already half-overcome by the heat and smoke, she missed the bed, fell on the pavement, and hurt her spine so that she died shortly afterwards in the hospital. She had, however, saved two lives and set an example of courage and unselfishness in danger.—Ashland-under-Tyne Reporter (Eng.).

OSCAR A DEMOCRATIC KING.

Ruler of Sweden and Norway Occasionally Relaxes Dignity.

In these days, when the camera misses nothing, it may seem hardly credible that there is only one king in the world who has been photographed wearing his crown. Yet it is so. King Oscar is the exception. No more democratic king sits on a throne than he, and his memoirs, which he is writing for posthumous publication, will probably be more appreciated by ordinary folk than the memoirs of royalty usually are. They will tell, perhaps, on the authority of the king himself of his meeting with M. Gaston Bonnier, the famous botanist, whom the king met botanizing near Stockholm when out himself on a similar occupation. Their mutual interest led to conversation and M. Bonnier, not recognizing the king, suggested a lunch at an inn. "No, come home with me," said King Oscar, and as they reached the palace gate the famous botanist, realizing the identity of his friend, begged a thousand pardons and became reluctant to enter. "I'm sorry," said his majesty, "but I happen to be the king of this country and this is the only place I've got to entertain anybody in." M. Bonnier was at his ease and the two went in and talked botany for the rest of the afternoon.

FLOWERS OF FISH SCALES.

Novel Art Turned to Good Account by an Adroit New York Woman.

There is a woman in New York who keeps a shop not far from the Waldorf-Astoria where she pursues the novel industry of making fish scale flowers and leaves. The denizens of the oceans in the tropics are notable for the color and brilliancy of their scales and fins, the range of chromatic tints including pink, rose, scarlet, sky blue, ultramarine, apple green, emerald, olive gold, orange, gray, lilac and purple. The scales are easily fastened together or to wires with a strong fish glue, which is singularly durable. The industry passed to the West Indies, where it was adopted by the Spaniards, and during the Cuban war came over to the mainland and found a home in Florida.

The finished flower possesses a fantastic beauty which is unique. The shape and color of the vegetable world are present, but there is a certain transparency to all the tissues, a firmness to the lines and resilience to the leaves and blossoms which are never found in the floral kingdom. The New York woman is making quite a success of her trade.

MULES THAT OUTLAST MOTORS.

Forty Years of Service Is Nothing Extraordinary.

The mule is ready to begin work two or three years earlier than the horse. He can be put to pretty heavy pulling when he is three years old, and from that time until he is forty, if he has fair treatment and does not meet with an accident, he is not likely to lose any time. He is not subject to the many ailments to which the horse is a victim; at least, not to any great degree. He lives about twice as long, and his actual period of usefulness is nearly three times as long, for the horse is really not fit for heavy service until he is five years old or after he is twenty, while a mule will often do good service for forty years, and they have been known to work fifty, according to one writer, without being turned out at any time during all the long period.

Like the ass, the mule will live upon next to nothing, and during all his forty years of hard service a mule will not require—and generally does not get—half the feed necessary to sustain a horse during his much shorter period of usefulness.

BAD FOR COLOMBIA

REBELS CREDITED WITH AN IMPORTANT VICTORY AT AGUA DULCE.

BERTI FORCED TO SURRENDER

GOVERNMENT GENERAL AWAKENS TO HELPLESSNESS OF SITUATION.

CITY OF PANAMA IN DANGER

REVOLUTIONISTS ARE ONLY TWO DAYS' MARCH FROM THE CITY.

Colon, Aug. 26.—Nothing definite is known on the isthmus of the situation of the government general, Morales Berti, at Agua Dulce, but many persons believe that the general, after withstanding a siege of several days, during which his forces were subjected, chiefly at night, to a severe military fire from the insurgents, perceived the hopelessness of receiving reinforcements and supplies from Panama, and was forced to surrender the troops of his command to the insurgents.

If the reported surrender of the government forces at Agua Dulce is true, the insurgent general, Herrera, is confronted by a big problem to provide food and shelter for and to control this large and hostile element. Owing to the fact that the government line of communication between Panama and Agua Dulce is broken, but little news reaches Panama from the seat of war, although the contending forces are only two days' march from that city.

Is Most Anxious

Rumors are current on the isthmus that several detachments of insurgents have been seen at the various stations along the railroad line between Colon and Panama and an attack at either end of the line is expected, in certain quarters, to occur at any moment. Because of the presence of insurgents along the railroad, the government to obtain reinforcements on the isthmus as soon as possible. Fresh trouble, however, is said to be brewing in the interior of the republic, and owing to the frequent refusals of steamships to carry government troops, the bringing of reinforcements to the isthmus is apparently no easy matter. The government gunboat Gen. Pinzon arrived at Cartagena a week ago from Colon, after having made the voyage with difficulty. It is now said to be impossible for the Gen. Pinzon to go to sea again in her present condition.

The Colombian government recognizes the revolutionary situation to be serious. Many persons question the ability of the insurgents to hold Colon if they attack and capture this port, owing to the fact that they possess no gunboats on the Atlantic side of the isthmus. The government is endeavoring to purchase another war vessel in the United States for use on the Pacific coast. There is at present no foreign man-of-war at Colon.

Flying the insurgent flag, the Boyaca is now guarding the entrance to the Panama harbor, presumably with the intention of preventing steamers or other vessels from bringing government reinforcements to Panama.

FANATICISM IN CHINA.

Superstitious Natives Believe That the Foreigners Were Responsible for the Outbreak of Cholera.

Pekin, Aug. 26. — An edict has been issued ordering the murderers of an English missionary named Lewis and an Australian missionary named Bruce to be punished. The government expresses regret at the occurrence and promises to make reparation. It is reported that the murders were an outcome of an outburst of superstitious frenzy on the part of the populace, based upon the idea that the missionaries had caused an epidemic of cholera which is raging at Chen Chou by poisoning drinking water. The mob wrecked the mission building and murdered the missionaries, who had but recently arrived at Chen Chou, where they were cordially welcomed.

TEST OF MAINE SUCCESSFUL.

New Battleship Shows Average Speed of 18.03 Knots, and Corrections May Make Showing Better.

Rockport, Mass., Aug. 26.—The battleship Maine, which has been out on its trial trip, crossed the finish line at 3:22, as timed from shore. This makes the total elapsed time thirty seconds less than four hours, and, allowing twenty minutes for the turn at the further end of the line, which always is deducted, the vessel covered the course in 3:39:30, and averaged about 18.03 knots. Tidal corrections will probably give it even a better showing.

ABDUCTED BY A LUNATIC.

Agnes Roach, Aged Fifteen, Carried From Her Home by a Maniac Who Had Escaped From Asylum.

Macon, Ga., Aug. 26.—With a drawn pistol in his hand, James I. Tindall, said to be an escaped lunatic from the sanitarium at Milledgeville, entered the home of L. A. Roach in Wilkinson county and carried off Agnes Roach, a fifteen-year-old girl. The kidnapping was accomplished while Roach was absent from home. At last accounts Tindall had not been found. He drove off with the girl, going in the direction of Macon.

ALL IS NOW SERENE.

Sultan Issues Orders to Concede All Uncle Sam's Demands.

Constantinople, Aug. 26.—An imperial order has been issued commanding that all the demands made by the United States upon Turkey be conceded and the relations between the porte and the United States legation here have resumed their normal condition. United States Minister Leishman and Robert S. McCormick, United States ambassador at Vienna, were present at the selamlik.

PRESIDENT IS GODFATHER.

Attends Christening of the Chanler Baby at Newport.

Nahant, Mass., Aug. 26. — President Roosevelt left Newport yesterday at 2 o'clock in a sumptuous train of four special cars. A more quiet day could not have been spent by the president. As is his custom he rose early and after a light breakfast, left the Chanler house about 9 o'clock and went out to see Mrs. Roosevelt, who had come up on the Sylph during the night. The president was aboard the ship for about two hours. Mrs. Roosevelt accompanied him ashore and spent about half an hour at the Chanler residence, taking a look at the baby, but did not remain for the christening. She left shortly before the event for Oyster Bay. The president remained at the Chanler villa where the ceremony of christening the baby was performed by Rev. John McDonald of the Episcopal church in the presence of the president, who acted as godfather. Traveling on Sunday was somewhat new for the president, but in this instance he was obliged to depart from his usual custom, as he went to Newport for no other purpose than to attend the christening, and it was necessary to make the short journey to Nahant yesterday in order to maintain his schedule. Lieut. Gov. Bates and Adjt. Gen. Dalton of Massachusetts, boarded the train at Newport and completed the arrangements for the entertainment of the president and party in Boston tonight.

TO KILL ROOSEVELT.

Detectives Search High and Low for Emma Goldman.

Omaha, Aug. 26.—The entire city detective force is ransacking Omaha for Emma Goldman, the anarchist from whom McKinley's murderer is said to have received his inspiration. A plot is feared in connection with the visit of the president to Omaha early next month. Three days ago the police were notified from Chicago that Miss Goldman would arrive in Omaha. Mail was received addressed to 706 North Sixteenth street and was delivered at that address, but the occupants said the letters should be forwarded to Chicago, but took the mail in, saying they would forward it. Since then they claim the mail was for another party. Other circumstances force the police to believe the woman is in hiding in Omaha.

LURED TO HER DEATH.

Minnie Mitchell Was Seen at the Bartholin House.

Chicago, Aug. 26.—Whether or not the exhuming of the remains buried in Calvary cemetery as the body of Minnie Mitchell shall develop that the missing girl's family was correct in accepting the body as that of their missing daughter the police have received ample evidence to indicate that young woman was lured in the basement of the Bartholin house on the night that William Bartholin and his sweetheart vanished. A witness unknown up to the present has been found who claims to have seen the young woman descend into the basement of the Bartholin house after making a protest.

HIS HEAD BLOWN OFF.

Wife Confesses to Horrible Murder of Sleeping Husband.

Waverly, Tenn., Aug. 26. — John E. Wright, a prominent farmer of Humphreys county, had the top of his head blown off with a double-barreled shotgun while he slept last night. It was thought that Wright had been assassinated by some one on the outside, but investigation incriminated his wife and she was placed under arrest. Mrs. Wright later confessed.

HIS DREAM TOO TRUE.

Man Awakens to Find Wife and Two Children Dead.

Chicago, Aug. 26. — Bryant Schick was awakened yesterday morning by a dream that a mishap had befallen his wife. He found the house filled with escaping gas and his wife and two children dead. It is supposed that Mrs. Schieck turned on the gas while temporarily insane. She left a note but it was so poorly written that nobody could read it.

ADMITS KILLING WIFE.

South Omaha Carpenter Shoots Helpmeet in Hotel.

Omaha, Aug. 26.—Anton Christianson, a carpenter employed in South Omaha, shot and killed his wife at their rooms at the Montgomery hotel, of which the woman was proprietress. She received one bullet in the head and another through the body, dying instantly. He acknowledged his deed and said it was the result of domestic difficulties.

JUNK DEALER'S JOLT.

It Lands on a Laborer's Jaw and Breaks His Neck.

Logansport, Ind., Aug. 26.—In a dispute over the payment of a debt of 25 cents Thomas Hile, a junk dealer, dealt a terrific blow with his fist on the jaw of Nells Hansen, a laborer aged fifty. Hansen fell dead, his neck being broken.

KISSED MOTHER GOOD-BYE.

Young Man Who Had Been Drinking Then Commits Suicide.

Faribault, Minn., Aug. 26. — Fred Henry, aged twenty-one, went home yesterday after imbibing too much liquor and kissed his mother good-bye, then went out in the back yard and put a bullet through his brain.

Schaffer Critically Ill.

Pittsburg, Aug. 26. — Theodore J. Schaffer, president of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tinworkers, is lying seriously ill at his home. The nature of his illness could not be ascertained last night.

Mother and Babe Drown.

Raymond, Minn., Aug. 26. — News reached here of the accidental drowning of Mrs. H. P. Jensen and her little eighteen-months-old babe in a well on their farm near town. Just how the accident occurred is not known.

Farmers Are Fleeing.

Emporia, Kan., Aug. 26. — Hundreds of farmers are fleeing from the waters of the Cottonwood river leaving behind their deluged farms and flooded homes. The river has been rising for a week.

TO END THE STRIKE

PEOPLE'S ALLIANCE TAKES THE MATTER UP WITH DETERMINATION.

GO ON MISSION TO NEW YORK

WILL ENDEAVOR TO PUT SOME PLAN IN OPERATION TO SETTLE TROUBLE.

MITCHELL IS WILLING TO HELP

WILL DO ANYTHING THAT IS HONORABLE TO ADJUST DIFFICULTY.

Hazleton, Pa., Aug. 26. — D. J. McCarthy, chairman, and Matthew Long and Harry Silverman, members of the executive committee of the Peoples' Alliance of Hazleton, went to New York yesterday to endeavor to put into operation some plan looking to a termination of the strike. They decline to say whom they hope to see in the metropolis. The Peoples' Alliance is composed of business men and miners.

Mitchell Willing to Help.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Aug. 26.—The committee from the public alliance from this city which waited on Senators Quay and Penrose at Atlantic City last week and urged them to use their good offices to bring about arbitration in the coal strike performed a like mission in this city yesterday when they called on President Mitchell and requested him to co-operate with the Pennsylvania senators in bringing about a settlement of the strike. Mr. Mitchell said he would do anything that was honorable to bring about an adjustment, and he furnished the committee with the statistics of the strike from the miners' point of view, which were forwarded to Senator Quay last night.

Quiet in the Coal Field.

Shenandoah, Pa., Aug. 26.—Reports received yesterday showed the entire anthracite coal field to be very quiet. Brig. Gen. Gobin said that a settlement of the strike appeared to him to be as far off as when he arrived here nearly four weeks ago. The troops in all probability will remain here until the strike shall come to an end.

Ask for Special Session of Congress.

New York, Aug. 26.—President Roosevelt will be asked to call a special session of congress to take action to end the coal strike. This was decided at a meeting yesterday of the Central Federation union, representing 250,000 workingmen.

HANNA WITH THE MEN.

Says Miners Will Not Give in as Long as They Are Able to Fight.

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 26.—United States Senator Marcus A. Hanna arrived at Buffalo yesterday on his way home to Cleveland from Niagara Falls. For the first time Senator Hanna stated the final abandonment of all efforts to end the coal strike.

"I have exhausted my efforts," said Senator Hanna. "I have done all in my power and can do no more. I will make no further attempts, for it would be useless."

He said there was no chance of arbitration so long as only one side, the miners, was willing to arbitrate. He gave it as his opinion that the miners will not give in so long as they are able to fight.

It was evident that Senator Hanna's sympathies are with the miners, that he has given up hope of a peaceful settlement and views with sorrow the prolongation of the strike to the end that seems inevitable.

AMBUSHED BY LADRONES.

Filipino Constabulary Given a Desperate Fight.

Manila, Aug. 26.—Ten members of the native constabulary were ambushed last Tuesday at a point near Magdalena, in the province of Sorsogon, Luzon, by a band of sixty ladrones. The latter were armed with rifles and bolos and a desperate fight at close range took place. One member of the constabulary was killed, two were wounded and three were captured. Seventy constabulary have taken the field in pursuit of the ladrones.

CHOLERA SITUATION BAD.

Some Provinces of Luzon Are Severely Stricken.

Manila, Aug. 26.—Official cholera statistics show a total up to date of 18,010 deaths. The actual number of cases and deaths is greatly in excess of the official reports. In Manila there were but eight cases reported last Saturday. In some of the provinces of Luzon the cholera situation is bad; 414 cases and 317 deaths were reported from the province of Ilocos Norte last Saturday.

SLAIN BY CHINESE.

An Austrian and an English Missionary Are Murdered.

Shanghai, Aug. 26.—A native evangelist who has arrived here confirms the reports of the murders of an Australian missionary named Bruce and an English missionary named Lewis at Chen Chou, in Hu Nan province.

Coming to Minnesota.

Chicago, Aug. 26.—Dr. George Francis James of the state normal school of Los Angeles, Cal., has been elected professor of pedagogy in the University of Minnesota.

Fire at Sioux Falls.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Aug. 26. — Fire burned five valuable horses belonging to Dick & Hargo, proprietors of a local meat market. L. N. Steinberg was perhaps fatally injured by being kicked while leading horses out of an adjoining barn.

Five Suffocated at a Fire.

Portland, Me., Aug. 26. — The four children of William Kronberg and a servant girl were suffocated in a fire yesterday in a two-and-a-half-story house.

MAP OF GARDEN OF EDEN.

La Crosse Man Finds Parchment in Mississippi River.

La Crosse, Wis., Aug. 26.—Floating in the Mississippi river near Genoa, a quaint old Indian town, Andrew Thomson, an insurance agent of this city, found a bottle containing an old parchment bearing the location of the Garden of Eden. The chart is drawn in various colors and appears very old. The garden of Eden, as seen by its author, whoever he may be, is between the River Chebar, the River Tigris and the River Euphrates, just north of the Persian gulf. Inscribed on the map is Eden, which was the land entirely overflowed by the flood of Noah's time. The chart bears many remarkable letterings and numbers, and though it is doubtless the work of some crank, the manuscript shows the study of a philosopher.

PAPER PROFITS DECREASED.

Appleton Mills, However, Give No Estimate of Loss.

Appleton, Wis., Aug. 26—No estimate has been given out by Wisconsin paper manufacturers respecting the increased cost of production of paper caused by the shorter hour labor schedule. It is certain that one-twelfth of the product of the product of every mill so affected is cut off and the cost of making the other eleven-twelfths is increased. The International Paper company, the Eastern print paper trust, has been subjected to the action of the same shorter hour schedule, and according to the company's annual report it is making a very large hole in the company's profits.

POLICE FOLLOW FOOTPRINTS.

Marks of Blood Under Window of Jail at Madison.

Madison, Wis., Aug. 26.—The sheriff and police of this city were puzzled yesterday morning over some bloody footprints leading away from the county jail. The trail begins under one of the windows of the jail and ends at the home of Carl M. Johnson, a tailor. It is thought some one was speaking with a prisoner through the window and cut his foot on the glass that fell at the time the sheriff caused the explosion of a bottle of nitro-glycerine last Saturday night.

PANIC ON A LAKE STEAMER.

Alarm of Fire Gives Passengers a Bad Scare.

Sturgeon Bay, Wis., Aug. 26.—A panic was created on the Barry line steamer Empire State at an early hour yesterday while the craft was between Kewaunee and Algoma, by the cry of fire. Passengers were badly frightened and it was with great difficulty that some of the more timid were restrained from throwing themselves overboard. The panic was caused by a small explosion of kerosene in the cook's galley. The flames were subdued without loss.

MISSING GIRL FOUND.

Freda Zagal, Supposed to Have Been Kidnapped, Is at Madison.

Madison, Wis., Aug. 26—The mystery of the disappearance of Miss Freda Zagal, seventeen years old, who was supposed to have been kidnapped two months ago while on her way to Madison from her home in Minnesota, has been solved. She turned up here yesterday at the home of her aunt, Mrs. Louise Aufrecht. The girl says she met a man while waiting for a train at Minneapolis and entered into his employment.

CASHIER KILLS HIMSELF.

Accounts Are Straight and No Reason Is Known for the Deed.

Milwaukee, Wis., Aug. 26. — William B. Meadowcraft, cashier for the Pacific Express company in Milwaukee, and formerly superintendent of the Northern Steamship company at Buffalo, committed suicide yesterday in the office of the company by shooting himself twice with a revolver. His accounts are said to be straight and no reason is known for the deed. Meadowcraft was thirty-five years old and single.

TWO NEW BANKS.

Rushford (Minn.) and New Rockford (N. D.) to Have Them.

Washington, Aug. 26.—Authority has been granted for the organization of the First National Bank of Rushford, Minn., capital $25,000. The First National Bank of New Rockford, N. D., has been authorized to begin business, capital $25,000.

His Excitement Is Fatal.

Muscatine, Iowa, Aug. 26.—Constable Harvey Varner fell dead last evening while in the act of arresting two men who had been engaged in a saloon row. He had hurried to the scene, and become excited, and the sight of blood, cut faces and great commotion is supposed to have further excited him, and as he stepped up to arrest the men he fell into the arms of a bystander and in three minutes was dead.

Escapes From the Pen.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Aug. 26. — Joseph Grant, sent to the penitentiary for two years from the Black Hills for grand larceny, has escaped. A posse of men is searching for him. While stacking oats on the prison farm Grant concealed himself in a near-by corn field while the stack was between himself and the guard.

MEET ON A CURVE

TWO ELECTRIC TRAINS COME TOGETHER WITH A FRIGHTFUL CRASH.

THREE KILLED, MANY INJURED

TWO MOTORMEN AND A BOY CRUSHED TO DEATH IN THE DEBRIS.

FAILED TO OBEY HIS ORDERS

MOTORMAN HAD BEEN ORDERED TO HOLD HIS CAR ON A SIDING.

Norfolk, Va., Aug. 26.—In a head-on collision between two electric cars here yesterday three persons were killed, one fatally and several very seriously injured.

The accident occurred seven miles from Norfolk. One car was coming from Roanville and the other goin to that place. The orders were that the south-bound car should wait at the siding. Motorman W. S. Yandell failed to obey orders and the crash came 400 yards beyond the siding. Yandall endeavored to jump, but was crushed in the telescoped cars and died hanging by his right leg. Motorman C. D. Colden of the other car applied the air brakes as soon as he saw the danger, the collision occurring on a curve, and then tried to jump, as did Linwood Fentress, the ten-year-old son of R. B. Fentress, president of the Norfolk Cold Storage Warehouse company. Both Colden and Fentress were caught under the debris of the south-bound car which piled upon the other and were killed outright. Colden's head was almost torn from his body and both legs were torn off. The Fentress boy was crushed to death. Both cars were full of Sunday excursionists and a few escaped injury.

FATAL RAILROAD WRECK.

Two Sections of a Freight Crash Together.

New Albany, Ind., Aug. 26.—In a disastrous freight wreck on the Southern railway near Georgetown, Engineer Red Duval, Fireman B. Cox and Brakeman Ross of one train were killed outright and Engineer Harry Goodall and Fireman George Myers of the other train were probably fatally hurt. Fourteen box cars and two locomotives were completely overturned into a ravine forty feet below and were demolished. Two sections of the through freight were coming east and the first section was stopped at Dunston's Switch, leaving the cut-off car on the main track. There is a heavy grade at this point and by some means the cars broke away and rolled down the track, gaining momentum at each revolution of the wheels. Just as the runaway cars were approaching the trestle the second section, drawn by two mogul engines, came thundering over the hill and the crash occurred a moment later. The cars piled over the locomotives and all went down into the ravine in a heap.

FIERCE RACE WAR.

Baseball Game Arouses Fighting Spirit of Blacks and Whites.

Indianapolis, Aug. 26. — A race riot broke out at Haughville, a suburb of this city yesterday afternoon between 200 negroes and whites employed by the National Malleable Castings company. There has been bitter race feeling between them for several years and trouble has frequently broken out. A ball game yesterday morning between the two factions caused excitement. As the crowd left the field hostilities commenced. Stones, bricks, clubs and other missiles were used. Twelve or fifteen shots were fired and its is reported one negro was shot, but he was taken from the field before the police arrived. The whites were victorious, driving the blacks from the field and wounding a number of them. Several white people were badly injured. Ten arrests have been made and others will be made as rapidly as the persons can be found.

HUSBAND IS SUSPECTED.

Wife Is Killed Under Peculiar Circumstances.

New Albany, Ind., Aug. 26. — Minnie Masterson, wife of James Masterson, was killed here last night and her husband is in jail charged with the murder. He denies the charge. He claims he and his wife were returning from Louisville to their home here and had just got off a car when a man stepped from behind a post and grabbed his wife who was a few steps ahead of him and the woman screamed: "For God's sake, Willie, don't," and three shots were fired in rapid succession by her assailant. Masterson says the murderer of his wife fired three shots at him, one of which took effect in his arm. He was bleeding profusely from a wound in his arm when arrested.

LOCOMOTIVE BOILER LETS GO.

One Killed, Three Fatally Injured and One Seriously Hurt.

Mexico, Mo., Aug. 26.—One man was killed, three fatally injured and one seriously hurt early yesterday by the explosion of the boiler of a big mogul engine drawing the first section of a Chicago & Alton train eleven miles east of this city. All the men were riding on the engine when the accident occurred. The boiler was blown 200 yards and nine cars were ditched.

HIGGINSON THE VICTOR.

Commander Pillsbury Fails to Run the Blockade.

Rockport, Mass., Aug. 26.—The white squadron of Commander Pillsbury failed to run the blockade of Admiral Higginson's fleet during Saturday night and was captured at 5:40 yesterday morning under Misery island, off Manchester, Mass. The battleships surrounded the enemy and a preponderance of fighting strength settled the question. This gave the maneuvering victory to Admiral Higginson.

SEATTLE GETS IT

NEXT TRANSMISSISSIPPI CONGRESS WILL MEET ON THE COAST.

MEETS WITH NO OPPOSITION

BEEF TRUST ADDRESS IS ALLOWED TO STAY IN THE RECORDS.

OUTLINE OF CONGRESS' WORK

RESOLUTIONS SET FORTH WHAT IS EXPECTED TO BE ACCOMPLISHED.

St. Paul Aug. 23.—The Transmississippi Commercial congress will meet next year in Seattle. The decision was made last night and the Puget sound city selected without opposition. Even New Orleans, an aspirant during the preceding days of the congress, withdrew.

Yesterday's sessions included a sharp debate on the Thurber beef trust address, resulting in the withdrawal of a motion to expunge the paper from the records. During the afternoon several papers were read and the committee on resolutions formulated its report, which, when presented in the evening, outlined what the delegates hope to accomplish for the West. The evening was devoted to consideration of the report and other business matters.

The report of the committee on resolutions included all the important measures submitted during the sessions of the congress. In brief, it was that there be adopted expressions favoring the following projects:

The broadening of irrigation plans and the rapid introduction of improved irrigation works through the arid regions of the Transmississippi territory. Waterway improvements are included, and special reference is made to the deepening of the Mississippi channel between the mouth of the Ohio and Missouri rivers to a uniform depth of nine feet.

The development of a merchant marine, the necessity for which is shown by the fact that only 9 per cent of American exports are carried in American ships.

The development and improvement of the present system of public highways and dissemination of information concerning proper methods of constructing good roads.

The establishment at Duluth of a naval training station, including favorable action on the part of the naval board appointed to select a site, and proper legislation for carrying out the work.

Improvement of the consular service, the elimination of political "pull" in the making of appointments, and the introduction of a hard and fast rule that men for the service shall be selected for special fitness and merit alone. The necessity for a better service is emphasized in connection with growing commerce.

The establishment of a national executive department of commerce and mines under the charge of a secretary who shall be a cabinet officer.

EDITOR VANDIVER DEAD.

Passes Away Suddenly From Heart Failure.

St. Peter, Minn., Aug. 23.—J. S. Vandiver, editor and proprietor of the St. Peter Journal and one of the most widely known newspaper men in Minnesota, died of heart failure yesterday at his home in St. Peter. While he has been ailing for about a week, it was not suspected that his condition was critical, and his death came as a surprise. Mr. Vandiver has been connected with the press of Minnesota for upward of twenty years. He was for a long time connected with the St. Paul Dispatch in an editorial capacity, and at one time owned a paper in Stillwater. About a year ago he purchased the St. Peter Journal and has since made his residence there.

WOMEN MAY VOTE.

Wisconsin Attorney General Rules on Law of Last Legislature.

Madison, Wis., Aug. 23. — Wisconsin women will have the right to vote for state and county superintendents of schools at the coming general election, and separate ballots must be provided for their accommodation. This is the opinion given by Attorney General Hicks in response to Secretary of State Froelich's request for instructions on the law passed by the last legislature on this subject.

Named by Iowa Prohibs.

Waterloo, Iowa, Aug. 23. — The Iowa state prohibition convention yesterday placed the following ticket in the field: Secretary of state, H. H. Howard, Marshalltown; auditor, John W. Leedy, Waverly; railroad commissioner, E. N. Albright, Des Moines; attorney general, J. B. Ferguson, Cedar county; judge supreme court, J. A. Harvey, Dallas county.

Town Badly Scorched.

Jeffers, Minn., Aug. 23.—Fire started in the Central hotel at 1 o'clock yesterday morning, causing a loss of $20,000, and burning A. A. Faust's general merchandise store, containing the postoffice and implement house, and a building used for restaurant purposes belonging to Nels Anderson.

Run Down by Street Car.

Duluth, Minn., Aug. 23. — Freeman Keen, aged seventy-one years, and the oldest settler but one at the head of the lake, having come here in 1852, met almost instant death at West Duluth late last night by being run down by a street car.

Killed by a Train.

St. Paul, Aug. 23.—Joseph Meyer, a Polish laborer on the Great Northern road, was struck and instantly killed by an Eastern Minnesota passenger train in the Western avenue yards.

LAMB TELLS HIS STORY.

Implicates Bourke Cockran and Others in Power Suit.

New York, Aug. 23.—Lawyer George Alfred Lamb, attorney for Peter Power, went on the stand yesterday and told all he knew about the Northern Pacific merger suit. He named the men who, with Power as plaintiff and Capt. Henry Stern as go-between, he said, had hoped to conceal their connection with the litigation and keep their identity hidden. These he named were W. Bourke Cockran, Camille Weidenfeld, H. Content & Co. and Edwin R. Thomas of the firm of Thomas & Post, Wall street bankers and brokers. The story of Power's wandering came out and a plan to send him to Europe was revealed as was his quasi-connection with the suit at issue. Lamb said that he was practically forced by the people back of him to send Power away and that they paid the expenses of his trip to West-Hurley and to Montreal. Peter Power himself was on the stand at the afternoon session. In a measure his testimony was corroborative of that given by Lawyer Lamb regarding the connection of Messrs. Cockran and Weidenfeld with the suit.

PLEA FOR ARBITRATION.

Situation in Coal Region Is Becoming Alarming.

Wilkesbarre, Aug. 23. — T. W. Hart, chairman of the public alliance of this city, has issued an address to the press and public in which he urges that every influence be used to bring about the settlement of the coal strike by arbitration. He says the situation is now becoming acute and threatens every business in the strike region. The Warnke washery at Duryea prepared considerable coal for the market yesterday. The washery is still under heavy guard, but the strikers have made no attempt to interfere with the employes. Doubt is expressed at strike headquarters whether J. Pierpont Morgan will use his influence with the presidents of the coal-carrying railroads to bring the strike to a close, and the sub-district officers of the United Mineworkers are of the same opinion as their chief officer, President Mitchell, that the battle will have to be fought to a finish.

FRENCH HOPES FIND VENT.

Feeling Against Germany Is Expressed at Historic Spot.

Berlin, Aug. 23. — The outburst of French feeling against Germany that took place at the celebration of the anniversary of the battle of Mars-la-Tour (or Vionville, fought Aug. 16, 1870), is described circumstantially by a correspondent telegraphing from Strasburg. Many inhabitants of Lorraine crossed the frontier in order to participate in the ceremonies. Bishop Turinaz of Nancy, addressing these persons, said: "You come across the border in spite of German cannon and in spite of the unhappiness hanging over your provinces, to show here, on French soil, your unshaken fidelity to the old Fatherland. Through your very presence you ask the silent but eloquent questions: 'How long shall we wait for you?' 'When will you come to liberate us?'"

BOERS HAVE HOPES.

Only a Short Time Before They Will Be Free.

Paris, Aug. 23. — A letter from Mr. Reitz, ex-secretary of state in the Transvaal government, to J. McBride, an Irishman who held a command in the Boer army during the recent war, is published here. It shows that the irreconcilable spirit is still strong among some of the Boers. In the course of the letter, Mr. Reitz says: "It gave me much pleasure to receive your letter on the 18th inst., and to read what you say about our country, and your conviction, which is also mine and will continue to be until we get our country back, that the time will shortly come when our countries will be as free as God meant they should be."

BARTHOLIN HELD TO BE GUILTY.

Coroner's Jury Charges Him With Murder of His Mother.

Chicago, Aug. 23.—The coroner's jury at the inquest yesterday over the body of Mrs. Anna Bartholin brought in a verdict recommending that her son, William Bartholin be arrested and held as principal for her murder and that Oscar Thompson and Edward Counselman, who are under arrest accused of complicity in the murder of Minnie Mitchell, to be held to the grand jury as accomplices to the murder. The jury found that Mrs. Bartholin came to her death on or about July 7. Death was due to strangulation.

KILLED WIFE WITH AN AXE.

She Joined a Secret Society Notwithstanding His Objections.

Muskogee, Ind. T., Aug. 23.—James Hope, a Creek freedman farmer was lodged in jail here yesterday, having confessed to the murder of his wife. Hope, according to his own story, had forbidden his wife to join a secret society, but she ignored his command and became a member. When she returned from the lodge meeting Hope met her at the door of their home, attacked her with an axe and chopped her head off.

WILL SUCCEED CAMBON.

Jean Adrien Antoine Jules Jusserand All of His Name.

Paris, Aug. 23.—Jean Adrien Antoine Jules Jusserand, French minister at Copenhagen, has been appointed to represent France at Washington in succession to M. Jules Cambon. M. Jusserand, who is in his forty-eighth year, entered the service of France in 1878, when he was attached to the French consulate in London, and has since held various public offices.

Attempted Wife Murder.

St. Paul, Aug. 23.—Samuel Morin, or Moran, attempted to murder his wife yesterday afternoon. He put two bullets into her body, but failed in his purpose. The woman, although severely wounded, will recover. Family troubles covering a period of some months led up to the attempted murder. Morin was placed under arrest.

Boers Flocking Home.

Jamestown, St. Helena, Aug. 23. — A thousand more Boers, former prisoners, sailed for South Africa last evening.

IN TRACEY'S STEPS

MINNESOTA HAS JUVENILE DISCIPLE OF THE OREGON CONVICT.

ESCAPES FROM TRAINING SCHOOL

BOY TELLS PEOPLE HE IS LOOKING FOR FIFTEEN ESCAPED INMATES.

DISPLAYS TRUE TRACEY NERVE

STEALS A BOAT AND ROWS TO THE WISCONSIN SHORE—REWARD OFFERED.

St. Paul, Aug. 23.—Minnesota has a juvenile disciple of Tracey, the Oregon bandit. The boy was an inmate of the state training school at Red Wing, but he escaped a few days ago, stole a boat and rowed across Lake Pepin. Although seen several times, he eluded his pursuers, and his whereabouts is as uncertain as was the trail of the famous bandit.

The boy escaped from the training school soon after supper. He went across the country about six miles to Lake Pepin. There is a standing reward for the apprehension of escaped inmates of the training school, and the people of the neighborhood ordinarily are on the watch for youths who cannot give a good account of themselves. But this boy had the true Tracey nerve.

He wore the regulation uniform of the school, and was seen several times. When it was necessary to make an explanation, he said he was a "trusty" and was on the trail of fifteen incorrigible inmates who had escaped that evening. That set the people

Looking for the Fifteen.

The youth reached the shore of Lake Pepin at the cottage of C. S. Cowles. There was a boat tied to the floating dock, and the boy took little time to decide on his plan of action. He went to the dock and began to untie the boat. Eric Larson, Mr. Cowles' neighbor, noticed the boy and his uniform, and thought the actions suspicious, but before he could investigate the youth had pushed out and was rowing rapidly toward the Wisconsin shore. It is supposed he entered Beef slough, where, it is said, some of the loggers are not unfriendly to boys who escape.

The usual steps to recapture the boy were taken by the officers of the training school, and Mr. Cowles informed President Leavitt of the board of control of the theft of the boat. The matter was called to the attention of Supt. Brown of the training school, and every effort will be made to recover the boat, which is valued at $35, as well as to recapture the boy.

EDITORS' OUTING ENDS.

Holders of Thought Enjoy Their Annual Excursion.

St. Paul, Aug. 23.—The annual excursion of the Minnesota Editorial association ended yesterday morning with the arrival of the members in St. Paul on their return from Duluth. The editorial party was smaller than usual this year, only 100 persons making the trip. Those that joined the company, however, say that they had a most enjoyable tour. The party left St. Paul Aug. 12, and at Duluth boarded the steamer Huronic for the trip down the lake to Mackinac island and through the Soo canal to Sarnia. At Duluth, on the return, the party was entertained at a banquet given by the Commercial club at the Hotel St. Louis. Two trips were made from that city to the iron mines of St. Louis county, and at Evelyth the editors were again entertained at a banquet.

"HERE GOES NOTHING."

Woman Jumps Into River in an Effort to Commit Suicide.

Helena, Mont., Aug. 23.—Mrs. Minnie Williams attempted suicide at Missoula because some practical joker telephoned had been shot at a near-by town. As she jumped from the bridge she cried: "Here goes nothing." Harry Collins, editor of the Missoulian, heard her remark, and jumped in the river in an attempt to save her life. A plank was thrown to Collins and he managed to keep her afloat until a boat arrived. The woman fought Collins desperately, but was finally hauled into the boat and afterward taken to the hospital.

WOMAN QUELLS MUTINY.

Iowa Sheriff Is Wounded in an Attempted Jail Delivery.

Des Moines, Iowa, Aug. 23.—A telephone message from Centerville states that a mutiny occurred in the county jail early yesterday morning, resulting in the serious wounding of Sheriff Davis. The sheriff's wife seized an axe, and, with the assistance of Deputy Bevington, who had a revolver, forced the prisoners back into their cells. The mutiny follows a series of attempts to break jail within the past week, two of which were successful.

Reminders of Massacre.

New Ulm, Minn., Aug. 23.—A feature of the massacre celebration, Aug. 23 and 24, which will prove of especial interest is the relic room, where will be exhibited trophies and trinkets captured from the Indians, valuable family heirlooms and many other souvenirs of the early days. The room will be located in a building upon the principal street and no admission will be charged.

Bride Commits Suicide.

Keokuk, Iowa, Aug. 23.—Mrs. Edwin Zimmerman, a bride of seven months, committed suicide at Fort Madison by drinking a phial of carbolic acid after a quarrel with her husband over a trivial matter.

MIMIC NAVAL WARFARE.

Another Day Goes by Without Expected Attack of Hostile Fleet.

Rockport, Mass., Aug. 23. — At midnight thirty-six hours had passed of the possible 120 for the naval conflict between the attacking squadron in charge of Commander Pillsbury and the defending squadron commanded by Rear Admiral Higginson. The coming of another day was recorded, but the anticipated meeting between the hostile fleets had not come to pass. After a day which had been on the whole devoid of any sensations, the night, thick and cloudy as it was, with the moon quite obscured, developed so many confusing situations and so many extraordinary reports that the Higginson squadron had just cause for grave uneasiness. Somehow the feeling grew that it would not be such a difficult attainment after all for three auxiliary cruisers of the white squadron to slip in and anchor at some harbor, protected as they would be by the inviting darkness which prevailed. In the early part of the night the station at the Isle of Shoals, notified the nearest mainland point by the use of torches and the secret code of the navy that a large, strange two-masted craft had been sighted outside the shoals. Admiral Higginson's wonderful system of signals worked to perfection. Almost in a moment, it seemed, the destroyer Decatur was rocketed from Portsmouth to put in to pursue the mysterious comer, and in another moment the Decatur, with the smoke belching from her four great stacks, was plowing furiously through the heavy seas. The stranger turned and fled at full speed, and this fact led to the decision that she may have been one of the attacking fleet passing onward on scout duty. At a later hour the Decatur had made no report.

KNOCKED OUT BY A GIRL.

Tramp Wants Money and Gets Something Else.

New York, Aug. 23. — Miss Beesley, who is nineteen years old and pretty, went for a ride on her bicycle, and after climbing a steep hill sat down to rest under a chestnut tree. She was enjoying the beautiful scenery when her rest was interrupted by a tramp. He demanded money and started to grasp her arm. Miss Beesley jumped to her feet, and as he put out his hand seized it and gave it a twist that caused the fellow to cry out with pain. The young woman had boxed with her brother, and the next moment she gave the tramp the surprise of his life by landing a stinging left-hander on his chin. As he staggered backward she followed it up with a blow from the shoulder that sent him to grass. Then she mounted her bicycle and finished her ride.

HOG CHOLERA CURED.

Made Immune for Eight Months by a New Discovery.

Indianapolis, Aug. 23. — The eastern part of Indiana has been ravaged by hog cholera for two months. A remedy has been discovered by Dr. Frederick Kemmer of Wayne county and applied to more than 400 hogs in the last ten days, and not a hog so treated has died. Dr. Kemmer describes the remedy as an anti-toxine made for the cholera germ. The germ is isolated, dried and pulverized. A fluid is made of this powder and it is injected into the hog to antagonize the poison of the cholera. Dr. Kemmer says that the hog is then immune from cholera for eight months, when the operation ought to be repeated. He says that the medicine does not have any bad effect on the meat.

SUCCESS OF OLYMPIAN GAMES

Is Assured by Promised Support of President and State Governors.

Chicago, Aug. 23.—The states of the United States, President Roosevelt and prominent government officials will cooperate and participate in the production of the International Olympian games of 1904. All foreign countries will be represented. France has promised to send its army cadets and has asked for the games of 1908. This much is indicated in letters from governors of states and commanders of national guards throughout the country in reply to invitations which were sent out ten days ago from the general offices in this city, and from cables just received from Paris and Berlin.

LIKE A WOUNDED BIRD.

Flying Machine Takes a Header, but Its Guide Is Unhurt.

Cincinnati, Aug. 23. — Skimming the ground for fifty feet, a flying machine invented by C. M. Mallory, a patternmaker at the Bullock Electric plant in Norwood, dived suddenly to the ground and was wrecked on the lawn of Yonote Inn, Kennedy Heights, a suburb of this city. The disgusted inventor, unhurt, carried the machine to the Louisville & Nashville station near by, and sent it up again — this time in smoke.

PARACHUTE FAILS TO OPEN.

Aeronaut's Feet Driven Into the Earth Six Inches.

Danville, Ill., Aug. 23.—At the Homer fair yesterday afternoon 12,000 people saw the aeronaut, L. A. Sartell of Fairwell, Mich., fall 1,200 feet. When he cut loose his parachute failed to open. His feet were driven into the earth six inches and there was a compound fracture of both limbs. He may recover.

DEATH LIST REACHES SIXTEEN.

Victims of the Terrible Explosion at Wilmington, Del.

Wilmington, Del., Aug. 23.—Five bodies were found in the ruins of the Jessup & Moore Paper company's digesting room yesterday, bringing the number of known dead up to sixteen. The injured in the hospital will recover.

Cresceus Breaks the Record.

Indianapolis, Aug. 23.—Cresceus yesterday afternoon trotted a mile at the Indiana State fair grounds track in 2:04 1-4, breaking the track mile trotting record. This record was established in 1894 by Nancy Hanks at 2:04 1-2. George Ketcham drove Cresceus.

Two Deaf Men Killed.

Kansas City, Aug. 23. — Rufus K. Cravens and O. P. Nolan, quarrymen, were struck by a west-bound Rock Island passenger train west of here yesterday and killed. Both were deaf.

OVATION TO TAFT

GREATEST DEMONSTRATION IN THE HISTORY OF THE PHILIPPINES.

MARKED BY DEEP SINCERITY

CHILDREN SHOWER THE GOVERNOR'S CARRIAGE WITH FOWERS.

TELLS PEOPLE OF HIS MISSION

IN TWO YEARS ISLANDS WILL BE PRACTICALLY ON FREE-TRADE BASIS.

Manila, Aug. 24. — The reception to Gov. Taft, who yesterday arrived here, was the grandest affair in the history of the Philippines. The residents of the islands state that it was never approached in any way by the Spanish royal celebrations. In its elaborateness of details, dignity and sincerity, and spontaneous enthusiasm, it has never been excelled.

The governor landed opposite Fort Santiago and was saluted by 30,000 people, including the entire Manila garrison, members of the Federal party, Chinese, Americans, Filipinos, members of the chambers of commerce, American and other clubs and schools and provincial delegations.

There was a procession of carriages that reached for a mile and a half. This procession acted as an escort for Gov. Taft through the streets that were lined with flags. There were eight triumphal arches, under which Gov. Taft had to pass. Children standing on the sidewalks threw flowers as the governor's carriage passed by and released doves. The governor's carriage was halted frequently by the cheering crowds. At one point it was surrounded by eighty boys and girls, who rang a hymn dedicated to Gov. Taft.

When the governor reached the palace the chairman of the reception committee delivered an address of welcome. Senor Herrera, in behalf of the city, followed with another welcoming speech.

Gov. Taft Deeply Moved.

Gov. Taft was apparently deeply moved by these demonstrations. In a speech in reply to the addresses the governor told in an interesting, straightforward way of his experiences at Washington and Rome. He said the American congress was actuated solely in the legislation for the islands for the best interests of the people. He declared that the inhabitants should be congratulated on this legislation, which was in favor of the Filipinos, and did not permit the exploitation of the islands.

He went on to say that possibly some of the measures that appeared restrictive would be modified if it were found that they were detrimental to business. The governor laid particular emphasis on the statement that the United States was moved by the kindliest and most generous feelings toward the Filipinos. This statement was greeted with great applause. He predicted that American tariff duties on Philippine products would be reduced in two years to a practically free trade basis. He urged his hearers to avoid using political agitation and to turn their attention to agriculture and manufacturing. This sentiment was greeted with applause.

After the reception at the palace, hundreds remained in the marble room to shake hands with the governor, who appeared in excellent health.

KING ALFONSO MAY BE INSANE.

Remarkable Antics of the Boy Ruler of Spain Cause Fears.

Madrid, Aug. 24.—King Alfonso's eccentricities have aroused the fear that the young monarch is insane. During his recent provincial tour he repeatedly gave evidence of a lack of mental balance, and almost drove Gen. Pacheco, his chief attendant, frantic by his actions. At Oviedo at the great reception the king complained of being bored and asked why he could not go to bed. Gen. Pacheco explained that etiquette demanded that the people leave first.

"Oh, must they," replied his majesty, "I'll soon send them away."

A moment later Alfonso doubled his fists and, placing them to his mouth in imitation of a bugle, sounded "taps." Everybody stood aghast and glanced toward the king, who again sounded "taps," then stretched his arms and yawned. The people took the hint and departed.

WILL BE DISMISSED.

Probable End of Power Suit Against Northern Pacific.

New York, Aug. 24.—According to authoritative information the suit of Peter Power against the Northern Pacific will be dismissed. It is not likely, however, that the whole subject will be dropped, and there will be a further hearing because of the testimony of Lawyer Lamb and Mr. Powers.

TO KILL THE SULTAN.

Committee Said to Have Been Organized for That Purpose.

Vienna, Aug. 24.—A newspaper published in Bucharest, Roumania, alleges it has learned that M. Sarafoff, ex-leader of the Macedonian revolutionary committee, has organized a committee the object of which is to effect the assassination of the sultan of Turkey.

FIRST SHIPMENT OF COAL.

It Causes Great Excitement Among Strikers.

Shenandoah, Pa., Aug. 24. — Fifteen cars of coal were shipped from Silver Creek colliery, near New Philadelphia, last night, and as it was the first coal that has been prepared for market in that district since the strike began, the strikers were very much excited and several hundred congregated along the railway tracks watching the train go by.

KNOX PREFERS MERGER FIGHT

To Appointment on the Supreme Court of the United States.

Washington, Aug. 21.—The semi-official announcement that Justice Shiras will retire from the supreme court early next year has started anew the gossip about Attorney General Knox as a probable successor to him. The intimate friends of the attorney general don't take much stock in this gossip, as they don't believe that Mr. Knox would care to retire from the active practice of his profession in the prime of life even to accept such a position of honor and dignity as that on the supreme bench. He has entered upon a great contest regarding the control of trusts and he would not retire from that contest until the Northern merger case is fully decided for any honor or emolument. He believes implicitly in the correctness of his position regarding the trusts, and so does President Roosevelt. They have entered upon this fight, and expect to carry it to its conclusion until the supreme court of the United States decides the question as to the control of the government regarding such combinations of capital.

BURNED IN TENEMENT.

New York Fire Trap Burns and Several Lives Are Lost.

New York, Aug. 21.—In a tenement house fire at 86 Essex street yesterday two women and three children were burned severely about the body and face and a man had three ribs broken by jumping from a window to the pavement. The bodies of the dead women were burned beyond recognition. The injured woman is Mrs. Rosa Moses, and the name of the man who jumped is Jacob Moscovitz. A woman named Mrs. Hannah Balothin could not be found after the fire, and it was believed that one of the burned bodies found was her's. Nathan Liebowitz reported to the police that his four children, Moses, Julius, Louis and Sallie, respectively 3, 5, 6 and 8 years old, were missing, and a search of the building resulted in the finding of the badly burned bodies of two children, supposed to belong to Liebowitz. The body of an elderly woman was also found.

SCHWAB WILL NOT RESIGN.

Says He Is Not Sick, but Needs a Rest.

New York, Aug. 21. — Charles M. Schwab, president of the United States Steel corporation, arrived here last evening. He was accompanied by his brother Joseph Schwab and his private secretary. He stepped briskly from the car, and as he did so he said to a number of newspaper men present: "Now, gentlemen, I am going to tell you three things, and I don't want you to ask me any further questions. In the first place I don't look like a sick man. In the second place, I feel the necessity of a rest and I am going to take one. In the third place I am not going to resign and have no intention of retiring from the presidency of the United States Steel corporation."

"Are you going to Europe?" he was asked.

"Yes," he replied, "but don't ask me any more questions; that's all I have to say."

PETER POWER IN JAIL.

Vanishing Plaintiff Surrenders Himself in New York.

New York, Aug. 21.—Peter Power, the 'vanishing plaintiff' whose suit against the Northern Pacific has thrown much light on the methods employed by the organizers of "strike" and "hold-up" litigation, yesterday came here from Montreal, accompanied by George Alfred Lamb, his attorney, and surrendered himself to the custody of Marshal Henkel. The latter promptly led him off to the dungeons of Ludlow street. All day long Lamb sought to restore his client to freedom, but his efforts were fruitless, and nightfall found the unhappy Power still behind the prison bars. There, too, he is likely to stay for the next thirty days, unless his diligent lawyer can induce Judge Lacombe to relent.

CAR JUMPS THE TRACK.

Eight Passengers Are Injured, Two of Them Fatally.

New York, Aug. 21.—Eight persons were seriously injured, two of them at least fatally, and a dozen others severely, last night when one of the heavy open street cars of the Union Railway line of the Bronx left the track on Jerome Park avenue near the crossing of Mosholu Parkway and turned completely over in a ditch. Going down a steep incline, at the rate of thirty miles an hour, the car suddenly shot from the tracks. Everybody was hurled from the seats. The car seemed to leap entirely off the tracks and into the air. To the right of the track is a deep roadway, and into this the big car plunged.

JUST A HINT TO TURKEY.

State Department Admits Relations Are Unsatisfactory.

Washington, Aug. 21.—It is admitted at the state department that there is a renewal of tension between the United States and Turkey, but the officials do not deem it prudent to disclose the present condition of affairs. They say, however that the condition is in no way grave, but is of that strained character which has occurred from time to time with Turkey in recent years.

It is gathered that the present tension grows out of the long pending claims of Americans who suffered loss during the Armenian outbreak. To some extent the Stone abduction gave added cause for irritation.

Delays Farm Work.

Morris, Minn., Aug. 21.—Rain heavy enough to delay stacking and threshing fell over this vicinity yesterday morning.

Four More Victims.

Geling, Neb., Aug. 21. — Four more victims, making six in all, died yesterday as a result of burns received Monday night by the bursting of a kerosene can which was being used to ignite a fire at the home of C. N. McComsey.

Fuel Famine Threatened.

Pittsburg, Aug. 21. — The Post publishes a story to the effect that a fuel famine is threatened for the mills in this district and that 60,000 men may be thrown into enforced idleness through the lack of coal and coke.

That Which Was Lost.

A lover said: "I do not hate the years
That touch to gray the softness of her hair.
For me Remembrance leaves the sunlight there.

"I love the lines that colder eyes than mine
Read on the spirit-fairness of her face.
The soul's handwriting tells its inward grace.

"But once around her beauty, still so dear,
Blew an enchanted air; a mystery
That shook my heart, but kept its own from me.

"There was a secret hidden in her eyes;
And in her voice one note I thrilled to hear.
Have the years slain it, ere I read it clear?"

Even as he spoke, her soft eyes met his own
And answered. Far behind their love and truth
Shone the lost magic and immortal youth.

The Silent Man's Wooing.

BY CARRIE MAY ASHTON.

(Copyright, 1902, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

He was a big silent man wholly absorbed in business and self the world said.

Respected by many, but loved by none, his employes said.

No one could be more just than he, but those about him often wished he was more like other men.

He was not conscious of the fact that he threw a damper on every one in the office.

He had never known what a home was in the true sense of the word.

His father had deserted his mother when he was a few weeks old, and the poor little woman had lingered until the lad was six years old.

He had loved her passionately, but after she left him he had learned to live within himself.

He had found the world a cold, hard one to the homeless, but with a fine physical inheritance and dauntless courage he had worked his way up from a carrier-boy to the proprietor of one of the largest newspapers in a large metropolis.

He was never a social creature and refused all invitations.

He knew very few women and they rarely saw his best side.

He lived in a very quiet boarding house where Madame Brunig, a kindly German woman, kept a half dozen men who could afford to pay her well.

Elizabeth Wells, a wholesome, attractive girl of twenty-five, had spent the summer vacation with Madame as she was teaching in a neighboring city, and her mother was traveling with a party in California.

Madame was always ready to welcome the girl, as she had no children of her own.

The other men had treated her most kindly—the youngest having paid her considerable attention, but Norman Baker had never exchanged a half dozen words with her.

The fact was he did not know what to say to a woman.

He seldom felt at ease in a woman's presence, but instead of disliking her as the other boarders said, he had grown much interested in the merry, sunshiny girl, and when Thanksgiving came and with it Miss Wells, none greeted her with a heartier handshake than the reserved Mr. Baker.

He did not as usual retire to his sanctum immediately after meals during the young woman's visit, but mingled with the other boarders and for him was quite genial.

Saturday morning he asked Miss Wells to drive with him that afternoon, but she had promised Jack Bradshaw the night before.

"Will you go with me Sunday afternoon then?" he inquired, knowing this was his last opportunity as the young girl was to leave early Monday morning.

Very much astonished at the invitation she pleasantly accepted.

The first few miles of their drive Mr. Baker seemed quite oblivious of the young lady at his side.

All at once he said in an embarrassed manner: "Miss Wells I am a plain, blunt man, unused to the society of ladies. I probably have a strange way of showing it, but I am deeply interested in you and want to make you my wife. I have never loved any woman in my life before, except my mother.

"My life has been a quiet, lonely one and I have no close friends."

To say that Elizabeth Wells was surprised, but mildly expresses it.

She had had offers before, but had never seen a man that she cared enough for to give up her freedom.

"I do not know you well enough Mr. Baker to feel sure that I should make you or myself happy as your wife. Our acquaintance has been so very brief, I do not know the least thing about you, except that you are proprietor of The Bulletin. You know little more about me. I shall be glad to continue the acquaintance and at the end of six months you can ask me the same question again and I will answer it."

" * * * a decided yes."

The twain kept their own council and no one was made any the wiser for that drive.

Mr. Baker made frequent visits to the city in which Miss Wells resided.

Flowers, books, music and confectionery found their way to the young lady's home. Long letters reached her in which the cold, silent man told her of his early trials and loneliness, his longings and aspirations for a happier future.

"Could she be happy and satisfied with him?" she had asked herself over and over again, but could reach no decision.

She enjoyed his companionship more than even she herself knew. His friendship meant much to her, but might she not tire of him in time when it was too late?

The six months would soon be up, but she was no nearer a decision.

It was late in May one rainy Saturday when Norman Baker reached R——. His train was late and as he had an engagement for luncheon with Elizabeth Wells he took a cab. A few blocks this side of Miss Wells' home the cab came to a sudden stop and upon calling to the driver he learned that a small newsboy had been knocked down and his papers scattered over the crossing. Jumping out of the cab he picked up the lad and learned that he was not seriously injured, although bruised and shaken up.

The child seemed much more concerned over the loss of his papers and his torn trousers than about his own injuries until he was told that Mr. Baker would replace the papers besides getting him a new suit of clothes.

How forcibly this incident brought back his own cheerless childhood to the man.

Perhaps he could put a little sunshine into the newsboy's life!

Requesting the lad to jump into the cab he drove to Miss Wells'.

What was his astonishment to have her exclaim as she opened the door: "Harry, lad, where have you been? How did you get hurt?"

Mr. Baker explained the situation and learned that his young friend was one of Miss Wells' favorite pupils.

"Run up to the bath room Harry, and make youself as presentable as possible and you shall have luncheon with us," she said at the conclusion of the explanation.

Miss Wells invited herself to go with Mr. Baker and Harry to select the new suit which thanks to the young lady's assistance, proved very becoming and satisfactory.

Then the happy lad departed to his home, and the two friends visited an art gallery.

They were seated before a cheery grate fire that evening both in a thoughtful mood, but with a peacefulness and contentment in the atmosphere that gave quiet happiness to the long silences.

"Norman," and the big, silent man was all attention and a thrill with the sweetness and tenderness of that first utterance of his Christian name, "the episode of my little newsboy friend," she continued, "your generous impulse to lend your aid to the lonely lad, has made my answer to the question you asked me six months ago a decided yes.

"I suppose I must have loved you all those months, but it took the little incident of this afternoon to show me that the love was really there."

WON FAVOR BY HIS GRIT.

Good Story Told of United States Naval Officer.

A tribute was paid recently to the late Capt. W. W. Reisinger, U. S. N., at the Grand hotel. "Capt. Reisinger was the kind of man you can obey as an officer, respect as a man and cherish as a friend," said F. C. Cheswick of Washington. "The delayed news of his death at Panama, which came to us a week or so ago, was a great shock to his many friends in Washington, Annapolis, Pensacola and elsewhere. I remember an anecdote of the man which brings out the stuff there was in him. He was a little man—hardly over the limit to get into Annapolis, I should say—but he always insisted on being obeyed to the dot, and he always ordered everything to be kept right up to the mark. About ten years ago, more or less, he was executive officer of the receiving ship Dale, at the Washington Navy Yard, and used to keep the new men pretty hard at work shining up brass and the like. Some of them, especially the big fellows, didn't overmuch relish the novel sensation of being bossed around by such a 'little chap,' as they put it, and used to pass around remarks about how easy they could do him up some time off duty. He overheard some of those remarks and one day when he was off duty he appeared among the men, took off his coat and asked for volunteers in the task of doing him up. He was a foot-ball man at Annapolis, and fully able to take care of himself anyway. But the men respected his grit without trial, and obeyed him gladly after that."—New York Tribune.

HE WAS ABOVE IT.

Young Man's Answer to Student of Sociology.

Smith is a man of education, whose particular study is sociology. Much of his time is spent among children of the poorer classes, and in the vacation period, when these are congregated in the playgrounds of the city, he works among them directing their play.

Visitors to the grounds are frequent but few ask questions. Recently, however—so Smith informed the writer—a young fellow appeared, watched the children for a time, seemed interested, and asked a few questions about them.

As the young man was neatly dressed, clean shaven, quiet in manner, and not unintelligent looking, Smith was prepared to find him a student of problems, like himself.

"Are you interested particularly in this kind of work? Perhaps you are doing elsewhere as I am doing here?" said Smith.

Smith said that the smile which preluded his reply was crushing. "Oh, no," said the youth, "I've got a good trade."—Detroit Free Press.

Food and Brains.

The advantage of fasting for intellectual work is being exemplified by a professor of the West Virginia university, who will refrain from eating food for 30 days, during which time he will daily deliver his customary lectures to the class of the summer quarter. It is the professor's idea that the less food there is in the stomach the more blood can be drawn to the brain, and that its action should be superior in every way to that of a man who is clogged with food. It will be interesting to watch the professor's lectures daily becoming more brilliant while his weight decreases. One can imagine that the farther he gets to infinite wisdom, until, when he arrives at the 30th day of his fast, the thinking world will be simply dazzled by the intellectual outburst. If this is demonstrated, all we need to do to produce a "Thanatopsis" or a "Gray's Elegy" is to take a commonplace poet and place him in a cell for thirty days on a diet of filtered water.

Druggists' Signs.

The familiar big colored glass bulbs are gradually ceasing to be a feature of the decoration of druggists' windows. In the past they were as necessary to every drug store as a red and white pole is to a barber's shop, but they have not, as the pole has, a well-defined history. All that druggists know of them is that they have been always used as window ornaments. The brilliant liquids that they contain are made cheaply and plainly of chemicals and water. Thus, a solution of copper and ammonia makes blue; bichromate of potash makes orange; aniline dyes have of late been used in the chemical's place, but the liquids fade in a strong sunlight, and have frequently to be renewed. The liquids colored chemically, on the other hand, last well-nigh for ever.

HIS THOUGHTS FAR AWAY

He had executed the hustle of his life in order to reach her home in time to take her on the ride down the river, as he had promised, and in doing so he had been compelled to side-step his regular daily lunch. Consequently, when the boat moved out on the bosom of the historic, low-murmuring stream, he had about as much of the Keats-Shelly poetic inflatus suffusing his hungry frame as is contained in the make-up of a carpenter's horse.

"How beautiful the deep emerald tint of the foliage is this year!" she murmured rapturously—having herself had a whole lot of lunch at home before she had started—waving her parasol toward the shore.

"Um," he replied, his mind on the things that he would about do to two strawberry shortcakes if they should happen to drop in his lap.

"There is something sadly reminiscential about the Potomac, don't you think?" she asked him as the boat swung by Giesboro point.

"Sure," said he, dismally, wolfishly eyeing the little girl, who was eating pickle and cake out of the family lunch basket.

"Don't you always fancy that something of the old, old atmosphere of the dreamy southland still seems to cling about Alexandria?" she asked him as the boat glided by the quiet town.

"Uh-huh," said he, half of a mind to go up against a ball of popcorn to sort o' keep him going until the boat made its landing.

"See how the sunlight strikes the little ripples on the surface of the stream over yonder!" said she, ecstatically.

"Yep," he replied, really thinking however, of how he would like to play with about two large Southdown mutton chops and some lyonnaise potatoes.

"The sky is of such a deep turquoise hue to-day, is it not?" she inquired of him.

"It sure is," said he, but the blue of the sky made him think of a pudgy huckleberry pudding and caused his teeth to leak.

She perceived that he wasn't garrulous a little bit as to the sky tints, perspectives, middle distances, and things like that, and so she paused for a little while. So did he. His mind was on the carnal things of the world.

"What are you thinking of?" she asked him playfully, breaking the sizeable pause. "Of the music made by the zephyrs as they flit through the lovely trees over there at old fort Washington?"

"Nope," said he, in a matter-of-fact tone. "I was wondering whether I'd have mustard or not on the four swiss cheese sandwiches that I'm going to lean up against when we reach our getting-off place."

Then she gazed at him reproachfully and passed up the tropical-moonlight conversation until the brute was fed.—Washington Post.

LAKE OVER VOLCANO

Squire Redwine, who has been in Phoenix for several days, yesterday described a smoking lake not far from the country where he lives, says the Arizona Republican. The lake is about forty miles from the town of Imperial and twenty-one miles south of Mexico. It lies within the Cocopah country at the base of the mountains, even below the foothills, but it has not been there very long. It is on the Mexican side of the line. It used to be in California and was supplied with water by the Chino river, but the Mexicans dammed that stream and the water was turned into the Cocopah river, which feeds the new lake and does little else.

Within the boundaries of the new lake there has been for several years what the Indians believed to be a volcano. Smoke was almost constantly rising from the ground, but there had been no other sign of an eruption. The water of the lake now covers the volcano to a depth of from five to ten feet. Ever since the water has been there there has been trouble, and it is getting worse every day. The Indians have moved from that neighborhood and the whites in the settlement twenty miles north are thinking of moving. The lake is about fourteen miles long, but not of great width.

At first the disturbance was confined to that part of the water in the vicinity of the volcano, but now the water is boiling over a considerable part of its area and explosions are growing more and more frequent. People living in the neighborhood of Texico are often awakened by them in the night time. Eruptions are going on all the time, but they are generally of sufficient force only to throw up the water to the height of a few feet. That makes no noise that can be heard at any great distance. But occasionally the eruption breaks through the water and shoots mud into the air at a height of forty feet. Whenever this happens the noise can be heard and a flame can be seen for miles. It was such demonstrations as these that frightened the Indians away. There are boats on the lake and parties have started out to the volcano, but they have always turned back without completing the investigation. One party which came back reported seeing an area of mud forty feet square thrown fifty feet into the air. The level of this lake is several feet below sea level.

The whole Cocopah country has been a volcanic region. The side of the mountains and the country for a considerable distance around are covered with sulphur. Within the memory of some of the older residents of Arizona one of the volcanoes in the mountain range was active.

All the troubles of this world are born with winds.—Mary E. Wilkins.

WHEN MOSBY RAN

Col. John F. Mosby sent word to the remnant of his old guerrilla band, who recently held their annual reunion at Leesburg, Va., that the pressure of public duty would prevent him joining them. If Mosby's memory remains active, the recent death of Col. Tichener of the board of general appraisers at New York must have reminded him of an occasion when the pressure of private—extremely private and personal—duty caused his absence from a place where he was very much wanted. He has sometimes mentioned it, in these later years, as the "closest call" he ever had in his life.

Tichener, who was a union officer in the civil war, had been sent out one night with a company in advance of the army to skirmish and establish picket lines. Before he had gone very far he stumbled upon three men on horseback and cried: "Halt! Who goes there?" Two of the men wheeled instantly, galloped away and escaped; the third hurried forward, throwing up his hands and screaming: "I surrender! I surrender!"

Tichener was much annoyed. He could not shoot a man who had voluntarily made himself a prisoner of war, and the direction taken by the others was such that he should have risked hitting his prisoner if he fired upon the two fugitives; so he had to let them go and bring his one prize into camp. The captive proved to be a local preacher who knew the country so well that the confederates had pressed him into service as a guide, and he revealed the fact that one of his companions was a confederate officer and the other the guerilla Mosby, who, in the then state of feeling within the union lines, would undoubtedly have been given short shrift and hanged.

Mosby afterward met Tichener and told him that he did the liveliest running that night of any time in his adventurous career.

HOW TO DRAW A CORK.

It Can Be Done With Common Piece of Sealing-wax.

If you want to amuse friends at a picnic, or have left the corkscrew at home, as usually happens, tell them that you can draw a cork out of any bottle without a corkscrew. Of course they will laugh, but very soon it will be your turn to smile.

Take a piece of sealing-wax and hold one end of it over a lighted match until it becomes soft; then let some drops of the wax fall on the cork in the bottle. As soon as the cork is covered with wax you must press the piece which you hold in your hand against the cork, and you must hold it there until the wax is quite dry. Then it will be easy for you to draw out the cork by using the stick of wax which adheres to it, in the same manner as you would use a screw.

No matter how firmly fixed the cork may be, it will almost immediately yield to the pressure. You must, however, take care not to wrench the stick of wax away from it while you are drawing it out, and you must also see that the cork is perfectly dry before you put any wax on it.

Edge of Pelee's Shower.

While the fiery tornado, passing toward the south and west, widened the sweep of its destructive power in order to extend its devastations further another remarkable phenomenon came to stop it in its course. Two strong atmospheric currents, laden with rain, moving, one from the southeast, the other from the north, fell of a sudden upon the sides of the fiery spout, and, encircling it along a distinctly marked line, cooled it to such a point that I have seen persons who, finding themselves precisely upon the line of demarcation, were struck on one side by fiery missiles, while on the other, and only a few feet away, nothing was falling but the rain of mud, cinders and stones which descended on the countryside everywhere.—From Century for August.

GREAT HEAT OF METEORS.

Some Have Fallen as Molten Masses From a Volcano's Crater.

Ordinarily the meteors that flash across the sky at stated periods of time burn themselves out in the upper air, but occasionally a meteoric mass lasts long enough to reach the earth. One fell on May 15, 1900, at Felix, Ala. Meteors were seen on the occasion referred to and sundry explosions were heard, while later on a mass of meteoric substance weighing seven pounds was discovered imbedded in soft soil. This meteorite was analyzed and found to be built up of such minerals as olivine, augite, triolite, nickel iron and graphite carbon.

The dark color of the Felix stone is stated to be due to the presence in fair amount of the last-named substance. The interest attaching to meteorites, of course, centers around the fact that they enable us to obtain glimpses of the composition of other worlds than ours. Astronomy is well agreed on the unity of chemical composition which marks the orbs, and even the simple fact that it is hydrogen gas which blazes in the sun and gives us our light and heat is a testimony to this fact. Meteoric iron and carbon similarly display links between these erratic bodies and our own earth.

GREAT SALT LAKE RECEDING.

Fall of the Level Since 1894 Amounts to Nearly Six Feet.

Great Salt Lake, in Utah, which for several years has been slowly but steadily receding, has, according to Director Murdock of the United States weather bureau, now reached the lowest level recorded since observations have been taken by the department. Up to Aug. 1 the lowest mark ever recorded was on July 11. Since that time the lake has receded four inches. The fall of the water since 1894 amounts to nearly six feet, and on the low, flat eastern shore this has resulted in a recession of the water line during that time of fully three-quarters of a mile. Speaking of this phenomenon Director Murdock said:

"Utah has been in a dry cycle for seventeen or eighteen years. In this period the precipitation has been much below the average. Precipitation sometimes moves in cycles of this kind and duration, and I think a prolonged period of increased precipitation is nearly due. But it will take several years to bring the lake back to its former level.

Melody, Cash, and Ice Cream.

"I'll give a dollar to have the violinist repeat that solo," exclaimed a man, who said he was from Alabama, to Evangelist Charles H. Yatman at the young people's meeting in the temple this morning. The young woman referred to was Miss Cecelia Bradford, who had just finished playing "Safe in the Arms of Jesus."

"You'll have to bid higher, brother," replied Leader Yatman.

"Well, two dollars, then," the man from Alabama shouted back.

"Make it five and I'll ask Miss Bradford to repeat the solo," retorted Mr. Yatman.

"Here's the money," said the southerner, handing the evangelist a bank note.

Miss Bradford played the hymn again. When she had finished Mr. Yatman said: "Half of this money I will turn into the fund being raised for the marine carnival on Wesley lake and the other half I will give to Miss Bradford to spend for ice cream."

The donor of the bill expressed his satisfaction and as soon as the meeting adjourned the talented violinist gathered her chums about her and started for an ice cream parlor.—Ocean Grove Correspondence New York Press.

Size of Head No Test.

It has been a popular belief, especially since the invention of phrenology, that the size and shape of the head are intimately related to the intellectual capacity. Almost everybody is accustomed to form dogmatic judgments of men based upon this postulate. But the results of statistical investigation make it appear very doubtful whether the belief in question rests upon a sound foundation, says the Cosmopolitan. The conclusion is that there exists, in the general population, very insignificant corelation between ability and either the size or the shape of the head. Very brilliant men may have a slightly larger head than the average, but the increase is so small that no weight can be laid on it in our judgment of ability. This is in accord with the results of other attempts to apply a scientific test to the assumptions of phrenology.

War and the Birth Rate.

War not only influences the mortality of the army in the field, but has a maleficent effect on the birthrate and death rate of the country which is fighting. A low birth rate may be explained to some extent, by the fact that when a nation is at war her people at home are less prosperous and consequently marriages are not so frequent.

The increase of the death rate occurs, probably, for the reason that food is scarcer and also because at a time when a country is engaged in a disastrous war, the minds of its inhabitants are adversely affected. Those who are in delicate health, or who are attacked with sickness, succumb much more readily when the spirits are low than when in a normal condition. It is, indeed, the reaction of the mind upon the body.—Medical Record.

CHANGE OF LIFE.

Some Sensible Advice to Women by Mrs. E. Sailer.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—When I passed through what is known as 'change of life,' I had two years' suffering,—sudden heat, and as quick chills would pass over me; my appetite was variable and I never could tell for a day at a time how I would feel the next day. Five bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound changed all that, my days became days of health, and I have enjoyed every day since—now six years.

"We have used considerable of your Vegetable Compound in our charitable work, as we find that to restore a poor mother to health so she can support herself and those dependent upon her, if such there be, is truer charity than to give other aid. You have my hearty endorsement, for you have proven yourself a true friend to suffering women."—MRS. E. SAILER, 756½ Hill St., Los Angeles, Cal.—$5000 forfeit if above testimonial is not genuine.

No other person can give such helpful advice to women who are sick as can Mrs. Pinkham, for no other has had such great experience—her address is Lynn, Mass., and her advice free—if you are sick write her—you are foolish if you don't.

OR LITERARY GENTLEMEN.

A German Publisher's Rather Expressive Views—They Are for the Wealthy.

The Author, of London, publishes the following "literary hints for the wealthy and cultivated," which, it says, were taken from a German publisher's advertisements:

A gentleman does not give his daughter with a dowry of £5 to £50,000 and forget to provide her with a book case.

A gentleman does not use eau-de-cologne and read greasy volumes from a circulating library.

A gentleman does not borrow good works which he is in a position to buy.

A gentleman does not talk about the latest literature, when he is acquainted with only what has been said of it by the reviewers.

A gentleman does not cut books with his fingers, even after having washed his hands.

A gentleman does not possess a box of carpenter's tools, but no paper knife.

A gentleman does not receive books for review and give them away or sell them without opening them.

A gentleman does not make presents only of things that are entirely without intellectual value.

A gentleman does not send to his book seller for a parcel of books on approval, and, after having read them, return them, saying that none of them suit him.

A gentleman does not buy only sixpenny, cheap editions.

A gentleman does not depend for his reading upon the daily journals and illustrated weeklies.—New York Times.

What An Almanac Did.

Matthews, Ark., Aug. 25th.—Mrs Lee S. Sanders of this place tells how an almanac saved her life.

"I have been troubled a great deal with my kidneys all my life, and was constantly growing worse.

"I chanced to get a copy of Dodd's Almanac for 1902 and in it read some stories of how Dodd's Kidney Pills had cured many very bad cases of Kidney Trouble.

"My husband bought a box, and I began to use them, and in a short time we were surprised and delighted at the wonderful improvement in my case.

"I am now as well as anybody, and I cannot say too much for Dodd's Kidney Pills. It was a lucky day for me when I picked up that almanac.

"I believe Dodd's Kidney Pills will cure anybody who suffers with Kidney Trouble."

How Wise!

"I can tell you, my wife is a pretty wise woman, and it's pretty hard to get ahead of her."

"For instance?"

"Well, she's down at the seashore now, and when she write for money she incloses a stamp, self-addressed envelope and a check already made out for me to sign. Can't say it slipped my mind then."—Baltimore Herald.

MADE DOMINIE LAUGH

INCIDENT THAT RUINED CAREFULLY PREPARED SERMON

Combination of Girl, Chewing Gum and Sleeping Man Too Much for the Risibilities of St. Louis Clergyman, and No Wonder.

A prominent minister of St. Louis was asked yesterday if he had ever been tempted to laugh during services and what would be the effect if the teacher of a large congregation should burst in upon the full solemnities of regular service with a genuine hearty laugh. Interruptions to services were under discussion, and all the talk had been about absent-mindedness in the pews. The question suggested the awful possibilities of a similar "break" in the pulpit, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

"Well, I can answer that question very nicely, because I did that very thing one time myself," he replied. "It was one Sunday when my church was unusually crowded. I had prepared a sermon that I considered decidedly above the ordinary, and when I had got well into it I realized that my audience was thoroughly impressed. I was deeply in earnest and they were fully sympathetic. In the midst of the discourse I happened to glance toward the choir loft in the other end of the church. A young girl singer was sitting with her arms crossed on a railing and her body rigid, seemingly, with the intentness of attention. She was such a good listener that I unconsciously talked at her as any speaker will under such circumstances. As I talked I tried to catch her eye and was puzzled to note that they were not turned in my direction at all. I followed her gaze and I saw something comical in the extreme. A man in the back pew was sound asleep. His head was thrown completely over the back of the pew and his mouth was open to its widest extremity.

"The girl was intent, true, but intent on the open-mouthed sleeper immediately below the edge of the choir loft. Slowly she lifted her hand to her mouth, and I fully realized that she extracted a large wad of gum. Her eyes never moved from the man, and to save my life my eyes could not leave her. I did not know her purpose, but she slowly, very slowly, aimed that gum at the mouth below. Her hand went up and down as she fixed her aim and my eye rose and fell with that hand as surely as a bird sways before the fascination of a reptile. My words went on in a mechanical monotone, but my mind had left my subject and my people. Body, soul and sight were strained in watching that girl. Up and down went the hand, in motions that grew shorter, and then, as the snake would make the dart, she flashed that gum at its target. It fell like a shot and as it disappeared into the cavernous mouth below I broke my flow of meaningless words with a shriek of laughter that fell on the audience like a bombshell. It seemed that I laughed for five minutes and that I swayed and shook with emotion. I suppose it was really less than five seconds. The sermon was ruined and it is a surprise that I was not. I managed to call for the singing of a hymn and under cover of this I retreated from the pulpit. My assistant dismissed the congregation."

BABY CRIES OVER TELEPHONE

Doting Grandmother for First Time Hears Infant's Voice.

A Staten Island boy baby now holds the record for long distance crying, says the New York Sun. He is something less than a year old and his father says that he seldom cries.

The baby's grandmother lives in Atlanta, Ga., and she has never seen the baby. One evening last week the father had occasion to call up his mother in Atlanta on the long distance telephone to give her some important news, including the fact that baby had cut a tooth.

She expressed a desire to hear the baby's voice. Any one who knows anything about young babies knows that they exercise their voices chiefly in crying. This particular baby was brought to the telephone and by a little proper manipulation was induced to cry for his grandmother in Atlanta.

"The dear little thing," replied the grandmother to her son, "I could hear him plainly. What an awfully nice cry he has."

"Yes," said the son, enthusiastically. "It's a great cry and it don't get on your nerves as other babies' cries do. He is the finest baby in this town. Well, good-by, mother. I'll call you up next time baby cuts a tooth," and he rang off.

Answered in Parable.

As an instance of President Hadley's aptness in meeting every situation or replying to every pertinent or impertinent question, the following story is told.

At a reception given for him by an old friend some 500 miles from New Haven, one individual with a better memory than tact asked him what he thought of the recent baseball game. As Yale had met with a disastrous defeat, the subject might be called unpleasant. Without hesitation President Hadley said:

"There was a boy living in a village whose uncle died. The next day a man driving along the road was surprised to find the boy working in a field. Thinking this did not show proper respect to the dead uncle, he called the lad to him and said: 'Johnny, didn't you know your uncle was dead?'

"Johnny slowly approached and drawled out:

"'Yes, I know it—I have cried.'"

AN ITALIAN CAPTAIN

Cured by Pe-ru-na of Catarrh of the Stomach After Doctors Failed.

Hon. J. D. Botkin, Congressman from Kansas Writes an Interesting Letter.

CAPTAIN O. BERTOLETTO.

Captain O. Bertoletto of the Italian Barque "Lincelles," in a recent letter from the chief officer of the Italian Barque Lincelles, Pensacola, Fla., writes:

"I have suffered for several years with chronic catarrh of the stomach. The doctors prescribed for me without my receiving the least benefit. Through one of your pamphlets I began the use of Peruna, and two bottles have entirely cured me. I recommend Peruna to all my friends."—O. Bertoletto.

In catarrh of the stomach, as well as catarrh of any part of the body, Peruna is the remedy. As has been often said if Peruna will cure catarrh of one part, it will cure catarrh of any other part of the body.

Catarrh is catarrh wherever located, and the remedy that will cure it anywhere will cure it everywhere.

The following letter from Congressman Botkin speaks for itself:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
WASHINGTON, D. C.

Dr. S. B. Hartman, Columbus, O.:

My Dear Doctor—It gives me pleasure to certify to the excellent curative qualities of your medicines—Peruna and Manalin. I have been afflicted more or less for a quarter of a century with catarrh of the stomach and constipation. A residence in Washington has increased these troubles. A few bottles of your medicine have given me almost complete relief, and I am sure that a continuation of them will effect a permanent cure. Peruna is surely a wonderful remedy for catarrhal affections.—J. D. Botkin.

This is a case of catarrh of the stomach which had run for twenty-five years, according to his statement, and Peruna has at once come to his relief, promptly accomplishing for him more benefit than he had been able to find in all other remedies during a quarter of a century.

It stands to reason that a man of wealth and influence, like a Congressman of the great United States, has left no ordinary means untried and no stone unturned to find a cure.

If such cures as these do not verify the claim not only that dyspepsia is due to catarrh of the stomach, but also that Peruna will cure catarrh of the stomach, it is impossible to imagine how any evidence could do so.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case, and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, Ohio.

Politics.

Mississippi Congressman—What kind of an election did you have up your way?

New Jersey Congressman—Quiet; very quiet. Half a dozen voters killed, I presume. How was it with you?

"Dull as mud. The troops were out."

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address F. J. POLITICAL NOTES.

L. A. Rosing, Democratic candidate for governor, was in the city last Saturday shaking hands with the faithful. Local Democrats assured him that he would have the united support of party workers in this section. John Morgan, who is a member of Mr. Rosing's committee and who will manage his campaign in Red Lake county, accompanied by H. W. Lee and N. W. Tarrant, went down to Crookston and escorted him to Thief River Falls. A number of Democrats from Red Lake Falls were also here to meet Mr. Rosing.

Reports from Red Lake Falls are to the effect that Frank Jeffers, Populist candidate for county superintendent of schools, is managing Halvor Steenerson's campaign in southern Red Lake county. Mr. Jeffers, however, will soon have to commence looking after his own candidacy, and thus Halvor will lose the services of an able lieutenant.

O. H. Peters, candidate for the Republican nomination for county auditor, was in the city last Saturday. He reports meeting with a great deal of success.

L. C. Simons, of Red Lake Falls, has filed as a candidate for the Republican nomination for representative from the counties of Red Lake and Beltrami. He will have no opposition for the nomination.

Prof. James A. Wilson, of this city, has filed for the Republican nomination for county superintendent of schools. Mr. Wilson is one of the ablest educators of the northwest, and if he is elected the schools of Red Lake county will be in good hands. He proposes to make a thorough campaign of the county and will deliver lectures on educational matters in every school house in the county.

The Clay County Herald says: "every man, woman and child in Wilkin county is shouting for Valentine." Say, but that is a mighty good endorsement of any man, yet that same Wilkin county shout is going up wherever he is known.—Detroit Record.

There seems to be a strong undercurrent all over the 9th district that E. G. Valentine is the man for congress. He has a career of many years of untiring work for the people, to his credit, and from what we know of him he will keep in touch with them and try to represent them: something that has not always been done.—Pelican Rapids Press.

We see a great deal in the papers about each different candidate for congress being the instigator of the great ditch system of the Red River valley, which has been of much interest to the farmers in that part of the state. Some of the papers claim that this one started the operations and others that that one was the first to conceive the idea, but none of them can deny the fact that Ezra G. Valentine, the candidate from Wilkin county, has for the past 16 years devoted a large portion of his time and considerable of his money to the industry; and has never received one penny in payment for his services and has never asked any pay. He surely is entitled to some credit for the ditch system, and if we mistake not he will get it at the primaries the 16th of September. Mr. Valentine was in the city Saturday and again Monday. He will make a thorough canvass of Becker county. To get acquainted with is to admire him as an honest man.—Frazee News.

It certainly looks as if Valentine Day would come on Sept. 16 this year, instead of Feb. 14.—Warroad Plaindealer.

Two Republican Candidates.

THOMAS GERMO

practicing attorney of Red Lake Falls, was born of Norwegian parents on a farm in Medo Blue Earth County, Minnesota, in 1870. His boyhood days were spent on the farm, until 16 years of age when he set out for himself. He was educated in the country schools, Rochester Business College, state Normal School at Mankato, and at the University of Minnesota, graduating from the law department of the latter institution with the class of 1900. Indomitable pluck and tenacity of purpose have marked every step of his career. School vacations were no time for rest or idleness for him. During these periods he employed himself with the task of earning and saving money, in order to further prosecute his studies. Like so many young men who set out to make their own way through school, he took up such occupations as canvassing for books and teaching, having taught in Dakota and Minnesota. He was employed for a time as stenographer and book keeper in the Janesville Bank, as Court Reporter of the Third Judicial District, and at different times as reporter on newspaper. A resident of St. Paul for five years, he has an extensive acquaintance with the political leaders of Ramsey County. While at the University law school he took lectures, and during the day was employed about the city in different capacities, earning money to carry him through. Before entering the University he gained valuable practical experience by serving one year apprenticeship in the law office of W. Logan Breckenridge, of Rochester. His career in Red Lake County has been marked with that success, earnestness of purpose, and unimpeachible integrity, which have won for him the esteem of our citizens and a constantly growing practice. Loyal to friends, a congenial companion, no man stands higher in the estimation of our citizens. A man who may be trusted, of recognized ability, when the ballots are counted in November it is a safe guess that the majority will be recorded in favor of Thomas Germo for county attorney.

THOMAS A. CROMPE.

Republican candidate for Register of Deeds, was born on a farm in St. Isidore, near Montreal, Canada, September 25th, 1850, where he continued to reside until he was fourteen years of age, attending French and English schools during the time he was not employed on the farm. In March, 1874, he removed with his parents to Fall River, Massachusetts, and for two years attended the public schools there, after which he was empolyed by the Prepples Brothers, shoe dealers, five years. In 1881 the Crompe family returned to Montreal, and the subject of this sketch took a thorough course in the Montreal Business College, subsequently went to work in a grocery store in that city, continuing there until 1881, when he removed with his parents to Minnesota, locating on a farm in Terrebonne, this county, where his parents still reside. The same year that he migrated to Minnesota he was married to Miss Eva Frigon, an estimable young lady of Montreal. In Terrebonne he served six years as Town Clerk to the general satisfaction of all residents therein. In 1891 he secured employment with the Monarch Elevator Company as grain buyer and local agent, and removed with his family to Red Lake Falls, remaining in their employ two years, at the end of which time he entered into employment in a like capacity with the Red Lake Falls Milling Company, is still so employed, having been in continuous service with the latter company ten years. Mr. Crompe is immensely popular with the people of Red Lake Falls, as is evidence by the fact that while never seeking office, his friends have often prevailed upon him to accept of some public recognition. Brought about in that way, he served two years as assessor, two years ago he was elected to the position of Director on the School Board of this City, was elected a member of the city council at the last city election and this year was elected School Treasurer. His popularity is not confined to the City of Red Lake Falls but extends to the citizens throughout the country generally, having an extensive acquaintance with the farmers, by reasons of his long service as a grain buyer and everywhere and by everyone who knows him he is recognized for his honesty and accommodating manners. Of excellent habits, attached to his family, consisting of his wife and seven children, he is charitably disposed and is never too busy to extend assistance to a neighbor in trouble or in need. Of a long record as a trusted servant, a large experience with the keeping of books and the conduct of business, his perfect honesty never called into question: he is eminently fitted by nature and training to fill the office to which his friends are determended to elect him—that of Register of Deeds of Red Lake County, to the credit of himself and the satisfaction of all our citizens.

Council Proceedings.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of ten hundred eight-six and 71-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by William Reed and Huldah Reed, his wife, Mortgagors, to Jerome W. Wheeler, Mortgagee, bearing date the first day of October, 1892, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the third day of October, 1892, at 3 o'clock P. M., in book 59 of Mortgages, on pages 222, and transcribed into the Mortgage records of Red Lake County in Book B on page 20).

Which said Mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Jerome W. Wheeler, Mortgagee, to John Steele the present holder thereof by written assignment dated the 21st day of February, 1899, and recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds for Red Lake County, on the first day of April, 1899, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book F. of Mortgage Assignments on page 448, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

Lots one (1) and two (2) and the north half (½) of the northwest quarter (¼) of section number twenty-one (21) in township number one hundred and fifty-four (154) north of range number forty-three west, according to the United States survey thereof in Red Lake county and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Red Lake County, at the front door of the Court House, in the Village of Red Lake Falls in said County and State on the 26th day of September 1902, at one o'clock P. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of ten-hundred eighty-six and 71-100 dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and seventy-five dollars, Attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated August 11th, A. D. 1902.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of three hundred seven dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Andrew Douglas and Louisa F. Douglas, his wife, Mortgagors, to E. D. Childs Company, a corporation, Mortgagee, bearing date the 27th day of October, 1896, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 29th day of October, 1896, at 11:30 o'clock A. M., in Book 80 of Mortgages, on page 259 and duly transcribed into the Mortgage records of Red Lake County in Book O on page 179.

Which said Mortgage together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said E. D. Childs Company, Mortgagee, to the First National Bank of Crookston, by written assignment dated the 8th day of April, 1897, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Red Lake County on the 28th day of July, 1902, at 5:15 o'clock P. M., in Book S of Mortgages on page 337.

Which said Mortgage, together with said debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said The First National Bank of Crookston, the Assignee and Holder thereof, to John Steele by written assignment dated the 25th day of February, 1899, and recorded on the 28th day of July, 1902, at 5:15 o'clock P. M., in Book S. of Mortgages page 338 in Red Lake County, Minnesota, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

The east half (E½) of the south west (SW¼) quarter and the west half of the south east quarter (W½ SE¼) of section numbered seventeen (17) in township numbered one hundred fifty-four (154) north, of range numbered forty-three (43) west, in Red Lake County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Red Lake County at the front door of the court house, in the Village of Red Lake Falls, in said County and State, on the 26th day of September, 1902, at one o'clock p. m., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of three hundred seven dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and ten dollars, Attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated August 11th, A. D. 1902.

A number of young ladies of this city will give a musical entertainment for the benefit of the Methodist church on the evening of Sept. 20th. The affair will be under the direction of Mrs. W. A. Wright and it is sure to be a success.

The open season for prairie chickens, ducks, etc., commenced Monday and a large number of people from this city as well as others from outside points have been doing considerable hunting in this vicinity this week. The game around here is not as plentiful this year as formerly, caused no doubt by the fact that there has been a great deal of illegal shooting.

A farmer living up near Esplee, who was going through the city for the harvest fields of Dakota with his team, helped himself to about five bushels of oats from Michael Burns barn early last Friday morning. Mr. Burns discovered the theft and had the man arrested. The theif told a pitiful tale of having a wife and two children to support, which softened Mike's big heart, and the case was not prosecuted.

A large number of people from this city took advantage of the low rates offered by the Great Northern to visit the Twin Cities and the state fair. RIVER IS CRANKY

UNUSUAL CONDITIONS CAUSE GREAT ALARM AMONG RIVER MEN.

PARALYZE LUMBER INTERESTS

MISSISSIPPI IS TOO LOW IN ONE PLACE AND TOO HIGH IN ANOTHER.

BOTH CONDITIONS CAUSE LOSS

LUMBERMEN IN THE NORTH AND MANUFACTURERS IN SOUTH SUFFER.

Keokuk, Iowa, Aug. 28.—An unprecedented state of affairs exists on the Mississippi river as a result of different meteorological conditions in different portions of the valley. Lumber interests are approaching paralysis from low water on the higher stretches of the river; and manufacturing interests are losing heavily from high water just above St. Louis. Great alarm exists among river men around Dubuque, where the stage of water is only about two feet, the lowest mark reached for years. The river fluctuates up and down with falling greater than the rises, and the stage yesterday morning at La Crosse was only 1.6 feet at the government gauge, with 2.7 feet as far down as Davenport. The general belief among lumbermen is that the present season will be the Shortest in Twenty Years.

The Dubuque mills have a supply of logs for only a week or two, and until a marked rise in the river they must shut down. The same conditions will exist in cities on that part of the river further down. The forecast of the weather bureau is for continued falling of the river. On the other hand the river below the mouth of the Des Moines has been high all summer. At Hannibal it is seriously interfering with dredge building in the Burlington yards and one big dredge building for that railroad is under water. Various factories are disturbed by the high stage of water on the lower part of the upper Mississippi and each smart rise causes fears of flood damage.

Anoka Gambling Joint Is Closed and Warrants Served.

Anoka, Minn., Aug. 28.—Warrants issued for the Monte Carlo operators at Columbus Heights were as follows: Search warrant for premises, warrants for Ira C. Winehart and George F. Clark for keeping gambling devices, Daggett and Tonkey for dealing faro, and one for Henry Pohl for allowing gambling devices on his premises. Search failed to find anything in the building. All the men will be arrested. County Attorney Pratt will vigorously prosecute the cases and a surprise may be sprung at court.

Last night a reception and banquet was tendered him, and members of that order from all parts of the state attended. E. C. Cooper made the principal address.

SIX PEOPLE LOSE THEIR LIVES.

The Father Used Kerosene to Start a Fire, and the Usual Explosion Followed.

Cheyenne, Wyo., Aug. 28.—In a fire at Gehring, Neb., six people lost their lives. S. H. McCumpsey, a mechanic, started a fire with kerosene. The can exploded, igniting the clothes of McCumpsey, his wife and four children. The parents remained in the house trying to save the children and all perished.

ELKS ARE OUT $16,000.

Discovery Shows Money Has Been Stolen for Years.

Omaha, Aug. 28. — It is just learned that the auditing committee of the Elks found during the inspection of the order's books at the grand lodge meeting in Salt Lake City that a shortage of $16,000 existed. Money, the committee found, had been gradually misappropriated for a number of years. It is not likely that there will be any prosecutions.

HELD ON SUSPICION.

Men Answering Description of Horse Thieves Are Jailed at Montgomery.

Montgomery, Minn., Aug. 28. — Two men, answering the description of the men who stole the team of horses in Faribault last week, were lodged in jail here by the local police. They are held pending an examination by the Faribault authorities.

BIG FIRE AT PRAIRIE DU CHIEN.

Damage Will Probably Amount to $150,000.

Prairie du Chien, Wis., Aug. 28.—Fire broke out late last night in the Prairie du Chien woolen mills and the damage will probably reach $150,000. The origin of the fire is unknown. The flames were first discovered in one of the floors of the main building where the offices are located, the engine and boiler rooms being directly back of the offices. The main building, which contains the offices, finishing rooms, and shipping rooms on the first floor, and carding and picking rooms on the second floor, together with the drying room and paints department on the third floor, are a total loss. The new building just north of the main building, containing the washing rooms, dye rooms, wool rooms and fitted out with the latest machinery, is also a total loss. The large warehouse to the north of the new building where hundreds of bales of wool are stored, was also destroyed.

FOREST FIRES IN WISCONSIN.

Solid Mass of Flame Working Through Timbers at Furious Rate.

Rhinelander, Wis., Aug. 28. — Forest fires are raging northeast and south of Rhinelander and the dry and tinder-like nature of the slashing makes the spread dangerous to property. From Hobson, four miles this way, there is a solid mass of flame that is working through the timber at a furious rate. Both sides of the timber holdings of the Paine Lumber company and Monasha Woodenware company are ablaze, and unless checked by rain will cause great damage. A big fire is reported this side of Three Lakes, also near the mill property of the Yawkey Lumber company at Hazelhurst. Smoke hangs over this city, but no homesteaders have reported any losses as yet.

HIT WITH FOUR DOLLARS.

Woodman Initiation Breaks Up in a Big Row.

Webster City, Iowa, Aug. 28. — A Modern Woodman initiation at Prairie Queen, an inland settlement north of this city, broke up in a big fight last night. Because Jesse White, the candidate, was given some side degrees, Alfred Hilpipre interfered and a row ensued. White went after Hilpipre with four silver dollars tied up in a handkerchief and struck him over the head with this peculiar weapon until Hilpipre's scalp was laid open. White was arrested and is now in jail in this city. Hilpipre will recover.

KIDNAPPED A SENTRY.

Deserters Break Away From Fort Cook and Take Sentry With Them.

Council Bluffs, Iowa, Aug. 28.—Frank Stortz and Harry Hymer, privates of the Twenty-second United States infantry of Fort Crook, Neb., are in the county jail here and will be returned to the fort to-day, where they will be charged with desertion and kidnapping a sentry, Private Wade, whom they overpowered when they deserted and forced to go along with them. They tramped through the country to Plattsmouth, Neb., and Wade managed to communicate his predicament to a farmer who organized a posse and overhauled the deserters.

Wee-no-nah in Bronze.

Winona, Minn., Aug. 28.—The beautiful statue of Wee-no-nah, presented to the city by W. J. Landon in memory of his wife, Ida Cone Landon, deceased, yesterday was erected on its pedestal in Central Park. The statue forms the centerpiece of a fountain which will be placed in the park. The statue illustrates the Indian legend of the Indian maiden who jumped to her death from Maiden Rock to avoid marrying the chief whom she did not love. From this legend Winona takes its name.

Convict Recaptured.

Rock Rapids, Iowa, Aug. 28.—Joseph Grant, who escaped from the South Dakota penitentiary last Friday afternoon, was recaptured near Doon, Iowa, and returned to Sioux Falls. Grant came to Rock Rapids Saturday, riding a good looking horse, which he sold to a grain buyer for $25, and left town before it was known who he was. He went from here to Doon and, with the money he had proceeded to fill up on poor whisky, and caused some trouble before his arrest was effected.

Hobos Rob Mail Pouch.

Fargo, N. D., Aug. 28.—The robbery of a mail pouch at Casselton shows that the usual quota of toughs have reached North Dakota. The pouch was made up at Page and thrown off the branch train at Casselton to be transferred. Hobos rifled the sack and took all the drafts in the letters, as well as some money orders. Four arrests have been made, but no conclusive evidence has been secured.

Admitted His Guilt.

Fargo, N. D., Aug. 28.—Edward D. Day, who was arrested on the coast and brought to Fargo on a charge of passing an unauthorized check on Landlord Prescott, pleaded guilty and was fined $100 and costs, amounting to over $300. The fine was paid by a man named McIntosh of Minneapolis. Day was formerly a lumber salesman.

Killed by a Blast.

Lead, S. D., Aug. 28.—A blast in the 500 level of the Homestake killed James Gillispie and badly injured his partner, Timothy Gordon. They are supposed to have set off a charge of powder that failed to go last spring when the drift was being run, probably striking it with a drill. Gillispie was blown to atoms.

Horse Kick Kills Him.

Ottumwa, Iowa, Aug. 28.—Edward K. Pitman, one of the best known Democratic politicians in Southern Iowa, is dead at his home at Mount Ayr, from a kick by a horse.

Run Down and Killed.

Alton, Iowa, Aug. 28. — A Debruin, aged seventy-five years, was run down and killed while crossing the Northwestern railroad bridge east of here.

GOOD ROADS TRAIN

GOVERNMENT SENDS TRAIN AND EXPERTS TO FARGO FOR WEEKS WORK.

GOOD ROADS WEEK SEPT. 15 TO 20

SECTIONS OF MODEL DIRT AND STONE ROADS TO BE BUILT.

SPEECHES BY PROMINENT MEN

SPECIAL RATES WILL BE GIVEN BY ALL RAILWAYS FOR THE WEEK.

Fargo, Aug. 30.—The government good roads train will visit Fargo during the week of September 15 to 20, and will build sections of dirt and stone roads, to demonstrate the practicability of the modern methods of country road-making.

The train is composed of ten cars, loaded with stone crushers, steam rollers, graders and a full complement of machinery for doing the work. The government furnishes experts to conduct expert work, the Great Northern furnishes the train, and the manufacturers the machinery.

It's an Important Question.

Especially is this true in the Red River valley, and prairie states generally, where good roads mean the saving of time, horseflesh and money to the farmer, increased trade for the business man; but it adds facilities innumerable to the farming community, all of which tend to make country life more desirable. The bright young men being raised on our farms will have no inclination to move to the large cities if the country homes are improved. The farming community can afford to furnish a part of the brainy young business men for the cities, but must retain many of them. Good roads will help keep them.

President Hill.

The committee has invited President Hill to deliver an address during the week of the convention, and Gov. White, and congressmen, senators, state officials and other prominent men will be in attendance, and the week will be full of entertainment for everybody.

Excursions and Rates.

All the railroads will run excursion trains to Fargo from points within fifty miles, and the special rates will make it possible for everybody to spend a few days in the metropolis at a very little expense.

Accommodations for All.

Fargo's hotels, first-class cafes, restaurants and lunch rooms are amply provided with facilities to care for the needs of the thousands of visitors expected during the week.

Road and Township Officers.

Special invitations have been sent to road overseers and township officers, as these men are in touch with the work, and from experience have learned that the building of durable roads is an important study.

Fargo's Committee.

The committee is composed of representative men, among whom are President Worst, of the Agricultural college; O. G. Barnes, commissioner of Cass county; Joseph Ames, chairman of the street committee of the Fargo city council (Mr. Ames is also chairman of the good roads committee.) G. S. Barnes, of G. S. Barnes & Co., is also a prominent worker, as are Henry J. Rusch, secretary of the Agricultural college board, and Maurice D. Williams, of the Fargo Storage and Transfer company. Thomas Hall is secretary of the committee, and will be pleased to furnish information to all relating to the good roads movement.

A ROMANSE OF DASSEL.

Son of Swedish Pastor Secretly Marries the Girl.

Dassel, Minn., Aug. 29.—Robert Alm, son of Rev. Alm of the Swedish Lutheran church, and Ella Galliger, were secretly married Wednesday evening at the residence of a justice of the peace. The wedding was opposed by the bride's parents because of the youth of the groom.

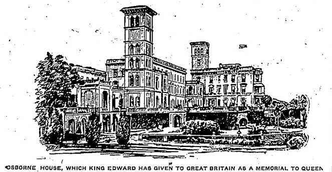
Unhappy Woman Drowns Herself.

Sioux City, Iowa, Aug. 29.—Herbert Cargill, wading in the Floyd river, stepped upon the body of Mrs. William Otis, for whom the police have been searching for two days. She dismissed her action for divorce Saturday, but about the same time her husband applied for one in his cross bill. She was so unhappy she bade her children good-bye and drowned herself. Otis left her and her five children some time ago.

Found a Valuable Pearl.

Prairie du Sac, Wis., Aug. 29.—Mrs. Jacob Buehler of this city found a valuable pearl in Wisconsin river, nine miles north of here, about the size of a small hickory nut, white and perfectly round. It is worth several hundred dollars.

Gift of King Edward to the British Nation



OSBORNE HOUSE, WHICH KING EDWARD HAS GIVEN TO GREAT BRITAIN AS A MEMORIAL TO QUEEN VICTORIA

King Edward of England has signalized his coronation in a memorable manner by the magnificent gift to the nation of Osborne house, one of the favorite residences of the late Queen Victoria. The gift is made in a message to his people, addressed to Prime Minister Balfour.

Osborne house, in the Isle of Wight, was classed as the fourth of Queen Victoria's royal manors. She purchased the property in 1840, tore down the old mansion and erected the seaside residence since known as Osborne house. It has been described as of Italian style, for lack of a more appropriate name, for, it is very bare and overburdened with the melancholy of the 40s and the 50s. The estate comprises 5,000 acres.

A year ago it was stated that King Edward was desirous of disposing by private sale of Osborne house, because of its impracticability as a royal residence and the comparatively great cost of its maintenance.

It was later reported that negotiations had been entered into between the king's agents and certain millionaires for the sale of the house to one of the latter, and that these negotiations were broken off by the action of the law counselors of the king, who called his majesty's attention to a clause in Queen Victoria's will by virtue of which Osborne house and the immediate estate became "appurtenances of the sovereignty of England." Under this clause, it was declared, King Edward was stopped from disposing of the royal residence.

It was stated at the time that among the millionaires negotiating for the purchase was William Waldorf Astor, who, it was said, desired it as a wedding present for his daughter, Miss Pauline Astor.

GOLD IN THE UNITED STATES

UNCLE SAM'S UNPRECEDENTED STOCK OF GOLD ENGLAND
GR. EMPIRE
FRANCE GERMANY
RUSSIA
UNITED STATES
IT WOULD TAKE 100,000 MEN TO CARRY A BILLION AND A QUARTER OF GOLD AND THE ARMY OF TREASURE BEARERS WOULD FILL BROADWAY.
BATTERY

Through the treasury department of this government at Washington, Uncle Sam gave out a rather startling piece of news the other day in the statement that this country at this moment possesses about a quarter of all the gold that has been made up into money in the entire world.

To quote the official figures correctly, there is now in the United States (including treasury coin and bullion) $1,200,000,000 of gold money, whereas the world's entire stock of gold money is worth less than $5,000,000,000 ($4,906,700,000, according to the latest figures). New York financiers believe Uncle Sam's figures as to his own gold money are shy and that in truth the amount of gold money in the country is close to $1,250,000,000—a billion and a quarter—while all the rest of the world possesses less than $3,750,000,000. This is a larger sum of coined gold than has ever been possessed by a single nation in the history of the world.

Next to the United States, according to the latest reports, comes France, with $810,600,000, followed by the British empire, with $769,700,000; Russia, with $724,300,000, and Germany, with $721,300,000. So far as coined gold is concerned, it will be observed the United States is in a class by itself.

TWO SOULS AND SO FORTH.

Diffident Youth Learns Something From Summer Girl.

They were wandering about the dark, deserted plazza, arm in arm, talking softly, as people usually do under such circumstances. They had only known each other two days, but the days were long at a summer hotel and time is short.

This may seem like a paradox, but it isn't.

He was a summer young man, as she was a summer girl, and he was not accustomed to crowding the mourners, so that, notwithstanding he had been very devoted, he had been somewhat diffident in the material expression of his devotion.

The girl was quick to note this, but he had not caught on.

He was still permitting "I would" to wait on "I dare not."

So it was they strolled up and down, up and down, on that plazza, until the girl tired.

As they turned at a far-away corner, she saw a lonely chair waiting invitingly.

"Mr. Jerome," she said, coyly, "there's a chair. Let's sit down."

"Permit me," he responded, gallantly drawing it forward. "Take this. I'll get anoth—"

But the girl didn't take it. She stood there laughing a cute little gurgling, appealing laugh, and somehow Mr. Jerome tumbled to the fact that one chair was plenty for two if a man only went about it right.

Early Distribution of Seed.

Distribution of flower and vegetable seeds by the Government will be started Sept. 1, three months earlier than usual.

TRIED THEM ON THE INDIANS.

Raspberries Looked Tempting, But He Was Afraid to Eat Them.

"When I was out in Oregon, fifty-three years ago," said a pleasant-looking farmer, who has been in the red raspberry business for twenty-five years, according to the Detroit Free Press, "I first saw red raspberries growing wild in the thickets and along the edges of the wild Oregon roads. They were saucer-shaped, and not so deep as the modern berry—just like those which still grow wild in Michigan. As the Oregon berries looked tempting I picked a lot in my hat, but did not dare to eat them, as I did not know whether they were poisonous or not.

"On my way back to camp I met a number of Indians whom I had seen before and knew to be friendly; in fact, they had taken such a fancy to me that they once offered to adopt me into the tribe. To these genial Indians I presented my hatful of fresh red raspberries, and my joy was great when they ate them all with relish. After that I ate all I wanted.

"In old New England, I understand, they used to call the raspberry the 'thimbleberry' on account of its resemblance to a woman's thimble."

A Centenarian Sextoness.

A widow, sextoness of the village church of Wick, near Bristol, England, has just celebrated her hundredth birthday. She had been sextoness for over half a century, but her duties are now performed by a deputy.

Manufacture of Hats.

The United States manufactures 65,000 hats every day, while England manufactures about 40,000.

ANCIENT HISTORY WAS FATAL

Shade of Philadelphus Evoked with Sad Results.

The trio who sat in the lee of the deckhouse had been doing Europe and the orient, and were homeward bound on a big ocean liner.

The woman lived in Baltimore, one of the men called Philadelphia his home, while the other man remembered with satisfaction his bachelor quarters in New York, which he was willing, however, to abandon, provided he could persuade the woman to accompany him along the shoals and breakers of the matrimonial sea.

The Philadelphian was of the same mind.

They had been discussing the various points of interest seen by them during their stay abroad, and unanimously agreed that Egypt, "the playground of the east," with its beggars and pyramids, its merchants and ruins, its Sphinx and its donkeys, was by all odds the most entertaining and instructive.

Then the conversation drifted into the history of that ancient country. All were fairly well informed upon the subject, and for half an hour or more the dynasties of Cheops, Thotmes, Rameses, the building of the pyramids and other kindred subjects were thoroughly and learnedly discussed, until the Philadelphian said:

"Of all the rulers of Egypt, none were greater than the Ptolemies, and of all the Ptolemies, Philadelphus occupies the first place in history. Among his other claims to greatness is the fact that the City of Brotherly Love is named after him."

"I didn't know that," said the New Yorker, rather ironically, "but I can scarcely imagine anything more appropriate."

"Why so?" queried the others in chorus.

"O, that's easy," replied the New Yorker. "Philadelphus has been dead for many, many years, and so has 'Philadelphia.'"

"O, cut that out," angrily snorted the Pennsylvanian, as he walked away, while the man from Manhattan seized the opportunity to put the momentous question to the fair resident of the Monumental city.

Chance and Change.

Though dull and dark the skies, what boots despair?
'Tis but the moment, which will soon be o'er;
The morrow's dawn may be as bright and fair
As though the clouds were past forevermore.

Nor be thou overjoyous if the day
Is glad and bright and Nature hath her face
Enwreathed in smiles; the morrow may be gray,
And leaden clouds come driving on apace.

Darkness to light, and light to darkness yields,
Night unto day, and day again to night;
E'en while the cloud shades hover o'er the fields,
Triumphant through them bursts the sun's glad light.

So 'tis with life. Be not too much cast down,
If darkness rests upon thee, nor elate
If bright be all thy pathway; smile and frown
Flit swiftly o'er the countenance of fate.

And that thy mirror is. She frowns on those
Who weakly murmur and who fear the strife;
But smiles on him who mocks at all her blows,
And bravely bears him through this changing life.

Largest Stage in the World.

The largest stage in the world is that of the Grand opera house, Paris, which is 100 feet in width, 200 feet in depth and eighty feet in height.

MILITARY MASS AT SEA.

Most Impressive of all Shipboard Ceremonials.

By long odds the most impressive of the ceremonies that occur on shipboard is the military mass on Sunday. Nothing less than a full cathedral service for Catholics, yet the attendance is of all sorts, sailors, officers and casuals. The afterhatch on the gun deck is cleared and an altar erected there with various of the fitments pertaining to the service. A large American flag partitions off the space behind it and also conceals the band that is the organ in this function, accompanying the priest in the intonations and playing during the offertory. The priest is in full canonicals and is a wonderful spot of color as he kneels under the opening where the light falls. Before the hatch forming three sides of a square, are the marines, standing silently, like trees bending together in the wind. They are in full uniform with fixed bayonets and are at attention.

A sailor in white is altar boy, and the choir, on the front seats in the audience, consists in this instance of newspaper men, the least terrible in a collection of voices that would not be accepted by Mr. Grau. At the elevation of the host the drums give a ruffle and the marines present arms, the flag advanced, while all in front bow. And at the end, after a short and practical sermon by the chaplain, the band plays "America" and all join in the singing of it, says Brooklyn Eagle. It is to be noted that in this service the hymns are not those of the Roman church, but are such things as "Abide With Me," "Rock of Ages," "Nearer, My God, to Thee," and "Coronation," since these are better known to the majority who sing them than are the masses.

HOW HE MADE AN ENEMY.

Old Gentleman Tells of Perfidy of a Former Friend.

"Yes," said the old man, "Smith was my bosom friend when we were boys at school, but he became my worst enemy. We sat on the same form, ate together, slept together, and shared each other's joys and sorrows.

"When we grew older our parents sent us to the university together, where our friendship, if possible, grew stronger. We took our degrees together, and, to preserve the friendship of our boyhood days, went into partnership.

"We were more than brothers and were always together, and it was while attending a social party that we both met and fell in love with the same girl.

"Our rivalry was a friendly one, and for some time none could tell which was the favored one. One night my chum came to me in his old friendly way and said:—

"'John, I can see that if I should prove the winner you would suffer deeply, therefore I have decided to turn over my interest in the business to you and leave for some new country.'

"Of course, I endeavored to persuade him not to go, but he persisted and carried out his plan. He went to Australia, and in three months I married the girl."

"But how did Smith become your enemy?" inquired one of the listeners.

"By not letting me go to Australia instead," snapped the old man; and they all understood.

RAPID GROWTH OF MOSCOW.

Russian City Will Soon Rank With the Largest in Europe.

The population of Moscow shows a remarkably rapid increase. Within the comparatively short period of 30 years the number of inhabitants has just about doubled. At the time of the French invasion in 1812 the urban Muscovites numbered about 300,000, although the official returns were 252,000. In 1871 the official census gave the population as 602,000, in 1882 it was 768,000, and according to the reckoning now completed the historic capital contains 1,173,500 inhabitants, thus taking the tenth place among the most populous cities of the world. Moscow covers an area of 101 square kilometers, or only two kilometers less than that of St. Petersburg. Area is not, however, by any means a general criterion, in questions of population, as appears from the fact that whereas London, with the largest population of any city in the world, covers 303 square kilometers, New York, with a population numbering more than a million less than that of the British metropolis, has a total area of 795 square kilometers. The population of Moscow is less dense than those of St. Petersburg, Glasgow, London, Berlin and Paris.

Our Master.

Immortal love, for ever full,
For ever flowing free,
For ever shared, for ever whole,
A never-ebbing sea!

No fable old, nor mythic lore,
Nor dream of bards and seers,
No dead fact stranded on the shore
Of the oblivious years.

But warm, sweet, tender, even yet
A present help is He;
And faith has still its Olivet,
And love its Galilee.

The healing of His seamless dress
Is by our beds of pain;
We touch Him in life's throng and press,
And we are whole again.

Our Friend, our Brother, and our Lord,
What may Thy service be?
Nor name, nor form, nor ritual word,
But simply following Thee.

Thy litanies, sweet offices
Of love and gratitude;
Thy sacramental liturgies,
The joy of doing good.

—John G. Whittier

BALTIMORE MAN WHO LIVES IN PIANO BOX.

Perhaps the strangest place of abode for a human being has just been discovered in Baltimore. It is a piano box, located on a branch of the Chesapeake Bay, and is occupied by James Bailey, a wooden-legged fisherman. There are several boxes on the side of the river, all, with the exception of the one occupied by Bailey, being used as lockers by fishermen who live in the vicinity. The box in which Bailey lives is made of rough boards, and was once the home of an upright piano. It is about 6 feet in length, 3 feet wide and a little over 6 feet high. It is known as "No. 2,501," and has been used by Bailey for the last fourteen years. From the first of February until the last of November he eats, sleeps and lounges in this box, deserting it only when the winds which sweep over the river make it uninhabitable even for an animal.

The old fisherman has never known a day of sickness, and says that he is perfectly happy, reports a writer in the New York Herald. Though he has several children living in Baltimore, all of whom are anxious and willing for him to spend his declining days at their homes, Bailey stoutly refuses all invitations, preferring to end his days in his "mansion" by the river.

A mattress and several bed coverings hide the bottom. Along the sides are two shelves, on which are ranged bits of fishing tackle, a teapot, a coffee urn, a bottle of milk, knives, forks and cooking utensils. Around the sides are his clothes, neatly hung on hooks. At one end is a lighted lantern. On the whole, the place looks extremely cozy and comfortable.

"I've been here since the blizzard of '88," said Bailey, in answer to a question. "Up to that time I'd lived in a cabin a little farther down on the shore, but the place was too cold, and I had to find more comfortable quarters. I bought this box for 75 cents—rather cheap for a home, wasn't it?

"Ya-as, 'tis a little cold in winter, sometimes, but then, you see, the place is all my own. I'm protected from the rain," and he pointed to the rough tin roof that covered the top of the box, "and in summer time I'd sooner sleep here, where I can open the lid and get the full benefit of the breezes, than in a hot, stuffy bed in a real house."

The monogram fad is all right, but better let it alone. There are times when positive identification might be embarrassing.

SOLDIERS BELIEVE IN CHARMS AND SPELLS.

During the South African war a number of instances have cropped up showing that the idea still prevails that there are such things as charms and spells against wounds and death. Not long ago a paragraph appeared in some of the papers to the effect that a soldier's watch, with a charm attached to it, had been found on one of the battle-fields, and was being held for a rightful claimant. Earlier in the war a private's letter told how a comrade had come in safety through a hot engagement by virtue, as he thought, of an amulet he wore, to be mortally wounded in a subsequent skirmish, when, by the merest chance, he was not wearing his charm. A relative's letter from the front tells the writer of a young fellow who wore a charmed ring suspended from his neck. The wearer had it from his sweetheart; he placed the most perfect faith in it, and, though he had been in several hot corners, he had hitherto always come out scathless.

Although this kind of belief is of very ancient date, it is curious as well as interesting to find it still in existence in the British army. Perhaps we ought to say "traces of it," for it is hard to believe that it is widely prevalent. And yet it would not be very surprising if it were so, seeing that a certain proportion of the rank and file are illiterate, and come from a stratum of society which is largely superstitious. It is curious to compare our army in this respect with the German.

Those who happened to be in the fatherland during and immediately after the war of 1870-71 must have been struck by the amount of superstition that, hidden under ordinary circumstances, in the then excited state of the public mind made its way to the surface, much as the mud of a stagnant pool floats to the top when the water is agitated. Nothing seemed too absurd to be believed. Portents and warnings were seen everywhere. Black crosses, observed for the first time in window-panes of the houses of the peasantry throughout Baden and the south generally, were held to be signs of divine wrath against the turn things in general had taken in the fatherland, especially in regard to the church. The excitement touching this phenomenon became intense, and was only allayed when a Baden glass manufacturer came forward and demonstrated that the warning crosses were marks imprinted on the glass in the process of making.—New York Evening Post.

VILLAGE BLOTTED OUT BY SHIFTING SANDS.

Not alone volcanoes, floods and cyclones show the inability of man to cope with the aroused forces of nature, as a recent dispatch from Los Angeles, Cal., show.

Just across the mountains to the east of Redlands, Cal., in the Mojava desert, lies the village of Indio, a station on the Southern Pacific railway. Two years ago it was surrounded by an arid waste of sand. Nothing grew there—not even sage brush. It was as desolate and dreary a waste as Death Valley, 100 miles to the northeast.

Someone put down an artesian well and found abundant water a short distance below the surface. Other wells were sunk. Water was turned on the land and the desert began to blossom. Land which had been worthless began to sell at all the way from $20 to $100 per acre.

And this land grew anything. It produced melons every month in the year. It grew alfalfa six crops yearly. Anything that was planted produced huge crops. Indio was the center of a fertile and fruitful district.

Two or three weeks ago the desert wind began to blow. It had blown often before and the people of Indio were not alarmed. This time, however, it continued to grow in strength. Fine particles of sand filled the air, and still the people were not alarmed. They had had sandstorms before. But not this kind of sandstorm. The wind grew fiercer and fiercer, rolling clouds of sand before it, and finally swooping up whole acres of it and hurling it upon the cultivated fields and fruitful gardens of Indio.

At the end of three days, when the desert wind ceased, the whole cultivated region was once more an arid desert, buried under sand many feet deep. Not a green thing was spared. Everything had been obliterated by the fierce breath of the simoon. The jealous desert had claimed its own again. Crops, irrigation ditches and improvements valued at over $1,000,000 had vanished—blotted out by the shifting sand.

To be contented you must be good friends with yourself.

WHEN IS A MAN WISE?

Differences of Opinion Concerning a Most Important Point.

What age brings with it of wisdom on the one hand or irresponsibility on the other depends largely on the point of view. The recent unfortunate slip of Gen. Brigg's pen regarding the Cubans was under discussion the other day, between two men, both of whom had seen, in their time, a good deal of public life.

"I am sorry for Bragg," remarked one of them, "but he is far too old to be placed in a position of the delicacy of that of consul general in Cuba at this stage."

"I am not so sure of that," answered the other. "I was once, as a youngster, with President Lincoln and Secretary Seward when the latter was urging that a certain diplomatic mission requiring the ripest and soundest judgment should be given to a certain man he had selected. Mr. Lincoln inquired how old the candidate was, and was told that he was past middle life. The president shook his head.

"'He won't do,' said he; 'he's too old for such a post. I should be too old for it; you would be too old for it, Seward.'

"'No,' answered Seward, equally earnestly, 'the trouble is just the other way. I am not old enough to fill it properly; I never shall be old enough.'"

In Haunted Ways.

In haunted ways I set my feet,
When pales the wistful after-glow;
The ghostly presence is so sweet,
No lightest fear my heart may know!
The sigh of darksome boughs I hear—
One spell the whispering leaves repeat;
One only voice, in all, I hear,
One only face I meet!
In haunted ways I set my feet,
By day, by night—where'er I range;
The ghostly presence is so sweet,
My heart, forsooth, desires no change!
Clear rings the thrush's matin call,
The wakening eyes of flowers I greet;
One only voice I hear in all,
One only face I meet!
In haunted ways I set my feet,
Where'er I go—
Where'er I go—where'er I go.
The mystic thralldom is complete;
And yet, it was not always so.
I only loved since yester-year—
Then first my heart did truly beat!
Since then one only voice I hear,
One only face I meet!

LOOKS LIKE MURDER.

Anoka Boy Cut to Pieces and His Pockets Are Rifled.

Anoka, Minn., Sept. 2. — Ralph C. Watson, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. Watson, met a horrible death yesterday half-way between Anoka and Coon Creek. He was ground to pieces under a Northern Pacific freight train, and several facts point to murder. The Watson boy was found in the ditch by the side of the tracks. Both legs were cut off, one arm was nearly severed near the shoulder and the skull was fractured just above the left ear. Beside the body, wide open and with the blade buried in the ground, was Watson's pocket knife. Tracks on the ground showed that the body had been moved once, and pools of blood showed that it might have been moved twice. The most mysterious fact was that his pockets were wrong side out and empty, except for his watch, which was safe in his pants pocket, tied to a string. County Attorney Pratt is inclined to believe that the man was killed by the train and robbed afterward.

BULLETS IN HIS BODY.

Minnesota Deputy Sheriff Is Murdered.

Park Rapids, Minn., Sept. 2.—Last Thursday eleven men were arrested at Akeley at the instance of County Attorney Bills on the charge of selling liquor without a license. They were given a hearing at Nevis and ten of the eleven pleaded guilty. Frank Bask, better known as "Frenchy," pleaded not guilty, but was convicted and sentenced to serve thirty days in Walker jail. He was left in the hands of Deputy Sheriff John L. Hoffman of Akeley, but escaped. Hoffman went in search of his prisoner and did not return, but later parties who were driving near Nevis met Bask, who informed them that he had found a dead man near the railroad track. They drove at once to the place mentioned and found Hoffman dead, with a bullet hole in his head and another in his breast. The body was brought to Nevis and a squad of armed citizens sent in search of Bask and brought him in.

Likes the Western Country—Will Hunt in South Dakota.

Winona, Minn., Sept. 2.—Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., son of President Roosevelt, and Vice President McCullough, of the Northwestern road, passed through Winona yesterday in Mr. McCullough's private car en route to Huron, S. D., where they expect to spend some time hunting prairie chickens. When seen by a reporter young Teddy said: "The Western country is the grandest country I have ever seen. I don't know what sort of success I will have at this shooting, for I have done but very little of it before. They say that the prairie chickens are very plentiful, and if that is so we should at least get a few of them. I think that we will remain out there about a week and I am confident that I will enjoy the sport."

PIGEONS TO CARRY NEWS.

Big Ranch System to Have System of Communication.

Pierre, S. D., Sept. 2.—The Lumley Cattle company, which operates ranches just east of this city on Spring creek, at the lower end of the old Fort Sully reservation, and at Little Bend in Sully county, occupying points on the river of about forty miles from the furthest location north, at Little Bend, to the home ranch below this city, will try the experiment of communication between the different ranches with carrier pigeons. A number of these birds are being bred at the home ranch and experiments will soon be made in sending of messages between the ranches with them.

BLOWN OFF TRACK

CYCLONE KILLS AND MAIMS PEOPLE ON RUSHING TRAIN NEAR OWATONNA.

THREE KILLED, THREE WILL DIE

CARS TOSSED IN AIR LIKE FEATHERS AND DASHED TO THE GROUND.

SENATOR KNATVOLD BADLY HURT

THIRTY-ONE OTHERS RECEIVE MORE OR LESS SERIOUS INJURIES.

Owatonna, Minn., Sept. 2. — The Northwestern local passenger train from Winona to Mankato was blown from the track by a cyclone a few miles west of here about 5:40 Saturday evening.

Three persons were killed, three fatally injured and thirty-one others received painful injuries.

Among the injured is Senator T. V. Knatvold of Albert Lea, candidate for congress against Congressman Tawney. He had two ribs broken and it will be a week before he can be moved.

The following is the list of dead and fatally injured:

Dead.

Delmare Peterson, Waseca, five years old; head severed.

Miss Ethel Richardson, New Ulm, fourteen years, cerebral injuries.

Unknown woman about thirty years of age, weighing about 100 pounds.

Fatally Injured.

Mrs. Almira Bickford, Albert Lea; hemorrhage of brain.

A. C. McConnell, Brookings, S. D., cerebral injuries.

Miss Caroline McCuno, Worthington; internal injuries.

Of the other injured Conductor Kenzie is in the most serious condition. Broken bones, cuts and bruises, painful, though not serious, were the extent of the injuries sustained by the others.

The train was composed of a baggage car and two day coaches. It was running about forty miles an hour when the storm, which was cyclonic, struck it.

The three cars were picked up as though they were feathers, turned over two or three times and then dashed to the ground. The baggage car was totally destroyed and the two coaches were completely wrecked. The occupants of the coaches were caught beneath the wreckage.

The work of rescuing the injured was concluded about 10 o'clock Saturday night. Owin gto the escaping gas it was impossible to continue the investigation until morning, when the coaches were raised and it was found that every passenger had been removed the night before. Investigation reveals the fact that the storm was less than 100 feet in width. From all reports the engine evidently escaped the fury of the cone-shaped cloud but by a few feet and remained on the track when the coaches were carried into the air. One of the coaches caught the full force of the storm and was carried further from the track than the other two.

The storm destroyed grain stacks of Thomas Ralke, on whose farm the wreck occurred, and then passed between the house and barn, leaving both unharmed. It then passed northwest through Medford, a town on the Milwaukee road. Several large barns were totally destroyed, as were also two houses in Medford. The residence of Frank Speakerman was struck by lightning just previous to the cyclone and totally destroyed.

Great credit is given Conductor Kenzie for his heroic conduct during the work of relief. Though suffering from a serious gash in the forehead and a badly bruised hip and leg, he refused any aid, but urged every one to take care of the passengers first. through it all he worked with the grit and courage of a hero. It is feared that he may not survive the terrible shock.

MOTHER HOLDS BABY VAGRANT.

Sentence Suspended by Court During Infant's Good Behavior.

Keokuk, Iowa, Sept. 2.—Baby Kellar, eleven months old, was found guilty of vagrancy by a justice of the peace. Sentence was suspended during good behavior and the baby defendant was discharged. The case was tried with nobody in the court room except the mother and her friends, who swore out a warrant against the infant several days ago as a means of obtaining possession of the child. The mother still has the child guarde dat he raister's home.

TRIES TO END HER LIFE.

Mrs. Herman Weasa of Winona Attempts Suicide.

Winona, Minn., Sept. 2.—Mrs. Herman Weasa attempted suicide at her home in this city yesterday morning. After drinking carbolic acid she ran out onto the railroad track and lay down. This attempt to make death more certain frustrated her plans, for she was seen by neighbors and carried to her home, where physicians succeeded in saving her life. Her mouth and throat are horribly burned.

Dies of Nervous Prostration.

Faribault, Minn., Sept. 2.—Mrs. D. I. Phelps, wife of Dr. Phelps, died last night after a short illness from nervous prostration. She was thirty-five years of age, and is survived by a husband and three young children.

Beloit, Wis., Sept. 2.—President E. B. Eaton of Beloit college has arrived in Beloit after an absence of more than a year in Europe. He returned greatly improved in health and immediately will resume active work.

ATTACKED BY STRIKERS.

Only One Disturbance Reported in Panther Creek Valley.

Tamaqua, Pa., Sept. 2. — Only one disturbance was reported in the Panther Creek valley yesterday. While John and Albert Kutz, non-union men, were leaving the St. Michael's Hungarian church at Lansford they were attacked by a number of foreigners and were compelled to return to the church for safety. After remaining there for some time they succeeded in making their escape. Yesterday afternoon the officials of the switchback railroad notified Maj. Gearhart that strikers were interfering with their passengers at Summit Hill. Company E of the Twelfth regiment was sent to the scene and succeeded in restoring order. To-day a large force of soldiers will patrol the valley and protect non-union men while on their way to work.

LONG JOURNEY IN A BALLOON.

Two Aeronauts and an Artist Start From Denver for New York.

Denver, Sept. 1.—"Big Glory," one of the largest balloons ever constructed, was safely sent from this city yesterday on a trip, the purpose of which is to break the world's long distance record, as well as all previous records for fast balloon sailing. It is expected ultimately to reach New York, if possible. The balloon contains 140,000 feet of hydro gas and was built especially for this trip. The occupants of the balloon are Captains T. S. Baldwin and Percy Hudson, aeronauts, and C. S. Sherman, a member of the art staff of the Denver Post. Bottles containing messages will be dropped to the earth by means of parachutes and these messages will indicate the course of travel and experiences of the travelers.

BIG STRIKE THREATENED.

Butchers in the Big Packing Centers Are Dissatisfied.

Chicago, Sept. 2. — Unless a compromise is effected the cattle butchers employed by the various packers at the stock yards will go on strike next Wednesday morning and the butchers in the packing plants at Kansas City, South Omaha, Sioux City, St. Paul and St. Joseph, that they will do likewise. The butchers' union has made in all these cities a demand for an increase of 10 per cent in wages and if the request is not granted concerted action is agreed upon.

SOLDIERS HELP STRIKERS.

Do Such Good Missionary Work They Are Moved Away.

Parkersburg, W. Va., Sept. 2.—An unexpected situation has resulted from the ordering out of the national guard to preserve order in the coal fields. The soldiers, whose sympathy was all with the strikers from the first, have used their influence with the men who are at work and have persuaded so many of them to join in the strike that the detachment stationed at Rush Run had to be recalled and sent to another point to keep it from emptying the mine.

WILL RAISE A ROAR.

Lord Milner Doubles the Capitation Tax on Boers.

London, Sept. 2.—Lord Milner, British high commissioner in South Africa, has just issued at Pretoria a new ordinance in regard to the taxation of natives, under which every male adult and every married native woman must pay, after Sept. 1, an annual capitation tax of $10. This is, roughly speaking, double the amount of the capitation tax collected under the Boer régime, and it will doubtless lead to mue hmurmuring.

STORM IN NEBRASKA.

Many Houses Struck by Lightning and Much Damage Done.

Lincoln, Neb., Sept. 2.—Special dispatches from Southwest Nebraska towns tell of a heavy wind, rain and electrical storm last Saturday night. At Aubun houses were unroofed and barns were overturned. The roof of the largest department store in the town was blown away and the goods soaked with rain. The country was flooded, bridges washed out and many houses were struck by lightning.

SULTAN IS KILLED.

Held as Hostage, He Attempts to Escape, and Is Shot.

Manila, Sept. 2.—The sultan of Bindayan, who was held as a hostage by the American forces at Camp Vickers, Island of Mindanao, attempted to escape from his guards last Thursday and was shot and killed by a sentry. The sultan had been arrested after the recent murders of American soldiers in Mindanao, and wa sbeing held pedding the surrender o fthe murderers.

Policeman Is Held Up.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Sept. 2. — Jacob Smith, a coal and iron policeman in the employ of the Kingston Coal company, was held up by two unknown men yesterday while he was on his way to one of the collieries of the company to relieve another officer. His assailants took his revolver away from him and then gave him a severe beating.

Rebellion Is Spreading.

Pekin, Sept. 2. — The foreign legations here are receiving reports from Szo Chuan province that the rebellion there is constantly spreading and that foreigners are in great danger.

Cholera Is Increasing.

Manila, Sept. 2.—The cholera is increasing. Last Saturday 340 cases were reported in the provinces. The totals reported to date are 27,929 cases and 19,640 death.

Vessel Damaged by Fire.

San Francisco, Sept. 2.—The brigantine City of Papete, lying off Lombard street wharf, caught fire early yesterday and was damaged severely. The Cit yof Papete arrived Aug. 29 from Unalaska with 217,000 codfish.

Swims Niagara Rapids.

Niagara Falls, N. Y., Sept. 2.—C. D. Graham swam from the whirlpool below Niagara falls through the lower arpids to Lewiston yesterday. He wore a life preserver about his waist and a neck float.

BOMBARD CAPITAL

VENEZUELAN FORCES AGAIN WILL TRY TO TAKE CIUDAD BOLIVAR.

IS STILL IN HANDS OF REBELS

BRITISH SUBJECTS ASK FOR A WARSHIP FOR THEIR PROTECTION.

HUNDREDS OF REBELS DESERT

TAKE THEIR ARMS AND EQUIPMENT AND GO OVER TO THE ENEMY.

Port of Spain, Trinidad, Sept. 2. — News reached here from Carupano, Venezuela, yesterday morning that the government general, Velutini, would leave Carupano to-day with three gunboats and 500 men to bombard a second time Ciudad Bolivar, on the Orinoco river, which is still in the hands of the Venezuelan revolutionists.

Ciudad Bolivar, capital of the State of Bolivar, was bombarded by the Venezuelan gunboats Bolivar and Restaurador last week, and many persons were killed and wounded.

British subjects at Ciudad Bolivar have requested that a warship of Great Britain be sent for their protection.

Hundreds of Rebels Desert.

Willemstad, Curacao, Sept. 2.—News from an official source has reached here confirming previous reports that last Friday 550 men of the Venezuelan army, who formed the vanguard of the government forces near Ocumare, deserte dto the revolutionists. They took their arms an dequipment with them, and carried their chief, Gen. Castillo, a prisoner to the enemy.

The 600 government soldiers who have been trying to re-establish traffic on the German railroad from Caracas to Valencia were repeatedly interrupted by the insurgents during Thursday and Friday of last week, and the latter day they were defeated by a detachment of insurgents near Los Tequos. The town of Los Tequos is now in the hands of the insurgents.

FLORENCE IN STATE OF SIEGE.

Forty Thousand Workmen Are on a Strike—Troops Guary City.

Florence, Sept. 2.—The employes of forty different callings have joined the strike which began last Friday. The town appears to be in a state of siege. Troops have been recalled from the maneuvers and from camp and every square in the city is occupied by a company of soldiers. Strong infantry with fixed bayonets and cavalry patrols are parading the streets of Florence and its suburbs. Six thousand troops, in addition to a number of policemen and carbineers, have been concentrated in the city. Plenty of other soldiers are available should order be disturbed. It is estimated that 40,000 men are idle in Florence. The municipal newspapers have ceased to appear as a result of the strike.

CARDINAL IRELAND AGAIN.

Pope Has Decided to Present the Red Hat to an American.

New York, Sept. 2.—In view of the increase in Catholicism in the United States, the pope has decided, according to a World dispatch from Rome, to create another American cardinal in order to re-establish the equilibrium in the sacred college. It is pointed out to him that, whereas Great Britain and Ireland, with 6,000,000 Catholics, have two representatives, and even Australia with hardly 1,000,000, has a cardinal (Moran), 18,000,000 of American Catholics have only one cardinal (Gibbons). It is considered certain that Archbishop Ireland will get the red hat.

WELCOMED THE PRESIDENT.

Spends Sunday on the Farm of W. Seward Webb.

Burlington, Vt., Sept. 2.—After having spent the night at the country residence of Secretary Shaw on Lake Champlain, President Roosevelt yesterday was conveyed in the steam yacht Electra to the Shelburn Farms, the home of Dr. W. Seward Webb, where he remained over night. His arrival at Thompson's Point late Saturday night was made the occasion for a great demonstration, fully 4,000 people having gathered to extend him a fitting welcome.

SWEEPS ALL BEFORE IT.

Prairie Fire Raging Near the Oklahoma Boundary.

Guthrie, Okla., Sept. 2. — A prairie fire in the vicinity of Marlow, near the Oklahoma boundary, has raged twelve hours, destroying everything in its path. Farmers and stockers more than 100 strong fought the flames by means of counter fires. One hundred and fifty tons of hay and several fields of growing corn were consumed. The fire originated from a cigarette stub.

Killed in Drunken Row.

Rock Springs, Wyo., Sept. 2.—In a drunken row on the streets here Louis Sacks shot and killed one man and more or less seriously wounded three others. All three are Hungarians. The men had been carousing and becoming too noisy had been ordered out of a saloon.

Was Probably Murder.

Beloit, Wis., Sept. 2. — Victor B. Maynard, a former Beloit student who was ofund in Chicago in a basement badly injured from mysterious causes, is dead. He was probably murdered. The remains will be brought here.

Blown Up by Dynamite.

Scranton, Pa., Sept 2.—The pumphouse of the National washery at Minooka was blown to pieces early yesterday by dynamite. No damage was done the washery and work will proceed as usual.

UP TO ROOSEVELT

PRESIDENT IS APPEALED TO TO USE HIS INFLUENCE TO END STRIKE.

ALL OTHER EFFORTS HAVE FAILED

MR. MORGAN HOS ISSUED AN EDICT THAT THE FIGHT MUST GO ON.

SOLDIERS ORDERED TO SHOOT

WILL NO LONGER SUBMIT TO ATTACKS AND INSULTS OF STRIKERS.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Aug. 31.—The public alliance of this city, which has been endeavoring to bring about a settlement of the coal strike in the interests of the business men of the anthracite region, has sent the following appeal to President Roosevelt:

"To the President of the United States: Since the inception of the barbarous and senseless struggle in the anthracite coal region, we, the non-combatants, who stand upon neutral ground, have suffered the inevitable fate of such unfortunates. The tide of battle ebbs and flows over and about us. We have endured patiently. We have petitioned humbly. We had hoped for much upon J. P. Morgan's return. But now, after a struggle of four months' duration, a period of suffering and progressive business paralysis, when it seemed to us that the time was propitious for a settlement of some kind, if not as a matter of concession to public opinion, yet as a plain business proposition, Mr. Morgan has

and the edict has gone forth: 'There will be no settlement, no arbitration, no conciliation, no mediation, no concessions. The fight must go on.'

"Mr. Morgan has placed a ban upon us which means universal ruin, destitution, riot and bloodshed

"Is J. P. Morgan greater than the people? Is he mightier than the government? Will he be permitted to retain this menacing power?

"It is time that the people should speak. It is time that their voice should be heard.

"Representing the interests and sentiment of nine-tenths of our people, we appeal to you to use your influence to stay the juggernaut which crushes us. Encouraged by your recent utterances, relying upon your judgment and patriotism, confident of your moral courage, we appeal from the king of the trusts to the president of the people. —The Public Alliance.

"T. F. Hart, Chairman."

President Mitchell said last night that there were no negotiations on for the settlement of the strike so far as he knew.

SOLDIERS ORDERED TO FIRE.

Gen. Gobin Issues Issues Sweeping Orders to the Troops.

Shenandoah, Pa., Aug. 31. — Gen. Gobin returned to headquarters from the Panther creek region last night. He received the report of Maj. Gearhart and made a personal investigation of conditions there and last night issued orders directing the arrest of any person using insulting language, epithets or violence toward the troops while in the performance of their duty. The order says:

"Have such parties arrested and taken to your guard house for future disposition. In moving troops place reliable, competent and skilled marksmen on the flanks of the command and arm your file-closers with loaded guns and instruct them that in case of attack upon the column by stones or missiles, where the attacking party cannot be reached, the men thus selected shall carefully note the man attacking the column, and being certain of his man, fire upon him without any further orders. For the execution of this duty select none but absolutely reliable men who will make no mistake. On a general mob, if resisted, use bayonets and butts vigorously if at all possible before resorting to volley firing."

AN OFFICIAL HURT.

Result May Be to Place Lansford Under Martial Law.

Tamaqua, Pa., Aug. 31.—In an encounter between troops and strikers at Lansford yesterday morning Capt. W. H. Helm of Company K, Twelfth regiment, was slightly injured. A half-dozen strikers were bayoneted by the soldiers as a result of the fracas. Maj. Gearhardt, in command of the troops here, states that he will appeal to the military authorities to put the town of Lansford under martial law. From daybreak the troops were active in quelling disturbances and protecting non-union men while on their way to work. As has been the case for the past few days, the troops were jeered wherever they went. The officers repeatedly admonished the crowds not to insult or molest the soldiers, but their words had but little effect.

MERELY TO PRESERVE ORDER.

West Virginia Adjutant Denies a Request of Operators.

Charleston, W. Va., Aug. 31.—When the troops reached Thurmond to preserve order and protect property in the mine region a request was made of Assistant Adjutant General Sutson, in command, to report to the operators at Rush run for instructions. He refused point blank, and said he was there with troops to act under instructions from the sheriff of the county to preserve order and not to take instructions from operators. Sheriff Daniel then took three companies and the signal corps to Rush Run to guard the public roads and protect people. The remainder of the troops bivouacked at Thurmond. No outbreak of any kind occurred yesterday.

COLOMBIA WANTS EXPLANATION

Nicaragua Must Explain Why It Cut Into Resurrection.

Washington, Aug. 31. — Colombia will formally demand of Nicaragua an explanation in regard to the latter country's alleged participation in the revolution against the Colombian government and back up her demand with the most formidable land and naval force she can muster, as soon as the present rebel activity on the isthmus has been crushed. Information to this effect was received from an authoritative source in Washington yesterday. It is not anticipated that the affair will lead to an actual war with Nicaragua, but, nevertheless, Colombia is making preparations to back up her representations with a reinforced army and navy. It develops that the purchase of the well-armed war vessel at Seattle, as well as several prospective purchases of warships for the Colombian navy have Nicaragua, rather than the present troubles on the isthmus, in view.

PRESIDENT SHOOTS A BEAR.

Senator Proctor Takes Him Out After Big Game.

Newport, N. H., Aug. 31.—President Roosevelt was yesterday entertained in a manner to his liking. Instead of making numerous addresses, meeting committees and indulging in handshaking, he plunged into the forest of the Corbin preserve in the Croyden mountain region and hunted big game, and just before dark succeeded in shooting a bear. In a few remarks preliminary to his talk here, he had disclaimed any intention to go hunting, but Senator Proctor, who, like the president, is a good shot, induced him to alter his determination. The president arrived shortly after 10 o'clock yesterday forenoon, and after being driven through the principal streets, delivered a short address in the public square.

KILLED WITH CLUBS.

Dying Man Tells How Robbers Pounded Bristol Citizen to Death.

South Bend, Ind., Aug. 31—The mystery of the murder of Jonathan Crumbacker, which occurred at Bristol, Ind., in 1897, is about to be cleared, Sheriff Elliott of Elkhart county having obtained information from a South Bend man who is now slowly dying. The man wrote to Sheriff Elliott, asking him to come to South Bend, and on his arrival here told him of all the facts concerning the tragedy. According to the story of the witness, Crumbacker was killed with clubs by men who were intent only on robbery. Sheriff Elliott refuses to give out any names, but is confident of landing the guilty parties.

TO RUN AERIAL FERRY.

Santos-Dumont Says He Will Establish Regular Passenger Service.

London, Aug. 31.—A dispatch from Paris quotes Santos-Dumont as saying that he has begun the construction of an airship which will be a reply to the critics who contend that such a vehicle can have no practical value or utility. The balloon will contain 1,500 cubic meters, and the motor will be an engine of sixty-five horse-power. The vessel will be able to carry eight persons, and it is M. Dumont's intention to establish with it a regular passenger service. So says that he anticipates no difficulty in getting people to patronize.

CANNOT SELL CANAL.

Confident That the Panama Title Will Not Be Made Clear.

Washington, Aug. 31.—Representative Hepburn of Iowa reiterates that in his judgment the new Panama Canal company possesses nothing which it can sell to the United States. "I am convinced," said Col. Hepburn, "that Mr. Knox will find when he reaches Paris and begins a personal investigation of the records of the canal company that this government cannot afford to invest $40,000,000 in what the company has to offer. I have gone into that subject very fully and know what I am talking about."

SEARCH FOR DEKAY.

An American Who Has Mysteriously Disappeared.

London, Aug. 31. — United States Consul General Henry Clay Evans received a request from Consul General J. K. Gowdy of Paris to locate an Amelcan, W. T. Dekay of Chicago, who registered at the Hotel Sitz, Paris, on Aug. 15, with a man who gave the name of H. L. Norman of Mansfield, Ohio, and who disappeared from the hotel the same day. Dekay, who left Paris Aug. 17, registered this week at the Savoy hotel, this city, but his whereabouts now is unknown.

POSTMASTERS ADJOURN.

Capt. Castle Reads a Paper at the Closing Session.

Milwaukee, Aug. 31. — The convention of the National Postmasters' association came to a close yesterday forenoon with the reading of a paper by Henry A. Castle, auditor for the postoffice department, Washington, on "The Magnitude and Importance of the Postal System." The delegates were given a steamer ride on the lake in the afternoon.

SCAFFOLD COLLAPSES.

One Killed, One Fatally and Four Are Badly Injured.

Steubenville, Ohio, Aug. 31.—A fifty-foot scaffold at the Labell iron works, on which six men were working on new stacks, gave way yesterday and all were hurled to the ground. William H. Walker was instantly killed, George Miller received fatal injuries and the other four were baddly injured.

Youthful Counterfeiters.

Dubuque, Iowa, Aug. 31.—Clyde Ellis, Roy Gregory, Willie Edson and Frank Quinlan were arrested yesterday charged with making and passing counterfeit dimes. The boys confessed and gave up molds crudely made of brick.

Treaty to Be Signed.

Shanghai, Aug. 31.—The Anglo-Chinese commercial treaty will be signed to-day, the Chinese commissioner having received the imperial sanction to do so.

ROSING OPENS UP

THE DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE FOR GOVERNOR MAKES HIS BOW.

WHAT HE THINKS OF THINGS

CONSIDERS THE TRUST QUESTION ONE OF GREAT PUBLIC CONCERN.

QUESTION OF STATE TAXATION

DEMOCRATS HAVE LONG HAD A PLAN TO CORRECT. THE EVILS.

Minneapolis, Aug. 31.—L. A. Rosing, Democratic candidate for governor, opened his campaign in this city last night. He said in part:

"This is essentially a state campaign. The questions of immediate interest and importance are those touching us as citizens of Minnesota. Nevertheless, there are questions of national import which press upon us for consideration and which will demand our attention in the congressional campaigns and which cannot be separated entirely from the state contest because, after all, the same general principles apply in national and state affairs. The principle of equal rights for all and special privileges to none applies in state as well as nation, and in the application of this principle electors must decide upon which side they will take their stand.

"A question of public concern, the settlement of which demands our best thought and courageous action, is that involved in the monopolistic tendencies of the so-called trusts. Corporations are formed under statutes enacted by the representatives of the people, and the power that creates necessarily has the power to fix the limitations of its creatures.

"As a preliminary step, I would advocate the removal of all special privileges which these so-called trusts and combinations in restraint of trade enjoy.

"Democracy believes that the first remedy should be the removal of all duties upon articles handled by combinations in restraint of trade. Let them compete with the world. These 'infants' that have been capitalized at a billion dollars and more would seem to have passed beyond the need of tribute from the purse of the American citizen.

"The Republican candidates, state and congressional, have no right to go before the people of this state upon a platform of promises. They have had the opportunity, they have had the power, and the people of the state have the right to say to them: 'What have you accomplished? Do not tell us what you are going to do.'

"There is one suggestion in this campaign upon which I desire to express my views with special frankness. I say suggestion, for the reason that it does not appear to me that any issue is presented upon the matter, at least so far as our opponents are concerned.

"For a good many years there have been upon the statute books of this state provisions forbidding the consolidation of parallel and competing lines of railroad. It is claimed that these provisions have been violated by the Great Northern and Northern Pacific railroads, and it seems to me that it must be apparent that if they have not been directly violated, an attempt has at least been made to evade their spirit.

"Gov. Van Sant did his duty in calling upon the attorney general to enforce the law against the consolidation of the Northern Pacific and Great Northern, but there he stopped.

"The Iron range roads were merged by the United States steel trust in February, 1901, sixty days after Gov. Van Sant's inauguration, and nine months before the attempt to merge the Northern coast lines. If the present state administration is entitled to re-election because it brought suit to forbid the consolidation of the coast lines, what does it deserve for ignoring the merging of the Iron Range roads, which are wholly within the State of Minnesota and are the original merger offenders?

"The Democratic platform pledges its candidate and the party to the enforcement of the present statutes against consolidation, and that in every case, and if my nomination shall be ratified at the polls this fall I pledge myself to carry out the instructions of the party in that regard."

Mr. Rosing said that the question of railroad rates was of special importance to the people at large. He said that the record of the present railroad commission is one of inefficiency and subserviency to special interests. He urged the election of the Democratic candidates, saying that the question of regulating railroad rates would then be given proper attention.

Mr. Rosing then went over the record of the last Democratic commission and compared it with what had been done by the present commission.

The question of state taxation was next taken up. On this question Mr. Rosing said:

"For the past six years the Democrats of this state have had a plan for correcting the most glaring evils of our present tax system, and if the legislature of 1901 had not been blinded by partisan prejudice and the desire to make political capital, rather than to legislate for the interests of the people, there could have been no possible excuse for calling the extra session of the legislature The minority members of the legislature presented a complete program, in harmony with Democratic ideas. That program our party platform indorses, and by it I am willing to stand."

"The principle of direct legislation is so thoroughly democratic and republican that there should be no difference of opinion in regard to its desirability."

Mr. Rosing closed with a tribute to John Lind.

KILLED BY A WATCHMAN.

Unknown Inflicts Wounds That Prove Fatal.

St. Paul, Aug. 31.—Joseph William Jaques met his death at the hands of a murderous assailant, who attacked him on the Jackson street bridge at 7:30 yesterday morning. Bruised and bleeding he dragged himself to his home, half a mile away, and died within three hours. His assailant is unknown, except for the fact that he was a watchman at the Great Northern shops. The trouble grew out of the strike at the Great Northern shops some weeks ago. Excitement was at fever heat in the shops yesterday afternoon. Several men were absent from work in the search for the watchman, and the police are afraid that trouble will follow. Jaques was a machinist.

MAKES DEATH SURE.

Illinois Girl at Sturgis Uses Three Kinds of Poison.

Sturgis, S. D., Aug. 31. — At Hotel Scollard Thursday night was found the remains of another unfortunate. On Wednesday John Scollard telegraphed to Belle Fourche, in answer to an inquiry, and engaged a dining room girl. She came on an evening train, took supper and soon retired. That was the last Mr. Scollard saw of her until late Thursday night, when after repeated knocks at the door of her room with no response, the lock was forced and the girl was found dead. It was suicide, pure and simple. She had used strychnine, chloroform and carbolic acid to make sure work of her determination to make away with herself.

STREET CAR HELD UP.

Masked Robber Took All Cash on Car in Spite of Chief of Police.

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 31.—Chief of Police Reddy was a passenger on a street car that was held up last night by a highwayman. The car, on Astor street line, had stopped for railroad crossing when a masked robber, with a revolver in each hand, stopped aboard and compelled the conductor to give up his cash. Then brandishing his long gun, he commanded the passengers to contribute. Chief Reddy was unarmed and says he was powerless. Twenty minutes before this occurrence another car in the neighborhood was hailed by a masked robber, but the motorman threw on full current and the car ran by the thief.

PROGRESS OF HARVEST.

Some Bad Spots in Iowa Where Rain Has Ruined Crops.

Eldora, Iowa, Aug. 31. — The crop outlook here in this region is not as promising as farmers wish that it was, and it is feared that there will be a very light lot of oats threshed, as the wet weather has hindered threshing, and the oats in stack are green and growing, making them worthless. There is going to be a lot of soft corn, and feeders and farmers are figuring accordingly. Unless the frost stays off all during the month of September the corn will be soft and of a very poor quality.

QUITS ARMY FOR BRIDE.

Recruiting Officer at Sioux City Marries Contrary to Orders.

Sioux City, Iowa, Aug. 31.—Corporal Charles C. Tryon, who has been in charge of the United States army recruiting office in this city for two years or more, has decided to purchase his release from the army and will settle in a home in Des Moines with a wife whom he recently married. The marriage has been kept a secret because there is a rule which prohibits enlisted men from becoming married.

GIFT FROM THE PRINCE.

Gov. Van Sant Gets a Photograph in a Leather Frame.

St. Paul, Aug. 31.—Gov. Van Sant yesterday received a photograph of Prince Henry of Prussia. The photograph is in a buff leather frame with a gold border, ornamented with the letter "H" and the coat of arms of the house of Hohenzollern. The photograph is a personal gift from Prince Henry in recognition of the part taken by Gov. Van Sant in the prince's entertainment while in this country.

MAKING A GOOD PORT.

Engineers Plan New Harbor of Refuge at Port Wing.

Washburn, Wis., Aug. 31.—A corps of engineers have been at work laying out the site for the new harbor of refuge at Port Wing in Bayfield county. The town has purchased land and probably work on the new harbor will be commenced this fall, although it may be delayed until spring. The river and harbor bill passed by the last congress contained an appropriation of $25,000 for this work.

AGED COUPLE DEAD IN BED.

Gas Had Been Accidentally Turned and Man and Wife Asphyxiated.

Minneapolis, Aug. 31.—Mr. and Mrs. Michael Murphy, aged seventy-five and seventy-four, respectively, were found dead in their room at 1316 Aldrich avenue north. The gas was turned on full, and death resulted from asphyxiation. Coroner Williams decided that death was purely accidental.

LOUIS HILL BUYS LAND.

Invests Heavily in Iron Property About Hibbing.

Duluth, Aug. 31.—Louis Hill is investing heavily in iron properties. He has purchased the land west of Hibbing, showing 12,000,000 tons of ore. The Republic Iron and Steel company has closed a deal for 15,000,000 tons of ore on western Mesaba.

Find Body of Missing Man.

Keokuk, Iowa, Aug. 31. — A search party last night found the body of G. Gaffner of Mount Hamil in a pond seven miles from here. Gaffner had been missing for a week and had evidently fallen off a foot-log.

Gifts of Chicago University.

Chicago, Aug. 31. — Nearly half a million dollars in new gifts to the University of Chicago are announced by President Harper, the occasion being the forty-third convocation of the university.

BIG WAR IS NOW ON

MIMIC CONFLICT BETWEEN THE FORCES OF THE ARMY AND NAVY.

MUCH LIKE THE REAL THING

SOUTHERN NEW ENGLAND COAST THE SCENE OF THE GREAT WAR GAME.

NAVY WILL ATTEMPT LANDING

FIVE THOUSAND ARTILLERYMEN MAN THE COAST FORTIFICATIONS.

Newport, R. I., Sept. 2.—Under cover of a fog and the blackness of night the North Atlantic fleet, commanded by Rear Admiral Higginson, slipped its cable in Menemsha Bright, Vineyard sound, shortly before 10 o'clock last night and put to sea, making its first move afloat in the war game between army and navy in the imaginary war along the Southern New England coast. On land from Fort Rodman at New Bedford, to Fort Wright, at Fisher's island, every fortification is manned by artillerymen and every headland is patrolled by signalmen just as carefully as if a really hostile fleet were about to descend upon this part of the seaboard.

The actual period began at the expiratoin of forty-eight hours of preparation, and while the fleet appeared to take things easily during the interval, the land forces under supreme command of Maj. Gen. MacArthur, were drilled at the guns and at a signal station with all the vigor that forecasts real conflict. Never in the history of this country has such a grim aspect been.

Given to the Defenses which guard New Bedford, the cities on Narragansett bay, the Connecticut shores, and more important even, the city of New York, from attack under cover of Martha's Vineyard and adjacent islands, and through the great waterway—Long Island sound.

Last night when taps sounded at all the forts nearly 5,000 artillerymen went to sleep beside their guns ready to spring up for action when the alarm should be sounded. On the walls of fortifications paced guards, and along the beaches sharp-eyed signal men swept the sea with their night glasses, feverishly anxious lest the light of a hostile war vessel be taken for that of a friendly merchant craft.

On sea the fleet had been swallowed up in darkness and it will be heard from next when it makes a descent on the coast within the zone of hostilities. There are nearly 5,000 men afloat, and it may be that Admiral Higginson will endeavor to land his marines at some exposed point of the shore defenses and attempt to capture it before making his attack in an effort to force an entrance to Buzzard's or Narragansett bay or Long Island sound, or even to silence some one of the big forts. The army claims to be ready for anything which may develop.

KILLED BY BEEFSTEAK.

Thoroughly Masticated, a Mouthful Strangled Connecticut Farmer.

Derby, Conn., Sept. 2.—A mouthful of beefsteak killed Edward Treat in the restaurant of Herman R. Atwater in Seymour, near here. The restaurant was full of people at their mid-day meal, and when Treat suddenly fell to the floor writhing and coughing, there was a panic. Blue with agony, Treat was carried to the yard outside, where every effort was made to relieve him. His back was clapped, water was poured down his throat, and he was held up by the feet. A doctor was called but Treat died just as he arrived. At the autopsy a large piece of beef was found lodged in the throat, closing the windpipe and causing death by strangulation. The beef was thoroughly masticated.

RIDDLED WITH BULLETS.

Negro Ravisher Is Taken From the Officers by a Mob.

Monticello, Ga., Sept. 2. — John Brown, a negro who attempted to criminally assault Miss Jennie Chaffin, a seventeen-year-old white girl near here Saturday, was arrested yesterday by a small posse of men. Brown was captured six hours after his crime and given a hearing before a justice of the peace, who ordered his committal. The deputy with Brown in charge was surrounded by a mob who demanded the surrender of the prisoner. The deputy was powerless to resist and the mob carried the negro into the woods, hanged him to a tree and riddled his body with bullets.

BITTER RACE WAR.

White Man Beaten Almost to Death by Negroes.

Vicksburg, Miss., Sept. 2.—Trouble between the races is reported at Redwood, ten miles north of here. M. T. Hughes, a white man, was beaten almost to death by a party of negroes. This aroused the whites, who attempted to arrest the ringleaders. About thirty negroes headed, it is said, by a white man, took refuge in a freight car, declining to allow any of their number to be taken. Deputy Sheriff Scott, with a posse and a detachment of the Warren light artillery, went to Redwood and the latest reports are to the effect that quiet prevails.

HARD ON STOCK.

Feed and Water Are Scarce in Parts of Oregon.

Burns, Or., Sept. 2.—There has never been a time in the history of the stock industry in Harney county when stock has suffere dso much for feed and water as during the present summer. Hot weather in the last six months has dried the grass in the hills and the springs and small creeks have been dried up. In small places cattle are dying for want of feed and water.

WRECK OF THE FAST MAIL.

Engineer and Fireman Killed, but the Passengers Escape.

Fairchild, Wis., Sept. 2.—The fast mail, east-bound, on the Chicago & Northwestern, ran into a washout near here about midnight Saturday night and two trainmen were killed. The dead are Engineer Ira Wallace of Altoona, Wis., and Fireman Robinson of St. Paul. The train was running at a high rate of speed and the first mail car followed the engine into the ditch and was badly splintered. The mail clerks escaped with but slight injuries. The passenger coaches and sleepers left the track but did not turn over, and beyond a severe shaking up, none of their occupants was hurt.

Milwaukee— Not in the history of the La Crosse division of the Milwaukee road has its trafic for the space of twelve hours been as completely demoralized as for the time ending last evening. East-bount train No. 4 arrived almost twelve hours late, due to a washout at Lake City, Minn. The trainmen reported that the Mississippi was out of its banks at that point and that the smaller streams which feed Lake Pepin were raging torrents.

WIDESPREAD DAMAGE.

Saturday's Storm Was Severe in Minnesota and Wisconsin.

Winona, Minn., Sept. 2.—The cyclone passed over Cochrane, Wis., Saturday evening. It destroyed one house and six barns. Several people were injured but no one was killed. The local storm was severe, but there was no damage.

Faribault, Minn.—Among the damage caused by the rainstorm caused by the rainstorm here Saturday night was the caving out o fa large section of a retaining wall about twenty feet high on Front street. The damage will exceed $1,000.

Black River Falls, Wis.—During the heavy thunder storm Saturday night the barn four miles west of the city belonging to Gilbert Cullom, and filled with hay, was destroyed by lightning, with seven stacks of oats and some stock.

GET LAW ON IDIOTS.

Russian Maniacs in Canada Refuse to Prepart for Winter's Rigors.

Winnipeg, Sept. 2. — Advices were received by an official to the effect that the dominion government will interfere in the case of the Doukhobohrs, who are suffering with a religious mania. The foreigners are making no provision for the winter. Five thousand are now affected, and the mania is spreading. They have discarded the use of horses and cattle, saying they are God's and have let them run wild on the prairie. The Doukhobohrs exiled themselves from Russia because their principal tenet forbids war and conflict in any case.

COPPER COMBINE.

Companies Not in the Big Concerns Will Amalgamate.

Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 2.—It is reported here that a copper combination has been formed taking in companies outside of the Amalgamated, Anaconda and other big copper companies, and that its capitalization will be upward of $97,000,000. The companies absorbo dby the new concern will be the Pittsburg & Montana Mining company, $30,000,000; the Copper River Mining company, $50,000,000, and four other lesser companies. The basis of operations will be the Copper Mountain, Eagle City, Alaska, 130 miles from Valdez, o nthe Copper river.

ESCAPES THE NOOSE.

Angry Mob Kills Colored Man Who Assaulted a Young Woman.

Sparta, Ill., Sept. 2.—Ardee Wilson, a negro who was arrested here for an assault on a young white woman yesterday, was shot to death by an angry mob. He escaped the mob earlier in the night in some manner by slipping off a rope they had tied about his neck and getting away in the darkness. A posse pursued him and surrounded him several hours later, within two blocks of the jail, and killed him.

CHAPTER XL.

A Useful Discovery.

Waiting with the eagerness of the greyhound in leash, David Steel was more annoyed and vexed over the disappearance of the wounded Van Sneck than he cared to admit. He had an uneasy feeling that the unseen foe had checkmated him again. And he had built up so many hopes upon this strangely uninvited guest of his. If that man spoke he could tell the truth. And both Cross and Bell had declared that he would not die.

David found Cross in a frame of mind something like his own. It was late in the afternoon before it transpired that Van Sneck was gone, and, unfortunately, David did not know where to find Bell just at the moment. Cross had very little to say.

"A most unpleasant incident," he remarked. "But these things will happen, you know. We have been so busy lately, and our vigilance has been slightly relaxed. Oh, it is impossible to guard against everything, but he is certain to be found."

"You don't think," David suggested, "that anybody secretly connected with the man's past—"

"No, I don't!" Cross snapped; "that would be impossible. The man had something on his mind, and, so far as bodily condition was concerned, he was getting quite strong again. In his dazed state he got up and dressed himself and went away. He seems to have been seeking for somebody or something for days. We are certain to have him again before long."

With this poor consolation David returned home again. He was restless and desirous of human companionship. He even resented it, as a kind of affront, that his mother had chosen at this time to go to Hassocks to stay with an old friend for a couple of days. That Mrs. Steel knew practically nothing of her son's trouble counted for naught. Therefore it was with something akin to pleasure that David found Ruth Gates waiting in the drawing room for him when he came in from his walk on the following afternoon. Nothing had been heard of Van Sneck in the meantime, but, thanks to Chris' telephone message late the previous night, he had got in touch with Bell, who was coming south without delay.

There was a look of shy pleasure in Ruth's eyes and a deep carmine flush on her cheeks.

"You don't think that this is very bold of me?" she asked.

"I am pretty Bohemian in any case," David laughed, as he looked down, fondly, into the shy, sweet eyes. "And I'm too overjoyed to see you to think about anything else. I wish my mother was at home. No, I don't because I have you all to myself."

"David! On an occasion like this you ought to be the pink of propriety. Do you know, I believe I have made a great discovery?"

"Indeed, little girl! And what have you found out?"

"Well, you must tell me something before my discovery seems valuable. David, you are a close student of human nature. Is it possible for men of phenomenal cunning to make careless mistakes? Do the most clever criminals ever make childish blunders?"

"My dear child, if they didn't the police would have very little chance. For instance, I have discovered how those enemies of ours got hold of the note paper that lured Van Sneck here. They sent a messenger to Carter's, in East street, presumably knowing that my dies were there, and ordered a quarter of a ream of paper and envelopes. These were sent to an address at East Grinstead in a hurry. Now, that was very clever and smart, but here comes the folly. These people, in the stress of business, actually forgot to ascertain the cost and pay for the paper, so that it was down yesterday in my last quarter's bill. Oh, yes, I assure you, the most brilliant criminals do the most incredibly foolish things."

Ruth looked relieved. Her pretty features relaxed into a smile.

"Then I fancy Reginald Henson has done so," she said. "I fancy I have solved the mystery of the cigar case—I mean, the mystery of the one I bought."

"And which was changed for the one purchased at Walen's, hence these tears. But Lockhart's say that our case was really purchased by an American."

"Yes, I know. And I fancy that the manager honestly thought so. But I think I can explain that."

It was David's turn to look up, eagerly.

"Do you mean it?" he exclaimed. "It will make a wonderful difference if you can. That has been one of the most bewildering knots of the whole puzzle. If we could only trace the numbers of those notes, I suppose changed at the same time as the cigar case."

"Indeed, they were not," Ruth cried. "I have ascertained that the case was changed by Henson, as you and I have already decided. Henson made the exchange, not at the time we thought."

"Not when you left the package on the table for him to see?"

"No; at least I can't say. He had the other case then, probably, passed on to him by Van Sneck. Or perhaps he merely ascertained what I had purchased. That was sufficient for his purpose. Of course, he must have found out all about our scheme. After I had laid my cigar case on your doorstep a man quietly changed it for the one purchased at Walen's. But this is the alternate theory only. Anyway, I am absolutely certain that you got exactly the same notes that we had placed in the original case."

"That might be," Steel said, thoughtfully. "But that does not explain the fact that Lockhart sold your case to an American at the Metropole."

"I fancy that I can even explain that, dear. My uncle came down suddenly to-day from London. He wanted certain papers in a great hurry. Now, those papers are locked up in a drawer at 219, given over specially to Mr. Henson. My uncle promptly broke open the drawer and took out the papers. Besides these documents the drawer contained a package in one of Lockhart's big linen-lined envelopes—a registered letter envelope, in fact. My uncle had little time to spare, as he was bound to be back in London to-night. He suggested that, as the lock of the drawer was broken and the envelope, presumably, contained valuables, I had better take care of it. Well, I must admit at once that I steamed the envelope open. I shouldn't have done it if Lockhart's name had not been on the flap. In a little case inside I found a diamond bracelet, which I have in my pocket, together with a receipted bill for seventy-odd pounds, made out to me."

"To you?" David cried. "Do you mean to say that—"

"Indeed, I do. The receipt was made out to me, and with it was a little polite note to the effect that Messrs. Lockhart had made the exchange of the cigar-case for the diamond bracelet, and that they hoped Miss Gates would find the matter perfectly satisfactory."

David was too astonished to say anything for a moment. The skein was too tangled to be thought out all at once. Presently he began to see his way.

"Under ordinary circumstances, the changes seems impossible," he said. "Especially seeing that the juggling could not have been done without both the cases—but I had forgotten how easily the cases were changed. I have it! What is the date of the letter?"

Ruth slowly unfolded a document she had taken from her purse.

"The day following what you call your great adventure," she said. "Henson, or somebody, took the real case—my case—back to Lockhart's and changed it in my name. I had previously been admiring this self-same bracelet, and they had tried to sell it to me. My dear boy, don't you see this is all part of the plot to plunge you deeper and deeper into trouble, to force us all to speak to save you? There are at least fifteen assistants at Lockhart's. Of course, the ultimate sale of the cigar case to this American could be proved, seeing the case has got back into stock again, and at the same time the incident of the change quite forgotten. And when you go and ask questions at Lockhart's—as you were pretty sure to do, as Henson knew—you are told of the sale only to the American. Depend upon it, that American was Henson himself, or somebody in his pay. David, that man is too cunning, too complex. And some of these days it is going to prove his fall."

David nodded, thoughtfully. And yet, without something very clever and intricate in the way of a scheme, Henson could not have placed him in his present fix.

"There is only one thing to be done," he said. "You and I must go down to Lockhart's and make a few inquiries. With that diamond bracelet and letter in your possession, you should have no difficulty in refreshing their memories. Will you have some tea?"

"I am too excited," Ruth laughed. "I couldn't eat or drink anything just at present. David, what a lovely house you have."

"I'm glad to hear that you are going to like it," David said, drily.

Lockhart's received their customers in the usual courtly style. They were sorry they had no recollection of the transaction to which madam referred. The sale of the bracelet was clear, because that was duly and properly recorded on the books, and as, indeed was the sale of the gun-metal cigar-case to an American gentleman at the Metropole. If madam said that she had purchased the cigar-case, why—still, the polite assistant was most courteously incredulous.

The production of the letter made a difference. There was a passing of confidences from one plate-glass counter to another, and presently another assistant came forward. He profoundly regretted that there had been a mistake, but he remembered the incident perfectly. It was the day before he had departed on his usual monthly visit to the firm's Paris branch. Madam had certainly purchased the cigar-case; but before the sale could be posted in the ledger madam had sent a gentleman to change the case for the diamond bracelet previously admired. The speaker had attended to both the sale and the exchange; in fact, his cab was waiting for him during the latter incident.

"I trust there is nothing wrong?" he asked, anxiously.

"Not in the least," Ruth hastened to reply. "The whole matter is a kind of comedy that I wanted to solve. It is a family joke, you understand. And who made the exchange?"

"Mr. Gates, madam. A tall gentleman, dressed in—"

"That is quite sufficient, thank you," said Ruth. "I am sorry to trouble you over so silly a matter."

The assistant assured madam, with an air of painful reproach, that nothing was accounted a trouble in that establishment. He bowed his visitor out, and informed them that it was a lovely afternoon, a self-evident axiom that the most disputatious could not well deny.

"You see how our inquiries might have been utterly baffled but for this find of mine," Ruth said, as the two went along North street. "We shall find presently that the Metropole American and Reginald Henson are one and the same person."

"And you fancy that he made the exchange at Lockhart's?"

"I feel pretty certain of it," Ruth replied. "And you will be sure, later on, to find that he had a hand in the purchase of the other cigar-case from Walen's. Go to Marley's, and get him to make inquiries as to whether or not Walen's got their case down on approval."

David proceeded to do so without further delay. Inspector Marley was out, but David left a message for him. Would he communicate by telephone later on? Steel had just finished his dinner when Marley rang him up.

"Are you there? Yes; I have seen Walen. Your suggestion was quite right. Customer had seen cigar-case exactly like it at Lockhart's, only too dear. Walen dealt with some manufacturers and got case down. Oh, no; never saw customer again. That sort of thing happens to shopkeepers every day. Yes. Walen thinks he would recognize his man again. Nothing more? Good-night, sir."

CHAPTER XLI.

A Delicate Errand.

It looked like being a long, dull evening for Steel if he were not going to the theater, or anything of that kind. He generally read until about 11 o'clock, after which he sat up for another couple of hours plotting out the day's task for to-morrow. To-night he could only wander restlessly about his conservatory, snipping off a dead leaf here and there, and wondering where the whole thing was going to end.

With a certain sense of relief David heard the front door bell trill about 11 o'clock. Somebody was coming to see him, and it didn't matter much who, in Steel's present frame of mind. But he swept in to the study with a feeling of genuine pleasure as Hatherly Bell was announced.

"My dear fellow, I'm delighted to see you," he cried. "Take the big armchair. Let me give you a cigar and a whisky and soda and make you comfortable. That's better."

"I'm tired out," Bell said. "In London all day, and since 6 with Cross. Can you put me up for the night?"

"My bachelor bed room is always ready, Bell."

"Thanks. I don't fancy you need be under any apprehension that anybody has spirited Van Sneck away. In the first place, Henson, who seems to have discovered what happened, is in a terrible state about it. He wanted, very badly, to remain at Littimer, but when he heard that Van Sneck had left the hospital, he came down here; in fact, we traveled together. Of course, he said, nothing whatever about Van Sneck, whom he is supposed to know nothing about, but I could see that he was terribly disturbed. The worst of it is that Cross was going to get me to operate on Van Sneck; and Heritage, who seems wonderfully better, was going to assist."

"Is your unfortunate friend up to that kind of thing now?" David asked

"I fancy so. Do you know that Heritage used to have a fairly good practice near Littimer Castle? Lord Littimer knows him well. I want Heritage to come into this. I want to get at the reason why Henson has been so confoundedly good to Heritage. For years he has kept his eye upon him; for years he has practically provided him with a home at Palmer's. And when Heritage mentions Henson's name he always does with a kind of forced gratitude."

"You think that Heritage is going to be useful to us?"

"I fancy so. Mind you, it is only my idea—what I call intuition, for want of a better word. And what have you been doing lately?"

David proceeded to explain, giving the events of the afternoon, in full detail. Bell followed the account with the deepest interest. Then he proceeded to tell his own story. David appeared to be fascinated with the story of the man with the thumb-nail.

"So Miss Chris hopes to hypnotize the man with the thumb," he said. "You have seen more of her than I have, Bell. Does she strike you, as she strikes me, a girl of wonderfully acute mind, allied to a pluck and audacity absolutely brilliant?"

"She is that and more," Bell said, warmly. "Now that she is free to act, she has developed wonderfully. Look how cleverly she worked out that Rembrandt business, how utterly she puzzled Henson, and how she helped to get into Littimer's good books again without Henson even guessing at the reason. And now she has forced the confidence of that great rascal, Merritt. She has saved him from a gaol into which she might have thrown him at any moment, she has convinced him that she is exceedingly brilliant in the way of an adventuress, with a great coup ahead. Later on she will use Merritt, and a fine, hard-cutting tool she will find him."

"Where is Henson at the present moment?" David asked.

"I left him in London this afternoon," Bell replied. "But I haven't the least doubt in the world that he has made his way to Brighton by this time. In all probability he has gone to Longdean."

Bell paused as the telephone Bell rang out shrilly. The mere sound of it thrilled them both with excitement. And what a useful thing the telephone had proved!

"Are you there?" came the quick, small whisper. "Is that you, Mr. Steel? I am Enid Henson."

There was a long pause, during which David was listening intently. Bell could see him growing rigid with the prospect of something keen, alert and vigorous.

"Bell is here with me at this moment," he said. Just wait a minute while I tell him. Don't go away, please. Under the circumstances, it might be dangerous for me to ring you. . . . . . Just a moment. Here's a pretty mess!"

"Well," Bell said, impatiently, "I'm only a mere man, after all."

"Henson is at Longdean; he turned up an hour ago, and at the present moment is having his supper in the library before going to bed. But that is not the worst part of it. Williams heard the dogs making a great noise by the gates, and went to see what was wrong. Some poor, demented fellow had climbed over the wall and the dogs were holding him up. Fortunately, he did not seem to be conscious of his danger, and as he stood still, the hounds did him no harm. Williams was going to put the intruder into the road again, when Miss Henson came up. And whom do you suppose the poor, wandering tramp to be?"

Bell pitched his cigar into the grate full of flowers and jumped to his feet.

"Van Sneck, for million!" he cried. "My head to a cocoanut on it."

"The same. They managed to get the poor fellow into the house before Williams brought Henson from the lodge, and he's in the stables now, in a rather excited condition. Now, I quite agree with Miss Henson that Henson must be kept in ignorance of the fact; also, that Van Sneck must be got away without any delay. To inform the hospital authorities would be to spoil everything and play into Henson's hands. But he must be got away to-night."

"Right you are. Well, go and fetch him. Et apres?"

"Et apres he will stay here. He shall stay here, and you shall say that it is dangerous to remove him. Cross shall be told, and Marley shall be told, and the public shall be discreetly kept in ignorance for the present. I'll go over there at once, as there is no time to be lost. Miss Henson suggests that I should come, and she tells me that Williams will wait at the lodge gates for me. But you are going to stay here."

"Oh, indeed! But why am I going to stay here?"

"Because, my dear friend, I can easily manage the business single-handed, and because you must run no risk of meeting Henson yonder. You are not now supposed to know where the family are, nor are you supposed to take the faintest interest in them. Stay here and make yourself comfortable till I return...... Are you there? I will be at Longdean as soon as possible and bring Van Sneck here. No; I won't ring off: you had better do that. I shall be over in less than an hour."

David hung up the receiver and proceeded to don a short covert coat and cap. In the breast pocket of the coat he placed a revolver.

"Just as well to be on the safe side," he said. "Though I am not likely to be troubled with the man with the thumb again. Still, Henson may have other blackguards; he may even know where Van Sneck is at the present moment, for all I know to the contrary."

"I feel rather guilty, letting you go alone," Bell said.

"Not a bit of it," said David, cheerfully. "Smoke your cigar, and if you need any supper, ring for it. You can safely leave matters in my hands. Van Sneck shall stay here until he is fit, and then you shall operate upon him. After that he ought to be as clay in the hands of the potter. So long."

And David went off, gaily enough. He kept to the cliffs for the first part of the distance, and then struck off across the fields in the direction of Longdean. The place was perfectly quiet, the village was all in darkness as he approached the lodge gates of the Grange. Beyond the drive and between the thick, sad firs that shielded the house he could see the crimson lights gleaming here and there. He could catch the rumble and scratch in the bushes, and ever and again a dog whined. The big gate was closed as David peeped in, searching for his guide.

"Williams," he whispered; "Williams, where are you?"

But no reply came. The silence was full of strange, rushing noises, the rush of blood in David's head. He called, again and again, but no reply came. Then he heard the rush and fret of many feet, the cry of a pack of hounds, a melancholy cry, with a sombre joy in it. He saw a light gleaming, fitfully, in the belt of firs.

"No help "No help for it," David muttered. "I must chance my luck. I never saw a dog yet that I was afraid of. Well, here goes!"

He scrambled over the wall and dropped on the moist, clammy earth on the other side. He fumbled forward a few steps, and then stopped suddenly, brought up all standing by the weird scene which was being solemnly enacted under his astonished eyes.

CHAPTER XLII.

Prince Rupert's Ring.

While events were moving rapidly outside, time at Longdean Grange seemed to stand still. The dust and the desolation were ever there, the gloom brooded like an evil spirit. And yet it was but the calm before the storm that was coming to banish the hoary old spectres for good.

Still, Enid felt the motony to be as maddening as ever. There were times when she rebelled passionately against the solitude of the place. There were moments to her when it seemed that her mind couldn't stand the strain much longer.

But she had hope, that blessed legacy to the sanguine and the young. And there were times when she would creep out and see Ruth Gates, who found the Rottingdean Road very convenient for cycling just now. And there was always the anticipation of a telephone message from Chris. Originally the telephone had been established so that the household could be run without the intrusion of strangers and tradesmen. It had seemed a great anomaly at the time, but now Enid blessed it every moment of the day. And she was, perhaps, not quite so unhappy as she deemed herself to be. She had her lover back again, now, with his character free from every imputation.

The sun struggled in through the dim, dusty panes; the monotonous voice of Mrs. Henson droned in the drawing room. It was what Williams called one of the unhappy lady's "days." Sometimes she was quiet and reasonable, at other times the dark mood hung heavily upon her. She was pacing up and down the drawing room, wringing her hands and whimpering to herself. Enid had slipped into the grounds for a little fresh air; the house oppressed her terribly to-day. The trim lawns and blazing flower beds were a pleasant contrast to the misery and disorder of the house.

Enid passed on into the shadow of the plantation. A little farther on, nearer the wall, the dogs seemed to be excited about something. William's rusty voice could be heard expostulating with some intruder. By him stood a man who, although fairly well dressed, looked as if he had slept in his garments for days. There was a dazed, puzzled, absent expression on his face.

"You might have been killed," Williams said. "If you hadn't stood still the dogs would have pulled you to pieces. How did you get here?"

"I've lost it!" the stranger muttered. "I've lost it somewhere, and I shall have no rest until I find it."

"Well, go and look in the road," Williams suggested, smoothly. "Nothing ever gets lost here. Just you hop over that wall and try your luck outside."

Enid came forward. Evidently the intruder was no stranger to her. Williams started to speak volubly. But Enid cut him short at once.

"A most extraordinary thing has happened," she said. "It is amazing that this man should come here, of all places. Williams, this is the man Van Sneck."

"What, the chap as was wounded in the hospital, miss?"

"The same. The man is not in full possession of his senses. But if Reginald Henson finds him now, it is likely to go hard with him. He must be taken into the house and looked after until I can communicate with somebody I can trust. Mr. Steel, I think. He must be got back into the hospital. It is the only place where he is safe."

Van Sneck seemed to be looking on with the vacant stare of the mindless. He suffered himself to be led to the house, where he was fed like a child. It was in vain that Enid plied him with all kinds of questions. He had lost something—he could have no peace until he found it. This was the one burden of his cry. Enid crossed to the window in some perplexity. The next moment she had something else to occupy her mind. Reginald Henson was coming up the drive. Just for an instant Enid felt inclined to despair.

"Williams!" she cried. "Mr. Henson is here. On no account must he see our unfortunate friend. He cannot possibly know that Van Sneck is here; the whole thing is an accident. I am going down into the hall. I shall contrive to get Mr. Henson into the drawing room. Without delay you must smuggle Mr. Van Sneck into your apartments, over the stable. You will be perfectly safe if you go down the back staircase. As soon as the drawing room door closes, go."

Williams nodded. He was essentially a man of action rather than words. With all the coolness she could summon up, Enid descended to the hall. She gave a little gesture of surprise and disdain as she caught sight of Henson.

"So you came down to welcome me?" Enid said, coldly.

(To be Continued.)

HIS LIMIT OF LAZINESS.

Man Who Named Two Dogs "Cocoa" —They Were Always Together.

"I never hear laziness discussed," said Frederick Kost, the artist, "but I think of Old Man Crawford, who used to keep an inn down on South Beach, when the place was practically a wilderness, and a lot of us fellows were in the habit of running down there to sketch. He was, without doubt, the fellow most utterly devoid of energy it is possible to imagine. He wouldn't have breathed if he could have helped it.

"One of his sons, who had settled in New York, sent him two daschund pups. I remember how Crawford would sit, sunning himself on his porch the whole day, with one of these dogs, like animated sausages, on each side of him. They were always by him, one to the left, the other to the right of his chair, when they were at rest.

"One day, as I sat talking to him, the dogs were romping in the house. Crawford turned and called: 'Here Cocoa, Cocoa!' and the daschunds came trotting out.

"'What are their names, Crawford?' I asked, thinking I had misunderstood.

"'Cocoa,' replied Crawford.

"'But there are two,' I reminded him.

"'One does for both,' replied the old man. 'They're always together—come and go at the same time. And, anyhow, I'm not going to worry myself into a decline by thinking up two dogs' names.'"—New York Times.

IT'S AN IMPOSSIBILITY.

A Little Girl Who Could Never Grow Up to Be a Young Man Was Crying.

Charls Steckler tells the following joke on himself:

He was taking a short cut through Frankfort street one afternoon, a few days ago, when he came upon a child crying bitterly. He stopped to ask what was the matter.

"Mamma says I can't ever be president," sobbed the child.

"Well, what if you can't?" consoled the lawyer. "There are lots of other ways of making a name for yourself, even if you don't get Roosevelt's job. You can grow up to be a good man, and that's better than being president. Don't you think so?"

"But I can't grow up to be a good man!" wailed the youngster, in a fresh outburst of woe.

"Nonsense!" said Mr. Steckler. "Of course you can!"

"Can't, neither!" bellowed the child.

"Why not, I'd like to know?"

"'Cause I'm a little girl!"—New York World.

Sensitiveness of an Artist.

Artists are sensitive. A Dane, Mr. Vilhelm Hammershoj, exhibited a picture at Copenhagen lately. It was called "Five Portraits," and it attracted much attention. Five men, who seemed to be dismally silent, sat around a table. The room was lighted by two candles. The faces, they say, were remarkably well painted; but a man on the right showed surprising feet, which, in the foreshortening, seemed exaggerated in size, as in a photograph. The boots were evidently jammed full of feet, to quote the old minstrel gag, and the feet furnished material for a song in a burlesque of "Sherlock Holmes" at a local theater. Then a bootmaker caricatured the picture in an advertisement, which bore this legend: "Hammershoj paints—So-an-So sells—a good pair of Boots!" The painter was not pleased by this tribute; he brought an action for damages against the bootmaker; but the matter was settled by the payment of a small fine.—Boston Journal.

Realism in Our Drama.

During the village street scene, the lady heroine and many flashy adventuresses passed each other coldly, their noses tilted in scorn.

The lady heroine turned her head and glared after her wicked rival.

"Sublime!" cried the delighted audience. "She is darting looks of hate."

As a matter of fact, the lady heroine was merely sizing up the fit of the enemy's gown.—Newark News.

A BENEFIT TO FARMERS.

The benefits that will undoubtedly result to farmers from the recent incorporation of the International Harvester Company which took over the business of the five leading harvester manufacturers have probably not been considered by a large portion of the farming community.

The economical necessity of a consolidation of the interests of manufacturers and those of their farmer customers must be apparent to any one who understands the present situation.

The increased and increasing cost of material, manufacturing and selling—the latter in consequence of extreme and bitter competition between manufacturers and their several selling agents—has made the business unprofitable.

The two alternatives left for the manufacturers were either the increasing of the prices of machines or the reduction of the cost of manufacture and sales. The latter could only be accomplished by concentrating the business in one company.

As can readily be seen, the forming of the new company was not a stock jobbing operation but a centering of mutual interests. There is no watered stock; the capitalization is conservative and represented by actual and tangible assets. There is no stock offered to the public, it having all been subscribed and paid for by the manufacturers and their associates.

The management of the International Harvester Company is in the hands of well known, experienced men.

The officers are: President, Cyrus H. McCormick; Chairman Executive Committee, Charles Deering; Chairman Finance Committee, George W. Perkins; Vice-Presidents, Harold F. McCormick, James Deering, Wm. H. Jones and John J. Glessner; Secretary and Treasurer, Richard F. Howe. The members of the Board of Directors are as follows: Cyrus Bentley, William Deering, Charles Deering, James Deering, Eldridge M. Fowler, E. H. Gary, John J. Glessner, Richard F. Howe, Abram M. Hyatt, William H. Jones, Cyrus H. McCormick, Harold F. McCormick, George W. Perkins, Norman B. Ream, Leslie N. Ward, Paul D. Cravath.

The International Harvester Company owns five of the largest harvester plants in existence. The Champion, Deering, McCormick, Milwaukee and Plano—plants that have been producing nearly or quite 90 per cent of the harvesting machines of the world.

It also owns timber and coal lands, blast furnaces and a steel plant; it has a new factory in the process of construction in Canada.

It is believed that the cost of producing grain, grass and corn harvesting machines will be so reduced that the present low prices can be continued, and that consequently the results cannot be otherwise than beneficial to the farmer. To maintain the present prices of these machines means to continue and increase the development of the agriculture of the world, for no one cause has contributed or can contribute more to this development than the cheapness of machines for harvesting grains.

Sparing His Feelings.

MRS. J. E. O'DONNELL

Was Sick Eight Years with Female Trouble and Finally Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—I have never in my life given a testimonial before, but you have done so much for me that I feel called upon to give you this unsolicited acknowledgement of

MRS. JENNIE E. O'DONNELL,
President of Oakland Woman's Riding Club.

the wonderful curative value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. For eight years I had female trouble, falling of the womb and other complications. During that time I was more or less of an invalid and not much good for anything, until one day I found a book in my hall telling of the cures you could perform. I became interested; I bought a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and was helped; I continued its use and in seven months was cured, and since that time I have had perfect health. Thanks, dear Mrs. Pinkham again, for the health I now enjoy."—Mrs. Jennie O'Donnell, 278 East 31st St., Chicago, Ill.—$5000 forfeit if above testimonial is not genuine.

Women suffering from any form of female ills can be cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. That's sure. Mrs. Pinkham advises sick women free. Address, Lynn, Mass.

KIRKE LA SHELLE'S DEFINITION.

He Knows Quite Well What Humor Is, as Shown in an Interview With Clyde Fitch.

The news comes from Paris that Clyde Fitch is recovering from his attack of nervous prostration, and will not, after all, be obliged to spend all of his summer in Sicily. Kirke La Shelle met him in Paris recently, and Fitch told a humorous story. La Shelle never smiled.

"I don't believe you know what humor is," said Fitch.

"Oh, yes, I do," answered La Shelle "Humor consists in the revelation of the perception of the surprising, or the incongruous in cases or under circumstances when the mind perceives a parallel or concurrent possibility of expectedness or congruity."

"Gracious!" said Fitch, "I am going back to Sicily. How times have changed since you began to write and say funny things."—Philadelphia Press.

Too Extravagant.

"No, sir!" roared the stern father, "you may own houses and lands, and automobiles, but you can't marry my daughter."

"Why not?"

"Young man, you've got the Panama hat habit; that's why."—Newark News.

A Faithful Friend.

Lennox, Mo., Sept. 1st.—Mr. W. H. Brown of this place has reason to be thankful that he has at least one friend by whose good advice he has been spared much pain and trouble. He says:

"I have had backache for over twelve months. Sometimes I could hardly get up when I was down, the pain in my back was so great.

"I tried many things, but could not get anything to help me or give me relief till a friend of mine advised me to try Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"After I had used two boxes the pain in my back had all left me, and I am as well as ever I was.

"I am very thankful to Dodd's Kidney Pills for what they have done for me, and I will never forget my friend for having suggested this remedy."

Dead Man's Check Refused.

A few days ago a man presented a check to William H. Rogers, cashier of the Nassau bank, demanding payment.

"But I can't pay that," said the cashier; "that man's dead."

"But," protested the holder of the check, "he was alive when he signed it."

And, in face of all Mr Rogers' efforts at explanation, the man left the bank convinced that he had a grievance.—New York Times.

Undisputed for Half a Century.

It is a remarkable fact, which for half a century has not once been disputed, that St. Jacob's Oil never fails to cure shooting pains in the arms, legs, sides, back or breast, or soreness in any part of the body.

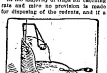
It has for fifty years been guaranteed by the proprietors, St. Jacobs Oil, Ltd., Baltimore, Md., to promptly cure lameness, sciatica, rheumatism, lumbago, stiff and swollen joints, stiff back, and all pains in the hips and loins, strains, bruises, burns, scalds, toothache, chilblains, and all aches and pains.

St. Jacobs Oil costs 25 cts and 50 cts.; sold wherever a druggist is found.

POPULAR SCIENCE

Automatic Trap for Rodents

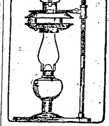
In the majority of traps for catching rats and mice no provision is made for disposing of the rodents, and if a spring trap is used there is the disagreeable task of releasing the dead animal by hand, which naturally is not fancied by any one. Both of the above objections are overcome in the trap shown in the accompanying drawing, the invention of Joseph Chagnot of Torrington, Conn.



The device consists of a water reservoir, two bait holders and a tilting platform. The primary bait holder is located above the inclined runway, and the second holder over the tilting platform. In use, the animal, finding it difficult to get the bait from the primary holder, will move forward and attempt to obtain the second morsel. In so doing he will pass beyond the pivoted point of the tilting platform and his weight will cause it to tilt and will precipitate him into the reservoir, where the death penalty is inflicted. The platform immediately resumes its operative position.

Removes Chill from a Room

In spite of the fact that at this season of the year the major portion of the country is undergoing what seems to the residents like tropical heat, there are many localities where the nights are sufficiently cold to warrant the building of a fire in the grate in rooms which are provided with them. As these grates and fire places are not as common as one might wish for, recourse may be had to the heat generator, shown in the accompanying drawing, which is the idea of George S. Chase of Springfield, Mass. The invention is practically a radiator, which gathers up the rising heat rays from the flame of the lamp and distributes them about the room instead of allowing them to rise vertically to the ceiling. The circulation of this heated air also produces a current which draws the air from the room and brings it in contact with the hot surface of the generator, thus further increasing the generation of warm air. The generator is built up of a series of thin metal plates, with an opening at the bottom for the insertion of the lamp chimney. It is supported by a vertical post and projecting arm, the latter being hinged to permit the heater to be elevated for the removal of the lamp. As the sleeve which carries the supporting arm is adjustable on the post, a lamp of any size can be used, and, as there is no connection between the chimney and the generator, the lamp can be instantly removed if occasion requires.



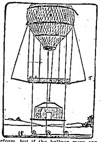
Pressure of Light

The pressure of light impinging on bodies, first predicted by Maxwell, has lately been actually measured. The consequent repulsion between the sun and the earth, for example, is very great and amounts to about 100,000,000,000,000 dynes. The gravitational attraction between the two bodies is, of course, very much greater; it is, in fact, about 40,000,000,000,000, times as great.

Prof. Woodward concludes his address with the remark that it is a curious and a puzzling, though perfectly obvious, fact, that mankind as a whole, lives far less in the thought of the present than in the thought of the past, and that as a race we have more respect for the myths of antiquity than we have for the certainties of exact science. From time immemorial tradition has dominated reason in the masses of men. Each race has lived under the sway of the thought of some preceding age. As a vigorous thinker he regrets the waste of human effort and of human time. Those who are interested in this aspect of the subject will do well to compare this address with one by Dr. Langley on the "Laws of Nature," printed in Science for June 13. His contention is that there are no "laws of nature," no certainties of exact science. The discrepancy in conclusions is not difficult to unravel, but there is no space here available. Readers are advised to see the two addresses in question.

Captive Balloon Observatory

Going up in a balloon is a feat that the majority of people do not care to perform, but if the balloon were captive, with no chance for it to escape, it would make little difference at what height it was anchored; the higher up it was the greater would be the temptation to ascend and view the scenery. The intention of the inventor is to provide a car of sufficient buoyancy to carry cables of great length, with means for drawing the balloon down to anchor it close to the ground when not in use. The gas reservoir is divided into sections, with an equal amount of gas in each, and in case of puncture in one of the sections the remaining pockets would have sufficient buoyancy to support the car until repairs could be made.

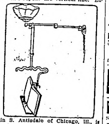


It is already common practice to attach a balloon to a single cable wound on a drum and allow a few persons to ascend at a time, but the amount of power required is much greater than that necessary to raise the elevator in this case. There is a central opening in the observation platform, through which the car rises to discharge and take on passengers, with a single cable to operate the car. Joseph Groth of New York is the inventor.

Adjustable Book Holder

Adjustable Book Holder.

The book holder shown in the picture is capable of attachment to the wall, tree, gas fixture or a piece of furniture, and in all cases the book is held perfectly quiet, and when once properly adjusted under the light there is no variation, and the arms and body of the reader are free to find the most comfortable position possible. There is a shelf of sufficient size to support an ordinary book, with a clamp sliding on the vertical rod to hold the book open at the proper place. The upper part of the fixture consists of a telescoping rod which can be adjusted to any desired length and has a hook between the support and the crimped horizontal portion of the rod below. This crimp permits the adjustment of the book or paper at any desired angle, the sliding clamp holding the reading matter in place even when the support is tilted forward beyond the vertical line. Edwin S. Antisdale of Chicago, Ill., is the inventor.



Electricity in Britain

The foundation stone of the first generating station of the South Wales Electric Power Distribution company was recently laid by Sir Frederick Bramwell. Thus has been inaugurated, says Nature, the second scheme in Great Britain for the supply of electricity in bulk, the first having been started last year at Newcastle-on-Tyne. The area which will be supplied by the South Wales company has an extent of about 1,000 square miles. The district includes collieries, steel works, tin plate and copper works and numerous other factories of different kinds. There will be five stations. The dynamos—three-phase alternators—will be driven by steam, the engines having a total capacity of 15,000-horse power.

Fire engines are carried on trolley cars in Springfield, Mass. The car is but nine and a half inches high and the trucks under one end can be removed and the engine run upon it

MOTHER AND DAUGHTER

Cured by Pe-ru-na of Systemic Catarrh.

An Interesting Letter From Mrs. M. K. Bousch, of Richmond, and Her Little Daughter, Pearl.

MRS M. K. BOUSCH

MISS PEARL BOUSCH

Mrs. M. K. Bousch, Richmond, Va., writes:

"I had catarrh all through my system for two years and could get no relief. I was advised to try Peruna, and I have taken five bottles of it and am well and better now than I have been for years. I can advise any one who has catarrh of any part of the body to take Peruna. My little girl, who is eleven years old had catarrh, but was cured by Peruna. Before I began to take Peruna I was sick all the time, but now I am entirely cured and all praise is due Peruna.—Mrs. M. K. Bousch.

Miss Pearl Bousch writes: "When I was a baby I contracted catarrh, and was doctored by several good physicians, but none did me any good. My mother was taking Peruna at the time and gave some of it to me, and I soon began to improve, and am now well and fat as a little pig. I am twelve years old. The doctors told mother I had the consumption, but it was only catarrh."—Miss Pearl Bousch.

It is no longer a question as to whether Peruna can be relied on to cure all such cases. During the many years in which Peruna has been put to test in all forms and stages of acute and chronic catarrh no one year has put this remedy to greater test than the past year.

Peruna is the acknowledged catarrh remedy of the age. Dr. Hartman, the compounder of Peruna, has written a book on the phases of catarrh peculiar to women, entitled, "Health and Beauty." It will be sent free to any address by The Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, O.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, Ohio.

THE NEWS,

POLITICAL NOTES.

The Democratic and Populist county committees met at St. Hilaire last Saturday. A large number of candidates on the Populist and Democratic tickets were present.

Prof. James Wilson was down to Red Lake Falls last Saturday interviewing the people there regarding his candidacy for county superintendent of schools He received much encouragement in in that city.

Samuel Gibeau, candidate for the Populist nomination for register of deeds, was in the city last week.

J. D. Abbot, the well known Rollis settler, was in the city the city the first of the week. Mr. Abbot is one of Ezra G. Valentines firm friends, and he predicts that Valentine will get a large majority of the votes cast in the Theif Lake country.

Dan Linneham and H. E. Draper, both of Red Lake Falls and both candidates for the Democratic nomination for sheriff, were in the city the first of the week.

Some men have honesty without ability; others have ability without honesty. In Politics the first are useless, the second dangerous. Valentine has both honesty and ability. Vote for him.
—Breckenridge Telegram.

After his defeat for nomination for county attorney in 1880, for re-nomination for state senator in 1886 and for nomination for district judge the same year, for nomination for county attorney in 1888, for election as representative in 1892, for the congressional nomination in 1894, for appointment as U. S. district attorney in 1897, and for election as mayor of Crookston in two campaigns—nine failures, in all—Halvor Steenerson will naturally take philosophically the crushing defeat which is inevitably in store for him at the primaries on the 16th of next month.—Warren Register.

Ezra Valentine has a special claim upon the people of northwestern Minnesota in the voluntary service he has rendered as member and president of the state Drainage Board. When a person is elected to do a certain thing, is able to do it, does it well and is paid a salary for it, then he performs a duty. But when a man is assigned an unsalaried task, and spends his time and money freely in the interest of his fellowmen as Valentine has done in the matter of drainage for this part of the state, then he is a benefactor.—Holstad Reporter.

The St. Paul Dispatch, which usually gets things about right, says:

Republicans in the Ninth district counties, which used to be in the Eddy district, say that Ezra Valentine looks the winner in the big fight in the Ninth.

In sizing up the situation in this district the St. Paul Dispatch concedes Valentine 5,000 votes, Steenerson 4,600, Grindeland 4,000, Comstock 1,800. This is based upon the vote of two years ago. Any way outsiders choose to figure, they invariably put Valentine in the lead.

Hon. Ezra G. Valentine, candidate for the Republican nomination for congressman, on the labor and capital question says:

Labor is the source of all wealth. It is the corner stone of civilization and the foundation of our national life. Organized labor rightly directed, is the greatest and most benificent power in the world.

Capital cannot exist without labor, but labor can exist without capital. In ranking the great forces labor must be placed first and capital second. To accomplish the greatest good there must be an amiable combination of the two.

Fergus Falls Free Press. While in St. Paul last week we talked with several prominent republicans about the congressional situation in the different districts, and it seemed to be the unanimous opinion that Ezra G. Valentine would win out in our district.

Wilkin, Valentine's home county, will give that gentleman a solid vote. Isn't the support of his neighbors about the best recommendation a candidate could have. —Breckenridge Telegram.

Moorhead News: Two of the north country candidates, Hon. Andrew Grindeland and Hon. Halvor Steenerson, have now transferred their activities into the southern end of the district. They have not only "carried the war into the enemies country," but have carried "their" war right along with them. Steenerson accuses Grindeland of fostering church prejudices, and Grindeland's followers accuse Steenerson of not paying much attention to church affairs—to put it mildly. The fight between these candidates has reached the acute stage, and should the unexpected happen, and either of these gentlemen receive the nomination, the bitterness of the present contest does not promise well for success in the general election.

Seriously, to a man up a tree now if we judge from the many, flattering notices being given by the newspapers of the ninth district, as if Hon. Ezra G. Valentine would be an easy winner of the congressional nomination in this district.—Perham Bulletin.

In summing up the political situation in this congressional district, the Pioneer Press says:

Ezra G. Valentine, of Breckenridge, is making a most systematic campaign and he has many adherents who say he will be the winner. He is well known in the southern part of he district as a lawyer and farmer, and he has been a most active advocate of drainage measures. He is expected to carry the southern counties and secure a large vote in the northern end of the district.

A special to the St. Paul Dispatch from Fergus Falls says of the campaign in the Ninth district:

Hon. Ezra G. Valentine made a house to house canvass of the southern portion of the district early in the campaign, and is now working like a beaver in the north. Mr. Valentine's work at the head of the state drainage commission has naturally given him considerable strength in the North, and his personal popularity in Wilkin and Otter Tail counties, together with the tremendous campaign he has made, give his friends good reason to hope for his nomination.

We have just talked to a leading man from Roseau county, in the northern part of the district, and he informs us that Mr. Valentine will receive more votes in his county than all of the other candidates combined.—Fergus Falls Free Press.

After looking over the situation thoroughly as to who will be nominated by the Republicans for congressman from the ninth district, we have come to the conclusion that Ezra G. Valentine is a man of the people and for the people and therefore the people will see that he gets the nomination. The other candidates are trying hard to hold their own but after seeing what they have to buck up against, their fight becomes weaker and weaker and by the time of the primary election Valentine will come out at the top of the heap with a large majority.—Beltrami Graphic.

Iver A. Krohn, Populist candidate for representative in this district was in the city last week. He resides at Shevlin in Beltrami county.

The News today prints the full official county ballots to be used on the 16th day of September at the various voting precincts in this county.

Resolution.

Alderman Staples seconded by Alderman Winton offered the following resolution:

Whereas, different parties owning property fronting Blocks 10 and 27 on Conely's avenue, Knox's addition in Thief River Falls have constructed walks in front of their respective lots, having left lots between such lots without walks, greatly to inconvenience and danger to the public.

Therefore, be it Resolved by the city council of the city of Thief River Falls, Minn., that there be and it is hereby ordered that a walk six feet wide, constructed of 2x6 plank, firmly nailed on three 2x6 stringers placed edgewise on a substantial foundation be at once constructed to connect such unfinished places of walks fronting lots in block 10 and 27 on said Conely avenue in Knox's addition and that the actual cost of construction be and is hereby assessed against their respective lots.

Resolution adopted:

CHAS. A. ROBBECKE.
Acting President of Council.

Approved this 25th day of August, 1902.

F. H. KRATKA,
Mayor.

Attest:
LARS BACKE,

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of ten hundred eight-six and 71-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by William Reed and Huldah Reed, his wife, Mortgagors, to Jerome W. Wheeler, Mortgagee, bearing date the first day of October, 1892, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the third day of October, 1892, at 2 o'clock P. M., in book 59 of Mortgages, on pages 223, and transcribed into the Mortgage records of Red Lake County in Book B on page 391.

Which said Mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Jerome W. Wheeler, Mortgagee, to John Steele the present holder thereof by written assignment dated the 21st day of February, 1899, and recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds for Red Lake County, on the first day of April, 1899, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book F, of Mortgage Assignments on page 448, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

Lots one (1) and two (2) and the north half (½) of the northwest quarter (¼) of section number twenty-one (21) in township number one hundred and fifty-four (154) north of range number forty-three west, according to the United States survey thereof in Red Lake county and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Red Lake County, at the front door of the Court House, in the Village of Red Lake Falls in said County and State on the 29th day of September 1902, at one o'clock P. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of ten hundred eighty-six and 71-100 dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and seventy-five dollars, Attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated August 11th, A. D. 1902.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of three hundred seven dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Andrew Douglas and Louisa F. Douglas, his wife, Mortgagors, to E. D. Childs Company, a corporation, Mortgagee, bearing date the 27th day of October, 1890, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 29th day of October, 1890, at 11:30 o'clock A. M., in Book 80 of Mortgages, on page 250 and duly transcribed into the Mortgage records of Red Lake County in Book O on page 179.

Which said Mortgage together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said E. D. Childs Company, Mortgagee, to the First National Bank of Crookston, by written assignment dated the 8th day of April, 1897, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Red Lake County on the 28th day of July, 1902, at 5:15 o'clock P. M., in Book S of Mortgages on page 337

Which said Mortgage, together with said debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said The First National Bank of Crookston, the Assignee and Holder thereof, to John Steele by written assignment dated the 25th day of February, 1899, and recorded on the 28th day of July, 1902, at 5.15 o'clock P. M., in Book S, of Mortgages page 338; in Red Lake County, Minnesota, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

The east half (E½) of the south west (SW¼) quarter and the west half of the south east quarter (W½ SE¼) of section numbered seventeen (17) in township numbered one hundred fifty-four (154) north, of range numbered forty-three (43) west, in Red Lake County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Red Lake County at the front door of the court house, in the Village of Red Lake Falls, in said County and State, on the 29th day of September, 1902, at one o'clock p. m., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of three hundred seven dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and ten dollars, Attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated August 11th, A. D. 1902.

MINNEAPOLIS DOES WELL.

Turns Out Good Crowd to the Fair Despite Unpromising Weather.

St. Paul, Sept. 7.—Minneapolis had an inning at the fair yesterday. Like St. Paul day, the weather was unpromising at the outset, but when the rift in the clouds came there was a general rush for the cars. During the latter hours of the morning the street railway company called into service every available car to handle the rush. The strangers who were in town to see the fair were evenly divided between the two cities. Although preparations had been made at the gates to handle a big crowd, the unpromising weather in the early morning encouraged the belief that the day would be light and the gatemen were hardly prepared for the crowd that came. In spite of this the people were handled nicely and there was no complaint made. The streets of the fair grounds were packed from noon until late at night. The attendance is estimated at about 40,000.

BALLOON ARTIST HURT.

Lands on the Roof of a House and Rolls to the Ground.

St. Paul, Sept. 7. — Earl Wagner, who has been making the balloon ascensions at the fair since Jacob Hoffman was injured by a fall of 400 feet Wednesday evening, was slightly injured yesterday afternoon. He cut loose from the balloon in good shape, and made a very pretty drop. As he neared the ground he saw that he was going to land on a farm house and feared that he would be injured. He tried to avert the danger by jumping from his parachute while it was still about thirty feet from the ground. He misjudged his jump and landed on one corner of the house and then rolled off to the ground. He was badly scratched about the legs and arms and received a severe bruise on the body. His injuries did not incapacitate him for work and he made the ascension as usual in the evening.

IS A HOBOS' PARADISE.

The Marshal of a South Dakota Town Out Threshing.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Sept. 7. — The town of South Shore can truthfully be said to be the "Hobos' Paradise," and all because the man who holds the position of town marshal is at present working with a threshing crew in the country. As a result of his absence some of the hobo visitors to the town, upon making the discovery that the place is without a peace officer, take advantage of the opportunity to give the citizens a taste of frontier times. The council will be asked to appoint a temporary marshal.

POUNDS DYNAMITE SHELL.

Wisconsin Lad Expected to Live After the Experience.

Prairie du Chien, Wis., Sept. 7. — Eddie Kalina, a lad ten years old, was nearly killed by the explosion of a dynamite cartridge. He had picked up the shell on the bluff east of the city, where the city water works reservoir is being built. Carrying it home he laid it on a stump and struck it with a hammer. The explosion badly lacerated his body about the groin, and nearly tore his left hand from his arm. He will live.

CONTEMPT OF COURT.

Punishment Confronts Men Who Disregarded Federal Judge.

Madison, Wis., Sept. 7. — Anton Staneck and Joseph Tyrdick, both of Yuba, Wis., are directed by order of the United States court to appear Sept. 18 and show cause why they should not be punished for contempt of court for taking possession of two creameries owned by the Elgin Creamery company, now in the hands of a receiver.

HINES BUYS THE BUSINESS.

Chicago Lumber Concern Purchases Wisconsin Properties.

Hayward, Wis., Sept. 7. — The Edward Hines Lumber Company of Chicago has concluded another big deal here in the purchase of the entire plant of the North Wisconsin Lumber company, involving $1,000,000. It will take immediate charge of the sawmill and also of the general merchandise and banking business of the old company.

HE FOUGHT WITH SIBLEY.

Death of Fred Melle, Who Settled in New Ulm as Early as 1856.

New Ulm, Minn., Sept. 7—The death of Fred Melle in this city removes one of the pioneers of the state. He came to New Ulm in 1856 and has lived here ever since. He served with Sibley in his campaign against the Indians and was prominent in all the affairs of the city and county from their organization. He was seventy-eight years old.

Thieves Rob Hotel Employes.

Stillwater, Minn., Sept. 7. — The servants' quarters of the Sawyer house were entered about supper time by a thief, who carried away four gold watches, two finger rings and $8 in cash belonging to employes of the hotel. The police made a search of every employe's room without getting any trace of the stolen property or a clue to the thief.

Express Messenger Falls Dead.

Baldwin, Wis., Sept. 7. — Express Messenger Ross, on Omaha train No. 4, dropped dead of heart failure while his train was at the Hudson depot.

Prisoner Escapes Jail.

Sibley, Iowa, Sept. 7.—Charles Tanner broke jail here and is still at large. Tanner is said to have stolen several bicycles in this vicinity.

The Murderer Weakens.

Sturgis, S. D., Sept. 7. — Ernest Loveswar, the half-breed who is sentenced to be hanged for the killing of George Puck and George Ostrahder on Red Owl, is beginning to break down. The execution is set for Sept. 19.

Thief Robs Woman.

Storm Lake, Iowa, Sept. 7.—Mr. C. H. Billings, local manager of the Northern Telephone company, was robbed of $35. She left her purse in a drawer in the business office of the company.

News of the Northwest

ST. PAUL BREAKS RECORD.

Turns Out a Vast Multitude at the State Fair.

St. Paul, Sept. 4.—St. Paul people put their shoulders to the state fair wheel of progress yesterday, and, following the pace that was set by the opening day, the attendance figures broke out of all bounds. When the returns were all in last night Supt. Cosgrove estimated that fully 40,000 people had passed through the gates. The attendance last year on Tuesday was 29,124. The record was made yesterday in the face of the fact that a heavy fall of rain occurred just at the time the evening patrons of the fair were preparing to start for the grounds. Many of them postponed their visit until later in the week. The managers of the state fair were delighted yesterday at the manner in which the arrangements had been carried out. Every exhibit is in its place and every exhibitor is on the grounds to talk to and interest the callers at his booth. There has been no disorder nor friction at the gates and the police de*partment has found little* to do in keeping things going.

FLASH KILLS A GIRL.

South Dakotans Suffer Greatly From Bolts From Heaven.

Madison, S. D., Sept. 4. — Reports from the southwest of Lake county show that the electrical storm there was more serious than supposed. A daughter of Tony Cook, farmer, was instantly killed by a bolt. A stack of barley owned by Charles Senter was burned, and William Arnold lost a hay stack. Fred Kerstin, Reuben Rounds and Leonard Jones lost hogs and cattle and windmills on farms owned by William Schroepal and Frank Young were shattered. A school house in Madison was struck twice and demolished. The rainfall here in August was 6.26 inches; for May, June and July, inclusive, 6.76. Stacking, threshing and farm work is generally suspended owing to excessive rains of the past week.

CAUGHT AFTER A CHASE.

Alleged Box-Car Thieves Landed in the Winona Jail.

Winona, Minn., Sept. 4.—After a hot chase down the Milwaukee railroad near this city by Sheriff Lins and deputies, Charles G. Raymond of Chicago and John R. Hatch of Utica, N. Y., were landed behind the bars in the county jail. Hatch and Raymond were arrested on the charge of breaking into a box car on the Milwaukee road and stealing a quantity of merchandise. The missing goods were recovered from them. It is thought that the arrests are important ones, and that the band of thieves who have been working the trains will be broken up. When the men discovered the officers in pursuit they concealed themselves in the tall grass, but later showed fight.

INDIAN MURDER TRIAL.

Walking Shield Will Probably Hang for His Crime.

Deadwood, S. D., Sept. 4.—Walking Shield, a Rosebud Indian, is on trial here for murder. Four or five months ago he visited the home of a young Indian maiden for whom he had developed an affection and killed the girl's mother, who had objected to his suit. The old squaw was shot down in her cabin, after which Walking Shield and the girl spent the night in the room with the corpse. In the morning the Indian departed, taking the girl with him. He was run down and captured by the Indian police. So atrocious had been his crime that even the Indians on the reservation threatened to inflict summary punishment, which is extraordinary for Indians.

TEDDY BAGS CHICKENS.

President's Son Has a Good Time in South Dakota.

Huron, S. D., Sept. 4.—Young Theodore Roosevelt, with Marvin Hughitt, Jr., and a party of Chicago & Northwestern railway officers, under the personal supervision of Third Vice President H. R. McCullough of the Northwestern, spent the early part of yesterday shooting prairie chickens in the fields eight miles northwest of Arlington. Their coaches have been sidetracked between Arlington and Hetland since Sunday night. Their success was not so marked yesterday as Monday, when more than 100 birds were bagged by the company, young Roosevelt getting seventeen and young Hughitt thirteen.

GOLD WATCH FOR MR. ROSING.

Father of Democratic Gubernatorial Candidate the Recipient.

Red Wing, Minn., Sept. 4.—Directors of the Minnesota Scandinavian Benefit association made a presentation of a gold watch to A. G. Rosing, their secretary, for his eightieth birthday. Besides the address by O. M. Hall, there were congratulations by Judge N. O. Werner of Minneapolis, Emil Olund of St. Peter, F. I. Johnson, member of the state board of equalization, and Rev. G. Rast, who added to their birthday greetings their congratulations that his youngest son was the nominee for the highest office in the state by one of the great parties. L. A. Rosing, who was here for the birthday, held an informal reception most of the day.

HAIL DOES MUCH DAMAGE

Corn Suffers Injury and Grain in the Shock Damaged by Water.

Huron, S. D., Sept. 4.—Reports of damage by hail Friday evening along the east line of Beadle and west line of Kingsbury counties indicate that the storm was more severe than at first supposed. Much corn is ruined and small grain in shock damaged by water, while hundreds of window glass was smashed. The territory covered was from one to two miles long and about six miles in length.

VAST REVENUE WAS COLLECTED.

Report of Hennepin County Grand Jury Says Depths of Corruption Were Not Sounded.

The April term of the Hennepin county grand jury came into Judge Simpson's court room Monday morning, submitted its final report, and was discharged without date. The report is a document of seven typewritten pages and contains a brief resume of the work accomplished during the jury's session. It states that although indictments were returned against no fewer than thirty public officials, others believed to be equally guilty have escaped, and it recommends that the work of municipal house-cleaning be continued.

The jury which thus finishes its labors has been the most sensational body of the kind ever assembled in Hennepin county. It has laid bare a festering mass of corruption in the city hall and has indicted the chief executive of the city. It has disclosed a state of rottenness in the police department that has made Minneapolis notorious all over the country. The value of its work to the community at large cannot be estimated. It has been the means of effecting widespread reforms in the city administration, and has brought municipal order from chaos and made decency in municipal government possible.

Composed of representative citizens unswayed by political bias, the grand jury which has now adjourned is deserving of the thanks of every self-respecting man and woman in the city for the fearless and tireless manner in which it has conducted its investigations; and for the results achieved.

Judge Simpson praised the jury for its excellent and thorough work.

RAINS DO SOME DAMAGE.

Weather Bureau Issues Bulletin of Climatic and Crop Conditions.

The Minnesota section of the weather bureau has issued its weekly bulletin of climate and crop conditions, covering the past week. The report follows:

"There was fine weather in the northern half of the state till the 28th, and in the southern part from the 26th till the evening of the 29th. The showers beginning on the evening of the 29th were general in all parts of the state, and they continued at intervals to the end of the week. These showers were locally very heavy; they were generally thunderstorms, with considerable injury to buildings, stacks, etc., by lightning. In western Steele county, on the evening of the 30th, there was a small but terrific tornado, which hurled part of a rapidly moving passenger train from the track to one side of the roadbed, destroying the cars, killing several people in the wrecked cars, and injuring a large number. Harvest is all finished, except that of late flax, which is being cut. Nearly all the stacking that is to be done was finished before the rains began; threshing from the shock was also well advanced at the same time. Grain still standing in shock is damp, and in many fields it is sprouting. Corn continues green, and opinions as to the time required for its maturity vary from ten days to a month, but it is probable that the general crop will be safe from the frost by Sept. 15. The cut flax in southern counties is too damp to handle. The potato rot seems to be spreading in the ungathered crop. Timothy seed is said to be good in southeastern counties."

WISHED TO BE ON SAFE SIDE.

County Health Officer Refuses to Raise Quarantine.

The state board of health has found a chairman of a town board of health who is too strict with regard to smallpox regulations. Several days ago a complaint was received by the state board from a physician at Foley, Benton county, stating that the local board of health had refused to act on smallpox quarantine.

Chief Clerk Oscar Peterson of the state board was sent to investigate. He found that the trouble was in Glendorado township, Benton county, where the chairman of the board of health refused to remove the quarantine from a man who had been quarantined for six weeks.

The regular quarantine period for smallpox is four weeks, and there is no danger after that time. There has been considerable smallpox in Glendorado township, however, and the chairman of the local board wished to be on the safe side. When the physician who cared for the smallpox case notified him that the man had recovered and the quarantine should be removed permission was refused.

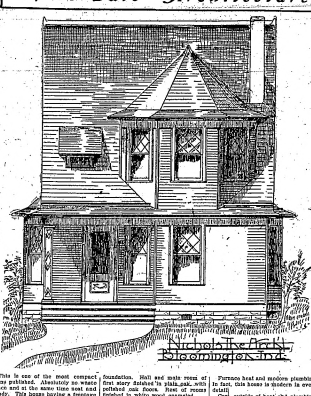
Another member of the local board called on the chairman and asked him to remove the quarantine, but he still refused, and declared he would keep the man under quarantine for six months if he wanted to.

Mr. Peterson was unable to see the chairman, but left instructions that four weeks is the quarantine period for smallpox, and that the patients should be released after that time had elapsed.

Will Try Again.

The state pardon board will, at its next meeting, again consider an application of the Younger boys for a full pardon, which will permit them to return to Missouri. W. W. Ramsey, a Missouri lawyer, is in St. Paul preparing the application. The board denied a similar application last spring, but on the grounds that the parole had been of too short duration at that time to warrant a full pardon. Both Cole and James Younger are anxious to return to their old home to spend the remaining years of their lives.

Up-to-Date Architecture



This is one of the most compact plans published. Absolutely no waste space and at the same time neat and handy. This house having a frontage of 23 feet may be built on a city lot.

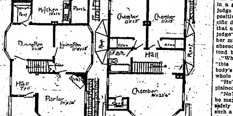
Height of first story, nine feet; second, eight feet six inches. Solid stone foundation. Hall and main room of first story finished in plain oak with polished oak floors. Rest of rooms finished in white wood enameled.

The large rooms and attached closets make it much admired by the ladies.

Furnace heat and modern plumbing. In fact, this house is modern in every detail.

Cost, outside of heat and plumbing, $1,500.

John L. Nichols of Bloomington, Ind., is the architect.



Plan of house to be built at cost of $1,500.

WHERE HE WAS LACKING.

Railroad Man Makes Professional Criticism of Minister.

Ministers, as a rule, are not at all averse to telling a good story, even at their own expense. A Baptist minister was so much amused at a witty criticism of his own preaching as he would have been at a similar comment on another man's sermon.

One Sunday morning a well known railway magnate came in and took a seat in a pew. It was the first time that he had been seen at the chapel, and his presence created some little stir. The minister preached his sermon, and then, perhaps to make the most of his opportunity, he traveled over the same ground again in language calculated to be more impressive. Thus the discourse was spun out to unusual length.

When the service ended, one of the deacons waited for the great man and expressed the hope that he had enjoyed the sermon.

"Yes, it was all right," said the visitor. "There's only one drawback with your minister's preaching."

"What is that?"

"He doesn't appear to have very good terminal facilities."

Personal Acquaintance Necessary.

Governor Stone tells of an eccentric resident of his county whose wife died after a long illness. They had not been a happy pair, perhaps; but there was some surprise when the widower, replying to the comment of a relative that "Poor Jane's gone at last! Well, she's better off!" roared:

"Yes—and so am I!"

He went to a neighboring village to engage a favorite preacher to deliver the funeral sermon, and was told that his selection was no longer there, but had been replaced by a younger and equally efficient clergyman.

"No!" he roared. "I'll have Johnson or none! He knew her, and knows just what to say! If I can't get him, I'll do the preaching myself!"

When Jane's relatives heard this, they bestirred themselves and saved the day by bringing the Reverend Johnson on from a distant town.

Both Were Handicapped.

On one occasion Bishop Potter was a guest at the Storm King club of New York. After a comfortable dinner he sent a telegram to one of the officials of the New York Central railroad asking him to stop the night express at Storm King station, on the opposite side of the river.

He drove down the mountain and hired a boatman to row him across. Arriving in good time, he and the boatman waited in the rowboat until the approaching train warned them to seek the station, only to see the train arrive, rush by, and disappear into the darkness.

The bishop was irritated.

"Well," he said, "I am a bishop of the Episcopal church and I suppose my calling will not allow me to say anything."

"Well," replied the boatman, "I am a Methodist and my principles will not let me say anything."

Mosquito's Hum Located.

The members of the Royal Society of Edinburg, reports the Detroit News-Tribune, were interested, at a recent meeting, in the announcement by A. E. Shipley and Edwin Wilson of the discovery of an apparatus, heretofore overlooked or neglected, at the base of the mosquito's wings, whereby the characteristic humming of that insect may be produced. The species examined was the anopheles maculipennis, and the apparatus consists of a slightly movable bar provided with a series of well-marked teeth which, as the wings are raised and lowered, rasp across a series of ridges. The structure of the apparatus is described as very complex, but the music produced, as everybody knows, is extremely effective.

BEGGAR'S NEAT COMPLIMENT.

Certainly Worth the Small Contribution Taken Up.

Speaking of beggars the other day, Judge Lee of Trenton told a story which is clever enough to bear repetition. On the night when the late Gen. Sewell was chosen by the Republican caucus as candidate for the senate Judge Lee and two other political friends were standing on a street corner, after the convention, discussing the nomination. While they talked a ragged and rusty specimen of humanity approached, and, with a courteous sweep of his tattered hat and a bow that would have done credit to a count, addressed Judge Lee.

"Sir," said he, "I trust you will pardon me for intruding, but I am in most straightened circumstances, and I would like to solicit your assistance in my distress. I have a small amount of money, sir, but not sufficient for my purpose. I wish to get to Newark to see my daughter, whom I have not been with for many years. You are a father, perhaps, and you can doubtless realize the heart hunger of a man in my position. Might I ask you in some way to assist me?"

Judge Lee was struck by the man's Chesterfieldian bearing and manner, and his hand sought his pocket. Turning to his two companions, he asked if they would care to assist the man, and they both contributed to the little fund. As the tramp bowed his thanks and voiced his gratitude he turned to Judge Lee again.

"Sir," said he, "are you the gentleman who was nominated to-night as a candidate for the United States senate?"

"No," answered the judge.

"Great heavens," replied the tramp, "what a mistake the convention did make." Then he ambled along.

SAFE IN FIXING DATE.

Sister Took No Chances in Predicting Brother's Funeral.

Judge Pennypacker, in a public address, once predicted a certain popular movement as sure to occur within a given time. A friend asked the judge if it were not rash to make a positive statement regarding a specific date for any occurrence, arguing that nothing is certain. In reply, the judge told of a Celtic cook who asked her mistress one Monday for leave of absence the following Sunday to attend her brother's funeral.

"Why," exclaimed the mistress, "this is only Monday! Surely, nobody's going to keep a dead body a whole week!"

"He's not dead yet, mum," explained the cook.

"No? Well, he may die to-day or he may live a month. No doctor can safely say that a person will die at such a time that a day may be set for the funeral."

"The doctor's nothing to do wid it mum," was the further explanation. "Oi'm sure Sunday'll be all roight, f'r he's sintinced to be hung Friday."

KNEW SOMETHING WAS WRONG.

Colored Man Missed Usual Greeting from Admiral Evans.

When Admirals Evans and Schley were both assigned to duty on the Lighthouse Board, which convenes in rooms at the Treasury Department in Washington, the Philadelphia Post relates, the colored messenger at the door one morning stopped Admiral Schley.

"I wish," said the darky, "you would speak a kind word to Com'dore Evans for me. He's done got it in for me."

"You must be mistaken, George," Schley replied. "I happen to know that Commodore Evans, like the rest of us, thinks highly of your distinguished services."

"Oh, I'se sure," persisted the colored man, "that Com'dore Evans don't like me no more."

"What makes you think so?" demanded Schley.

"Well," explained the messenger "usually when Com'dore Evans arrives in the mornin' he says, 'Hello, George you blankety-blank-blank fool! How are you?' but dis mornin' he done say merely, 'Hello, George!' The com'dore must surely taken a pow'ful dislike to me."

CURING BEARS OF THEFT.

Use of Heavy Bull Whip Found to Be Effective.

Gen. Corbin, who has just returned to Washington from a trip to Yellowstone Park, tells how some bears in the park raided the Fountain House. "I investigated myself, and found that the bears had broken into the kitchen of the hotel and simply ruined all the stores, leaving the hotel and its guests without food enough for a meal. It was sidesplitting to listen to the Chinese cook attempt to describe the visit of the bears. He became excited, spluttered, grinned and squeaked, and went through all the supposed maneuvers of the beasts in his endeavor to explain the damage that had been done. It was really no laughing matter, for the proprietor of the hotel and Col. Pitcher sent men to punish the intruders." "Would they kill the bears?" Gen. Corbin was asked. "Oh, no; they would only whip them. They would take a big bull whip and lash the bears soundly. Experience has taught, so the park people say, that a good sound thrashing from a bull-whip will last a bear, either brown or grizzly, for the remainder of the season."

Millionaires Are Quite Human.

Well, it may seem odd, but some of the Newport cottages were conceived in much the same way as your own dream house, says Ainslee's. I haven't a doubt that Cornelius Vanderbilt and his wife had the jolliest evenings possible when they talked over the new Breakers that was to rise from the ashes of the old. And don't you suppose that while Foxhall Keene and his bride were in Europe they made delightful little guesses as to progress on the splendid place under construction on Long Island, and cabled over all sorts of absurd suggestions? Why, of course they did. At the present moment, too, the young Payne Whitneys, yachting somewhere around Norway, are chattering away to each other about the arrangement of rooms in that million-dollar home that Colonel Oliver Payne finally decided to give them in place of several pounds of candy as a wedding gift. Mansions or marshmallows, it's all one to an American uncle.

VILLANELLE.

She that was myself went by,
Long ago and long ago,
Light of foot and gay of eye.

Oh, the path was green and high,
Roses nodded row on row—
She that was myself went by.

Swift she went and happily,
Like a cloud the spring winds blew—
Light of foot and gay of eye.

Old with many griefs I sigh,
Youth is winged. Time is slow—
She that was myself went by.

Vain the summons, vain the cry—
She will never return, I trow,
Light of foot and gay of eye.

Here alone sit Age and I,
Since that day, when, watching so
She that was myself went by.
Light of foot and gay of eye.
—Theodosia Garrison in Life.

Poet and the Atmosphere.

Once upon a time a poet composed himself to write some stirring verses on the building of the great tunnel, but struggled in vain to get an inspiration worthy of his subject.

"I cannot do it now," he said. "I must go where the men, like great moles, are burrowing, and imbibe the influence of the environment. I need the atmosphere. I must be moved by it and drink it in for inspiration."

He went and the moment he reached a point of vantage there was a tremendous explosion, which hurled him into the air and out of sight. The poem was never written.

Moral.—It is possible to have too much atmosphere.—New York Herald.

None That Old.

"Old man Welthie died yesterday," announced the first man, "and in his will he provides that every unmarried woman in town who is 35 years old shall receive $100,000."

"No takers," said the racy gent, who claimed to know something about women.

True Courage.

Phyllis—Yes, he was paying attention to her quite a long time.

Blanche—Perhaps he hadn't the courage to propose.

Phyllis—Oh, I don't know. Perhaps he had the courage not to propose.

KANSAS BOOM TOWNS NOW FARMING LAND.

In almost every county in the state there are one or more lost towns. In the early days towns which were expected to become great cities were projected, and in some instances became thriving communities. Now they are nothing but cornfields or prairie land. A county seat fight may have wiped them out of existence. A railroad may have come through and located a new town a few miles away, and the first town have been moved bodily to the railroad.

In the western counties towns were projected during the boom days which were heavily bonded. Waterworks plants were built and other public improvements were made. All that is left of some such towns now are water pipes buried in the ground with the hydrants sticking up here and there on the prairie.

A short distance from Fort Riley stand the ruins of the first capitol building of Kansas. Around it in 1854 was built the city of Pawnee. Nothing marks the site now except the old ruins of the capitol building.

When Preston B. Plumb first landed in Kansas, a young man, he helped to lay out a town a short distance east of where Salina now stands. A smallpox epidemic swept through the town and drove away nearly all the settlers who did not die. The next spring Plumb went to Emporia and settled, and the very site of the town on the Saline is almost forgotten.

There have been dozens of such lost towns in Kansas. Some of them have a history and some have not. In order to preserve the records as far as possible George W. Martin, secretary of the State Historical Society, has addressed a letter to all registers of deeds in the state and many old-time settlers, asking for data and all possible information concerning these old towns. In his letter he says:

"The Kansas State Historical Society desires to make a record of the lost towns of Kansas. Will you please consult with friends who were pioneers and make a list of the towns once existing in your county which are not now known—not on the map—answering on this sheet of paper? In the material development of Kansas there were many who sacrificed means and ambitions—who did many interesting things in which there was great enjoyment—that this state might be molded in their way. Please help put them on record. A few years more and it will be too late."

In connection with the letter Secretary Martin is sending out a blank on which he wishes detailed information.

ARMY OFFICER SAVED SHAFT FROM FALLING.

If there is a man in the world who might restore the placidity of Venice, which has been so disturbed by the fall of the Campanile and the precarious condition of the other famous types of architecture, he is the new American major general who is shortly to relieve Chaffee of the Philippine command. For it was George W. Davis who saved the Washington monument from destruction, and by the application of his ingenuity solved fundamental problems in his unique, off-hand manner that had baffled the highest engineering skill of modern times.

After the great shaft to the father of his country had risen slowly to the height of 197 feet and rested there like a rough factory chimney, an unfinished eyesore for twenty years, Congress determined to complete it and gave the job to the army. Built on the edge of the Potomac marsh, as unstable as the soil of the queen of the Adriatic, the shaft had already leaned five feet out of plumb and nobody could be found to set it straight and insure its permanent stability until Davis, lately a quartermaster, then an infantry captain, volunteered to lift the hundreds of tons of masonry back to the perpendicular and build under it a foundation that would permit the lifting of its top to the highest point ever attained by a monument erected by man.

To hold the soft earth in place he built a huge barrel 100 feet in diameter around the base and drove it deep into the earth below the tidal level. He bound together the inclosed mass with piles and braces, weighting it all down with stones and concrete, until he had secured a stability that would endure forever. Then he wedged up the monument and put an everlasting foundation under it and finally turned the work over to the engineers under Col. Casey, who eventually set the capstone 555 feet above the earth. Up to this day the great structure has not moved a hair's breadth and frequent inspection demonstrates how wonderfully Davis planned. But as he cannot be spared from Manila to save Venice perhaps it would be as well for the Venetians to come to Washington and study his triumph.

Every youth will become a yeoman in some cause.

PLAINSMAN'S STORY OF A RATTLESNAKE CHORUS.

"Yes, sir," said the old plainsman, as he stood before a den of rattlers at the zoo, "I don't allow there's a more interestin' rep-tile a-goin' than this here same breed. There is those as places the intellect of the rattlesnake on a low order an' I don't know as they have as good a workin' brain as a Gila monster or a tarantular, but I do know this: Their appreciation of the art of music is profound an' stirrin'. They takes to it like one of these here Wagner fellows does to a Theodore Thomas concert. An' they're smart to learn, lemme tell you.

"Up to Routt county, Colorado, where I come from, there is most rattlesnakes an' sagebrush an' a few people huntin'. I remember a party of hunters passin' that-a-way last fall. In the evenin's they set about the camp singin' an' there was some mandolins along. Three or four times the party was scairt out by snakes that crept into camp to hear the music, though they should a-known better'n to be, for there's no harm in a rattler when there's music goin'.

"But that ain't the curious part of the tale which I'm unfoldin'. I was along that place some time after the campers broke up and was attracted by a low musical sound from behind the bowlder. Knowin' somethin' of tunes, I was s'prised to catch the chorus of one of the coon songs that had been popular with the campers. It was the one they call 'Ain't That a Shame?' Ponderin' over it, I crept up on top of the bowlder and looked over at some flat rocks on the other side. It was a sight never to forgit. A chorus of ten rattlers had their tails in the air an' was poundin' out the song for all they was worth! I lay there fascinated and, by ginger, before they got through they done 'The Holy City' an' 'Go 'Way Back and Sit Down' as well's I ever heard 'em done. Kill 'em? 'Twould been a crime to break up a musical family like that."

We all have a sacred niche in our hearts free from the contact of the world—for our sweetest, fondest remembrance.

ONLY THE NINTH WONDER.

John W. Mackay Modestly Gave Honor to Another.

Of the late John W. Mackay's characteristics none was more continually conspicuous than the unaffected modesty of the man. Anything approaching flattery was an affliction. One evening, seated with a group of men of affairs and good friends, something was disclosed of one of his current accomplishments, some extraordinary progress made in telegraph and cable enterprise, the consequence of which challenged Col. Tom Ochiltree (the genuineness of whose admiration was never questionable) into the enthusiastic ejaculation:

"By the Aboriginal! John, you are the eighth wonder of the world."

"Oh, no, not so bad as that," answered Mackay, showing amusement; "only the ninth, only the ninth. The eighth wonder is bigger than any other thing this continent will ever see."

"And what is that?" demanded the bonfire-complexioned Texan. "What the devil is the eighth wonder, then?"

"The man with the ball-bearing jaw," quoth Mackay.

"Durned if I see the point," vowed Col. Ochiltree. At least that is what he said he said, for at the moment the Ochiltree voice had been drowned in a merry shout that filled the big, broad corridor.

I don't believe much in luck, yit I don't mind takin' whatever luck cums my way—if it's good.

TO TEST DRINKING WATER.

Simple Measures Which Will Prevent Sickness.

The supply of drinking water for the family should be tested at least once a year. Water that at one time is pure and wholesome may become too impure for use, yet it may be without color, and have no odor or taste to show its dangerous qualities.

A simple test of drinking water is the Meisch sewage test. Fill a clean pint bottle three-quarters full of the water to be tested, and dissolve it in half a teaspoonful of granulated sugar. Cork it and set it in a warm place for two days. If during this time it becomes cloudy or milky it is unfit for domestic use. If it remains perfectly clear it is probably safe. Be careful that the bottle is absolutely as clean as you can make it and the sugar pure.

The second test is also a simple one. Obtain from a trustworthy druggist five cents' worth of saturated solution of permanganate of potassium. Add about five drops of this to a pint bottle of water. This will turn the water a beautiful rose purple. If there is any considerable amount of organic matter the color will give place in the course of a few hours to a more or less dirty reddish-brown. If the color of the water in the bottle remains for twelve hours unchanged from the rose purple it assumed when the permanganate of potassium was first added, it may be considered free from organic contamination.—Health Magazine.

FROST KILLS CORN.

The Dakotas Receive a Visit From Jack Frost.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Sept. 6.—An exceedingly heavy frost has spoiled all the corn in this section. It is safe to say there will be none husked in this county this fall. This is very early for such a heavy frost, as the usual time is about the 21st. Ice formed on pails, pools, and to some extent on the river.

Madison, S. D.—A heavy frost here. Corn and late flax probably killed. These crops were unusually backward this year on account of the cool summer.

Grand Forks, N. D.—The temperature throughout the northern portion of the state dropped below the frost line Wednesday night. Killing frost is reported from some localities farther west, but here the frost was not more than heavy enough to curl the edges of leaves of tender vegetables, and the damage is practically nothing. West and north there is a great deal of grain to cut, and considerable that is quite green. If the frost was as heavy as reported late grain will be ruined.

PASSENGER TRAIN WRECKED.

Eight Cars Derailed and Overturned—Engineer Is Killed.

Butte, Mont., Sept. 6.—The Northern Pacific west-bound passenger train was wrecked at Scudder's Spur, 120 miles west of Missoula. Eigh cars were derailed and overturned in the accident, but so far as can be learned Engineer C. S. Owen was the only man killed. Many of the passengers were badly cut and bruised, but it is not believed any were fatally hurt. Conductor Straub, who was in charge of the train, was severely injured. Physicians have been dispatched from Missoula and Spokane. The cause given for the accident is that the rails had spread. The train was traveling at a high rate of speed at the time and the track was torn completely up for several hundred feet.

DRINKS A KEG OF BEER.

South Dakota Farmer's Excuse for Shooting at People.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Sept. 6.—Carl F. Papenski, a farmer living near Webster, has been arrested and bound over to the next term of the state circuit court in Day county to answer to the charge of assault with a deadly weapon. At his preliminary examination the defendant testified that a Webster attorney gave him a keg of beer, which was intended for himself and other farmers in his vicinity. He stated, however, that he forgot to call in the neighbors, and drank all the beer himself, and while intoxicated did the shooting for which he must now stand trial.

TEDDY HAS SHOT NO ONE.

Report That President's Son Accidentally Wounded a Man Denied.

Huron, S. D., Sept. 6.—Telegrams from the East asking confirmation of a report that Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., accidentally shot a Chicago & Northwestern railway official while out hunting were received here yesterday afternoon, but diligent inquiry fails to trace the rumor to any reliable source. Nothing is known of the matter at the railway offices here, and telephone communication with towns near where the Roosevelt party is shooting prairie chickens say there is no truth in the story.

FIVE YEARS FOR SIXTY CENTS.

Fargo Hold-Up Artist "Hollers" After Pleading Guilty.

Fargo, N. D., Sept. 6.—Ed Miller, one of the men arrested on a holdup charge at Casselton last week, pleaded guilty before Judge Pollock here, and was given five years at hard labor. Miller thought he would get a light sentence by pleading guilty, and created a big row when taken back to the jail after his sentence. He advised his accomplices to take their chances before a jury. Miller secured 60 cents from his victim. The court thinks a few stiff sentences will put an end to the work of the highwaymen in this district.

FROST IN IOWA.

Corn Injured and Garden Truck Destroyed.

Sioux City, Sept. 6.—Ice formed in the low lands about here Wednesday night, and the frost was severe. Corn was hurt in many places, the foliage wilting when the sun came up. This spoils it for fodder to a large extent. The softer corn was hurt, and, as three weeks more were necessary to mature the crops, there was much to feel the chill. Reports from various points in Iowa and South Dakota tell of frost damage. Garden truck not protected was practically killed, as were most vines.

SUN DANCE FIRE CONTROLLED.

Terry, S. D., Sept. 6.—The fire in the Sun Dance shaft is under control and the Golden Reward company expects to extinguish it entirely within the next few hours so that work may be resumed in the mine. The Fannie shaft of the Golden Reward and the Mogul and Lucile shafts of the Horse Shoe company, all of which are connected with the Sun Dance for ventilation, have been started up, the smoke from the burning mine having been shut off.

BLAME THE GREEDY TRUSTS.

Man and Wife at Des Moines Commit Suicide in Despondency.

Des Moines, Sept. 6.—Because they could not get work James B. Taylor and his wife, Ann Taylor, wrote a letter to the public, blaming the greedy corporations and trusts for their failure. Then they turned on the gas, and at noon yesterday the husband was found dead and the wife dying in their room at a boarding house.

WILL KEEP FLAGS.

Fourth Minnesota Veterans Refuse to Return Standards Captured From Mississippians.

Veterans of the old Fourth Minnesota regiment which fought with conspicuous gallantry in the Civil war, have decided to retain the two battle flags of the Thirty-fifth and Thirty-ninth Mississippi regiments, captured at the battle of Altoona Pass, Ga., Oct. 6, 1864. The survivors of these two Southern regiments had made a formal request for the return of the flags, but it was refused by a vote of 26 to 20, the matter being taken to a vote four times and always with the same result.

A resolution was adopted asking the state to appropriate $35,000 for the erection of a Minnesota monument at Vicksburg. The request of the Grant Monument association to have the flag of the Fourth placed in Grant's tomb temporarily was refused. All three flags are now on exhibition at the state capitol.

The Minnesota Veterans' association elected the following officers: President, James Hunter, Faribault; secretary, A. P. Connolly, Chicago; corresponding secretary and treasurer, M. R. Prendergast, St. Paul.

Veterans of the Tenth Minnesota formally indorsed Commander-in-Chief Torrance's suggestion that the Grand Army should contribute to the support of Southern homes for the care of old Confederates. B. F. Sanborn was elected president; F. W. Knapp, vice president, and M. R. Prendergast, secretary and treasurer.

The Ninth regiment elected W. E. Williams, Minneapolis, president, and W. B. Dean, St. Paul, secretary and treasurer. A banquet was held at the Metropolitan hotel, St. Paul, at which Gov. Van Sant delivered an address.

The Fifth regiment listened to an address from Archbishop Ireland and elected H. B. Dyke president; Charles Stauff, vice president, and Herman Muehlenberg, secretary and treasurer.

The Sixth regiment selected Col. William Crooks of Portland, Or., president; H. B. Wilson of Red Wing, Robert Hutchinson of Faribault and O. C. Merriman of Minneapolis, vice presidents, and J. P. Lightner, St. Paul, secretary and treasurer.

The First Minnesota, with only fifteen veterans present, named Col. William Pfaender president and H. C. Shepard secretary and treasurer.

STATE CLAIMS BOOKS.

It Is Held That Publishers' Gifts to Normal School Presidents Belong to the Institutions.

The state board of control has decided not to drop the matter of the books received by the presidents of the state normal schools in their capacity as members of the state library board. The normal board washed its hands of the matter by deciding not to have anything to do with it. The board of control decides, however, that if the normal board will not compel the restoration of the books to the state, it will take the matter up for adjudication, if no other settlement can be arrived at.

The question came up through the offer of Former President Kleeberger of St. Cloud to sell to the normal board a lot of books he had received while a member of the library committee, from different publishing houses. Both the president and secretary of the normal board approved the offer, but when it came to the board of control an investigation was begun.

The board concluded that the books were not given to the presidents, but belonged to the schools. It secured statements from the publishers that books were intended for the state and not for the presidents, and submitted the matter to the attorney general. Attorney General Douglas gave an opinion that the books are the property of the state. The board then referred the matter to the state normal board, with the suggestion that it secure the return of this property. The normal board refused to take the matter up, but the board of control will not abandon the contest.

RECORDS AGAIN BROKEN.

State Fair Attendance Beats Even the Illinois Fair.

St. Paul, Sept. 6.—Accustomed as they are to record smashing, the state fair management was hardly prepared for the results of yesterday. The attendance each day has exceeded the corresponding day last year, but yesterday a new mark was set, not only for the Minnesota fair, but for all such expositions. The unofficial count last night, based on estimates made at each gate from the showing of the turnstiles, indicated that 58,000 people had passed within the gates. This is a bigger day even than the Illinois fair has ever had. The high record until this year was 43,000.

Treasurer Wilcox had in his strong box last night enough money to pay all the expenses of the fair and a comfortable margin beside, so that the receipts for to-day and to-morrow will be profit, which will form a surplus that will be used during the fall and next spring in making improvements in the grounds.

President Cosgrove felt assured last night that the fair would yield at least $75,000 over all expenses. This is a showing that has never before been made by any state fair in the country.

GAIN OF MILLIONS.

Minneapolis Wheat Receipts for the Crop Year Show Gain.

For the crop year ending Sept. 12 Minneapolis received 84,381,040 bushels of wheat. This is a gain of 2,410,440 bushels over the previous year, and had it not been for the unseasonable weather that has prevailed for weeks and the extremely light movement of wheat to market in August, the gain would have been much greater. Under the circumstances the showing is gratifying.

TRIBUTE TO M'KINLEY.

President Roosevelt Remembers the Buffalo Tragedy.

Lexington, Ky., Sept. 9.—President Roosevelt and party Saturday passed through the States of West Virginia, Ohio, Kentucky and Tennessee. In the union depot at Columbus, Ohio, President Roosevelt responded to the calls of the crowd as follows:

"I want to thank you for coming here. It is just a year ago that Ohio's great president was shot, and it is an anniversary that is fitted to make all of us think very solemnly, both of what the country lost in his death and of what the country owed to his life. President McKinley had become the president of the entire country, so that Ohio could claim him no more than all the rest of us could claim him; and when he died, his character and his policies had so impressed themselves upon the nation as a whole that in the broadest and fullest sense he had become the president of no part of the country, but of the people throughout the length and breadth of our Union. It is a good thing for us now, a year after he was shot, to think of what he did and to try to keep ourselves up to his standard."

ROOSEVELT IN THE SOUTH.

Is Right Royally Entertained by Citizens of Chattanooga.

Chattanooga, Tenn., Sept. 9.—President Roosevelt was the guest yesterday of the citizens of Chattanooga, and right royally they entertained him. He came to Chattanooga primarily to attend the national convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and to-day he will be the guest of the railway men, but yesterday Chattanooga, as a whole, entertained him. From early morning until late in the evening he was driven from one historic place to another and the details of the battles that have made the city famous were explained to him by men who were participants in the struggle. The battlefields of Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Orchard Knob and Lookout Mountain were driven over.

BUFFALO TRAGEDY RECALLED.

Sept. 6 the Day on Which McKinley Was Shot.

Canton, Ohio, Sept. 9.—Mrs. McKinley Saturday morning reminded her friends that that was the anniversary of the shooting of her husband at Buffalo. Accompanied by her guest, Miss Wilson, daughter of the secretary of agriculture, and attendants, Mrs. McKinley went to Westlawn cemetery at 10 o'clock and placed flowers upon the coffin of her illustrious husband. Mrs. McKinley's health has improved. She is now as well as at any time in the last ten years.

REBELS VICTORIOUS.

Colombian Government Forces Defeated at Agua Dulce.

Panama, Sept. 9.—The government general, Morales Berti, who has been besieged by the insurgent forces under Gen. Herrera at Agua Dulce, has probably been defeated. The government gunboats returned here last night from an exploring expedition. Officers of the expedition report having landed at Yeguia, where the insurgent garrison was defeated after a slight skirmish. A few insurgent prisoners were captured, and it is from these men that the news of the government's defeat at Agua Dulce has been obtained. In government circles the hope is still entertained that Gen. Berti has forced his way out of the besieged town, but there is nothing to confirm this suggestion.

REMAINS OF THE FAIRS

Arrive in New York on the Steamship St. Louis.

New York, Sept. 9.—In a specially constructed mortuary chapel on the upper deck of the steamship St. Louis, which reached her dock yesterday, were the bodies of Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Fair, victims of an automobile accident in France. The caskets were consigned by Henry De Boorniol to Hermann Oelrichs. They were removed to the Grand Central depot and placed on the palace car Ben Wyzis, which was attached to the Chicago special that left at 6 o'clock last night.

CRAZED BY BIBLE READING.

Aged Preacher Kills His Wife and Is a Fugitive.

Kenova, W. Va., Sept. 9.—Rev. Morris Wilson, aged eighty, who for fifty years has been a prominent Baptist minister in this state, killed his wife at Genoa, by cutting her throat with a razor. Soon after the tragedy he escaped to Woodland and is supposed to be in hiding in the rocky cliffs near there. It is believed he became crazed from constant reading of the Bible. He has been married three times and was the father of nine children, several of whom are leading citizens of Wayne county.

MGR. KAIN AFFLICTED.

Antwerp, Sept. 9.—Elihu Root, the American secretary of war, sailed for New York on the steamer Kroonland. The Kroonland, which carries 2,000 passengers, had to refuse 500 others. Homeward-bound traffic is heavy.

Knox Is in Paris.

Paris, Sept. 9.—P. C. Knox, attorney general of the United States, arrived here yesterday. Attorney General Knox went abroad for the purpose of obtaining a clear title to the property bought from the Panama Canal Co.

GUNBOAT IS SUNK

GERMAN GOVERNMENT GETS SATISFACTION FROM HAITIEN REBELS.

SENT TO BOTTOM BY PANTHER

SURRENDER OF GUNBOAT IS DEMANDED BY GERMAN COMMANDER.

VESSEL IS FIRED BY HER CREW

PANTHER THEN COMPLETES JOB BY SENDING HER TO THE BOTTOM.

Cape Haitien, Haiti, Sept. 9.—The gunboat Crete-a-Pierrot, which was in the service of the Firminist party, has been sunk at the entrance of the harbor of Gonaives by the German gunboat Panther. Details of the occurrence are lacking. The crew of the Crete-a-Pierrot left her before she went down.

Called Upon to Surrender.

Port-au-Prince, Haiti, Sept. 9.—The German gunboat Panther arrived here Sept. 5 and received instructions from the German government to capture the Firminist gunboat Crete-a-Pierrot. She left immediately for Gonaives, the seat of the Firminist government. The Panther found the Crete-a-Pierrot in the harbor of Gonaives and the commander of the German gunboat informed Admiral Killick, on the Crete-a-Pierrot, that he must remove his crew and surrender his vessel in five minutes' time. Admiral Killick asked that this time be extended to fifteen minutes. This request was granted on the condition that the arms and ammunition on board the Crete-a-Pierrot should be abandoned when her crew left her. The crew of the Crete-a-Pierrot left the vessel.

Amid Great Disorder.

At the end of fifteen minutes the Panther sent a small boat carrying an officer and twenty sailors, who were to take possession of the Firminist gunboat. When the seamen had arrived at a point about thirty yards from the Crete-a-Pierrot flames were seen to break out on board of her. She had been fired by her crew before they left her. The Panther then fired on the Crete-a-Pierrot until she was completely immersed. Thirty shots, all told, were fired.

There is much feeling here against the Firminists and their cause is considered to be a bad one. Soldiers are leaving here to attack St. Marc. Port-au-Prince is calm.

Held Up German Steamer.

The German gunboat Panther arrived at Port-au-Prince Sept. 5. It was announced from Cape Haitien Sept. 3 that the German steamer Markomannia, Capt. Nanson, belonging to the Hamburg-American Packet company, having on board arms and ammunition sent by the provisional government to Cape Haitien, had been stopped Sept. 2 by the Firminist gunboat Crete-a-Pierrot at the entrance to the harbor of Cape Haitien and that an armed force sent aboard the steamer from the gunboat took possession of the war munitions in spite of the protestations of Capt. Nansen and the German consul.

An Act of Piracy.

The seizure of the Markomannia has been characterized as an act of piracy. But a dispatch from Berlin to the Associated Press, dated Sept. 6, said German government circles did not take a tragic view of the seizure of the German vessel, but that satisfaction would be demanded. The foreign press agrees with the view held by the foreign representatives at Port-au-Prince, said the dispatch, that the action of the Crete-a-Pierrot was piracy, but it was not then known whether satisfaction would be demanded from Gen. Firmin or whether the result of the revolution in Haiti would be awaited.

Reports the Crew Drowned.

Paris, Sept. 9.—A brief cablegram has been received here from Cape Haitien, Haiti, dated Sept. 7, saying the Firminist gunboat Crete-a-Pierrot had been sunk by the German gunboat Panther and that the crew of the Crete-a-Pierrot had been drowned. The dispatch adds that Gen. Jean Jumeau, commander of the Firminist troops in the department of Artibonite, has taken the town of Mirabalis.

MOROS ARE VERY UGLY.

They Reject All Overtures on the Part of Americans.

Manila, Sept. 9.—Capt. J. J. Pershing, who is in command of the American force at Camp Vicars, island of Mindanao, reports to Gen. Chaffee that several of the Moro chiefs whose followers have attacked American soldiers have rejected all friendly overtures and that he has been unable to reach any understanding with them. The breaking of negotiations with the Moros, Capt. Pershing reports, will probably bring on a crisis in the Moro situation. It is believed in Manila that a renewal of Moro attacks will result in retaliation by the American forces. The military records show that since the Bayan fight last May the Moros have made twelve attacks on American soldiers, killing four Americans and wounding twelve, including one officer.

TRAFFIC IN HUMAN BONES.

Chicago Health Officials Uncover a Scandal.

Chicago, Sept. 9.—Investigation into the methods of a number of undertakers in Chicago has prompted health department officials to believe they have unearthed a wholesale trafficking in human bodies. More than a score of undertakers are under suspicion, but as yet only direct evidence against two has been secured. They are E. Jackson, 2806 State street, and Cody Bros, 9900 Throop street.

WARNING TO THE PRESIDENT.

London Papers Regard His Life as Too Valuable to Be Risked.

London, Sept. 9.—President Roosevelt's narrow escape from death, which was described in detail in special cable dispatches to all London papers, brought forth much comment, the general trend of which was that the president of the United States could, without sacrificing any principles of democracy, allow greater precautions to be taken for his safety. The expressions of thankfulness that the accident did not result fatally to President Roosevelt were spontaneous and voiced the sentiment of the entire English people. As to the lack of precautions, the Westminster Gazette says the president of the American republic does not travel with the same ceremony as a European monarch. In the latter case all traffic would have been stopped within a wide mark outside the point of risk. But, although the American president eschews ceremonial precautions, his life is too valuable to the state to be exposed unnecessarily.

BARTHOLIN A SUICIDE.

Body of the Chicago Murderer Is Found in Iowa.

Chicago, Sept. 9.—The body of a man, thought to be William Bartholin, murderer of his mother and sweetheart in Chicago six weeks ago, was found Saturday in a field near Lowther, Iowa. A bullet hole in the head and a revolver on the ground beside the body showed how the hunted fugitive had died. In the pocket of the man's coat was a letter confessing to the murder of the two women in Chicago. Letters signed "Minnie Mitchell," the name of Bartholin's murdered fiancee, also were found in the suicide's pockets. Nothing was said of the death of his mother, Mrs. Anna Bartholin, who was found buried in the basement of the residence nearly three weeks after the son had fled. Neither was any direct reference made to Minnie Mitchell. The letter simply said that "two women" had been murdered.

The body was yesterday exhumed and positively identified as that of Bartholin by William Mitchell, a brother of one of Bartholin's victims.

Bore for Gas at Aberdeen.

Pierre, S. D., Sept. 9.—Articles of incorporation have been filed for the Aberdeen Development company, composed of some of the leading business men of Aberdeen, and capitalized at $5,000. The object of the company is to bore for gas at Aberdeen, and a deep well will be sunk at once.

Terrorized by Footpads.

Paris, Sept. 9.—Paris continues to be terrorized by organized bands of murderous footpads and burglars operating with astounding boldness.

ARE FIRM AS EVER

EIGHTEENTH WEEK OF COAL STRIKE FINDS LINES TIGHTLY DRAWN.

STRIKE MAY GO ON FOR MONTHS

MINERS WILL NOT GO TO WORK UNTIL CONCESSIONS ARE GRANTED.

LOOK TO GOV. STONE FOR HOPE

WILL CALL EXTRA SESSION IF LAW CAN BE FRAMED TO END DEADLOCK.

Philadelphia, Sept. 9.—The anthracite mineworkers' strike enters upon its eighteenth week to-day with the lines between the operator and the mine owner drawn almost as tightly as when the suspension was inaugurated on May 12. There were many predictions that the contest would be over by the first week in September, but if the officials of the mineworkers' union are to be believed the struggle will continue for months unless the coal companies grant concessions. Some of the operators looked for a serious break in the ranks of the men weeks ago, and admit they are surprised at the way the strikers are holding out. Rumors are current, and, in fact, statements have been made by prominent men both in and out of the coal trade, that the strike will be ended this month. President Mitchell, of the union, maintains he knows nothing of a

Possible Early Ending

of the trouble, and says he knows nothing of any negotiations on foot looking to that end. The only move now in contemplation is the suggestion that Gov. Stone call an extra session of the legislature for the purpose of passing a law that would have the effect of amicably and speedily ending the deadlock. Gov. Stone has given the matter considerable thought, and has announced that if a bill can be framed that will have the desired effect he will immediately convene the legislature. Last week more coal left the mining region than in any previous week since the strike began.

The number of men at work throughout the entire anthracite territory is difficult to obtain. It is safe to say, however, the number, compared with the total number of workers (estimated at 145,000), is small, and that among those at work the certificate miners are few.

FIVE FREIGHT WRECKS.

Day of Accidents on the Pennsylvania System.

Altoona, Pa., Sept. 9.—Five freight wrecks occurred yesterday between Johnstown and Harrisburg on the Pennsylvania railroad system. The first occurred at 2 o'clock yesterday morning and was caused by a runaway freight train crashing into another at McGarvey's Station. Ten cars and the locomotive of the runaway train were derailed and broken. Fireman William G. Allison broke his left arm jumping from the engine, but no one else was hurt.

A short time later a freight train on the Cresson & Clearfield road parted near Frugality and the two sections coming together again with great force, several cars being wrecked. Two brakemen were killed.

Later there was a wreck at Port Royal, caused by a burned journal. Nine cars loaded with valuable merchandise are said to have been destroyed.

Shortly afterward there was a wreck at Millerstown and five loaded cars are said to have been broken to pieces, the result of a broken wheel.

Another wreck occurred at Ryde, and several cars were broken up.

HUNDREDS POISONED.

Thirty People Dead and Others Fatally Ill.

San Antonio, Tex., Sept. 9.—Thirty dead and several hundred in a dying condition is the report from Mapimi, Mex., as the result of poisoning of the water supply by a natural spring of arsenic at that place. The news of the catastrophe reached this city in a telegram from that village from a source that is reputable and reliable. The sick number close on to 300 and many will die. The spring of poison broke out on the mountain side and mixed with the water in the reservoir unknown to the inhabitants of the city, evidently in the night, and the people were taken ill near noon when they had just had time to get the fresh water from the mains and get the poison into their systems.

ASSAILS BAPTISM.

Preacher Denounces the Doctrine as Heathenish.

New York, Sept. 9.—Rev. Dr. R. S. MacArthur, at the one hundredth meeting in the "Evangel" tent yesterday, assailed the doctrine of baptism. He declared the dropping of water on an infant at birth was heathenish, and the idea that God would forever condemn an innocent but unbaptised babe makes him a tyrant, a monster and a demon. That utterance, coming from Dr. MacArthur had a wonderful effect on his hearers. They rose to their feet and applauded wildly.

Suicide by Starvation.

Danbury, Conn., Sept. 9.—Wilson F. Thrall, an optician seventy-four years old, died here from starvation. Thrall declared two months ago that he would eat no more, and refused food after that except when forced to eat.

Indian Fighter Killed.

Covina, Cal., Sept. 9.—Levi Ankenfelter, a noted Indian fighter on the Wyoming frontier in the early days of warfare with the savages, died near here from accidental injuries sustained while loading hay.

WILL QUIT ISLAND

ENTIRE NORTHERN PART OF MARTINIQUE WILL BE EVACUATED.

FRANCE HAS THUS DECIDED

NUMBER OF DEATHS SINCE AUG. 30 ESTIMATED AT FIFTEEN HUNDRED.

BELIEVE ISLAND IS DOOMED

TOTAL DESTRUCTION OF MARTINIQUE IS PREDICTED—PANIC PREVAILS.

Paris, Sept. 7.—The government has decided that the entire northern part of the island of Martinique shall be evacuated. M. Doumergue, the minister for the colonies, states that the reconstruction of the island will depend entirely on the subsidence of the volcano.

A cable dispatch from the Island of Guadaloupe announces the arrival of the French cruiser Suchet at Basse Terre, capital of Guadaloupe, and says that she reports that calm has been completely restored in Martinique.

The loss of 2,000 lives through the recent outbreaks of Mont Pelee referred to the deaths since Aug. 30, and not to the loss of life resulting from the reported outbreak of Sept. 3.

Awful Explosion of Soufriere.

Castries, St. Lucia, Sept. 7.—The eruption of Mont Pelee on Sept. 3 was not remarkable, but there was a terrific explosion from Lt Soufriere Sept. 3. The captain of the steamer Savan, now here, confirming the report, said that the vessel ran into dense clouds of dust when twenty miles southwest of St. Vincent at 2 o'clock the morning of Wednesday. Absolute darkness prevailed soon afterward, and he changed his course to due west in order to avoid the ashes which were falling thick. The first officer could not see the captain two feet away, and only knew him by his voice. They did not see the sun until about 10 a. m. the same day.

The steamer Yaro further reports that several more valuable plantations were destroyed at the time of the recent outbreak in addition to the townships referred to in previous dispatches, and adds that the anxiety and dejection of the surviving population is general.

Fifteen Hundred Were Killed.

Washington, Sept. 7.—The state department has received the following cablegram from United States Consul Jewell, at Fort-de-France, relative to the latest eruptions of Mont Pelee:

"Two violent eruptions of Mont Pelee, Aug. 30, destroying village of Moyne Rouge, Ajoupa Bouilloon, devastating area including Parnasso Mourno, Carbet, Morne Bourdon heights. Estimated 1,500 killed; many injured."

Many Fear for Martinique.

New York, Sept. 7.—It is generally believed that the Island of Martinique is doomed to total destruction, and the fear is that when the catastrophe comes Guadaloupe will be visited by an all-destructive tidal wave, cables the Point-a-Pitre, Guadaloupe, correspondent of the Herald. Business is absolutely at a standstill. Few shops are open, and if it were not for the efforts of a small number of more valiant souls, hundreds would starve to death here because of their fear of a more terrible death.

ROUTED THE BANDITS.

Fanatical Filipino Leader Attacks a Town in Luzon.

Manila, Sept. 7.—Rios, a fanatical leader of the irreconcilable natives in the province of Tayabas, Luzon, attacked the town of Lagulmanoc Sept. 3 at the head of thirty riflemen and 150 men armed with bolos. The band wantonly killed two women and one girl and wounded several other persons. A detachment of the native constabulary arrived unexpectedly at Lagulmanoc while Rios' men were still there. They attacked and routed the bandits, killing several of Rios' followers, and have rounded up 700 men, many of whom are suspected of complicity in the attack. The guilty ones among the 700 men will be picked out and the remainder set at liberty. One of Rios' lieutenants, who was captured said Rios was a direct descendant of God and that it was beyond the power of man to injure him. The constabulary have also captured one of Rios' mountain strongholds. Four detachments of constabulary are now following the main band of the outlaws.

BANK WRECKED BY DYNAMITE.

Robbers Hold Citizens at Bay and Escape With Little Money.

Lagrange, Ind., Sept. 7.—The Bank of Fremont, Steuben county, Ind., was entered by burglars early yesterday and the vaults and front of the building was completely wrecked by charges of dynamite. The noise of the explosion awakened people living near, but they were met by armed men and at the points of revolvers were made to stay in their homes. A large amount of currency was in the safe, but the robbers overlooked the greater portion of it. When the robbers finished the work they entered carriages, driving north from the village toward the Michigan State line. There were six men in the gang.

Wrecked by Mob of Strikers.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Sept. 7.—The house of Lawrence Tarwoski, a nonunion mineworker at Hudson, six miles north of here, was wrecked by a mob. His wife, who was alone, fled in terror from the place.

They Both Drown.

Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Sept. 7—George Cerny, seven years old, was drowned in a mill race here last night. William Sutton, aged thirty-five, attempted to rescue the boy and also perished.

WAVES WASH OVER THEM.

Burial of Two at Sea Ends a Guilty Romance.

Chicago, Sept. 7.—At the bottom of the Atlantic ocean, a thousand miles off the coast of South America, lie the bodies of Otto M. Thumler and Mrs. Antoinette Young, wrapped in heavy tarpaulin and weighted down with iron. Their tragic fate marks the end of a brilliant career, the close of an unhappy romance, and leaves a sorrowing wife in Chicago to mourn for a husband who had proved untrue. Otto M. Thumler and the woman who passed as his wife were stricken with a strange disease resembling yellow fever while on board a steamer called the St. Nicholas, en route from Brazil to Portugal. They died within five hours of each other. Mrs. Thumler in Chicago knew that there was another woman who stood between them, but she did not know the full extent of her husband's perfidy until there came an unsigned cablegram to Bauer & Black, dated at Lisbon, and saying:

"Otto Thumler and wife died same day on the St. Nicholas and were buried at sea."

ELOPE ON A HANDCAR.

New Jersey Couple Pump Their Way Out of Reach of Angry Husband.

Washington, Sept. 7.—Out of Jersey have come many tales of the cunning of eloping couples, but none in truth or melodrama fit to be written on the same page with the adventure of George Stafford and Margaret Frack, who took flight on a Lackawanna handcar and pumped their way out of reach of the injured husband. In Wharton lives Oliver Frack, who is fifty years old, respected by his fellow townsmen. Though his hair is well mixed with gray, he was young enough to win a girl of twenty, and he married her six months ago. Only a month ago George Stafford came to live in Wharton. He is an athletic young fellow from Ohio, college-bred, who got a place in the mine company's office and passed the Frack house several times a day. Mrs Frack generally was on the veranda. Mr. Frack was toiling in the mines. The result was a flirtation, an elopement, arrest, forgiveness and a second elopement.

RAVAGES OF THE MISSOURI.

Erratic Stream Threatens to Make a New Channel.

St. Joseph, Sept. 7.—The ravages of the Missouri river just north of this city on large tracts of fertile bottom lands has reached such an alarming stage that a fleet of government steamers and barges has been brought into requisition for immediate action against the eratic currents. A sand bar is forming in such a manner that the main channel of the Missouri river at this point is being diverted to the Kansas side. The government engineers say if this continues the river will eventually cut a new channel, leaving St. Joseph with a steel railway bridge costing half a million dollars, high and dry.

LOGAN IS TURNED OVER.

Alleged Robber of Great Northern Train Now in Federal Custody.

Knoxville, Tenn., Sept. 7.—Harvey Logan, alias Kid Curry, the alleged ringleader in the Great Northern train robbery, in which $40,000 worth of unsigned Montana bank bills were stolen, yesterday was turned over to the federal authorities, Judge Sneed of the circuit court ruling that the United Sates authorities be given concurrent jurisdiction of Logan under an agreement that they would not take him out of the state for trial. Logan can be tried for having unsigned bank notes in his possession and on the charge of having forged the names of bank officials to them.

EXPLOSION IN A CHURCH.

Several Persons Reported to Have Been Killed.

London, Sept. 7.—A special dispatch from Naples says the entrance of a lamplighter into the sacristy of the Church of Santa Lucia was followed by a terrible explosion, caused by escaping gas. A panic ensued, and people in the church rushed to the doors. A portion of the massive roof was blown off and the lamplighter was killed. Several persons were injured. It is reported that others were killed by falling debris.

STAGE TRAGEDY.

Real Murder Instead of the Imitation in the Play.

New York, Sept. 7.—Julia Pakey, an actress, shot Julius Bardor on the stage. The couple had been engaged, but Bardor's affection had waned and he had given up his fiancee. Julia had to shoot Julius, who acted as her sweetheart. Bullets were placed in the revolver instead of blank cartridges with fatal results. Afterwards Miss Pakey committed suicide by opening her veins.

Importing Coal for Schools.

Philadelphia, Sept. 7.—The public schools of this city are to be heated during the coming winter with coal imported from Europe and brought here in tramp steamers sailing under the British flag. This is the first time in the history of this city that the public schools have been compelled to secure fuel from outside the state.

State Soldiers Mustered In.

Whitewood, S. D., Sept. 7.—The new militia organization at Whitewood has been mustered in as Company K of the Second regiment, South Dakota State guard. The officers are Robert V. Carr, captain; P. M. Bonniwell, first lieutenant, and Alexander Blundell, second lieutenant. The muster roll contains forty names.

Is Charged With Murder.

Des Moines, Iowa, Sept. 7.—Thomas Lewis, aged twenty-eight and unmarried, a miner living in Marquisville, has been arrested charged with the murder of sixteen-year-old Lena Peterson on April 13 last.

Boy Accidentally Killed.

Lake Preston, S. D., Sept. 7.—Johnnie Rusk, eight years old, son of a farmer residing near here, was shot and instantly killed by his sister, whom he told the gun was not loaded.

TICKET IS NAMED

WISCONSIN DEMOCRATS CONCLUDE THEIR LABORS AND ADJOURN.

COMPLETE THE STATE TICKET

ONLY TWO OF THE CANDIDATES ARE NOMINATED BY ACCLAMATION.

BIGGEST SURPRISE OF THE DAY

RESOLUTION TO INDORSE THE NATIONAL PLATFORM IS TURNED DOWN.

Milwaukee, Sept. 6.—The Wisconsin Democratic state convention concluded its labors at a late hour yesterday afternoon.

Following is the complete list of nominations:

For governor, David S. Rose, Milwaukee; lieutenant governor, John W. Wattawa, Kewaunee; secretary of state, Louis A. Lange, Fond du Lac; treasurer, Ed L. Luckow, Baraboo; attorney general, Olaf R. Skaar, La Crosse; superintendent of public instruction, Karl A. Mathie, Wausau; railroad commissioner, W. A. Redner, Ashland; insurance commissioner, William Ferber, New London.

The biggest surprise of the day, and a sensation at that, was the turning down of a resolution just before the convention adjourned indorsing the national platform. While the delegates gave a respectful hearing to its reading its was not entertained for an instant.

The convention met at 10:30 a. m. and took a recess until 1:30, but failed to get together until 2:15. The first business was the nomination of a candidate for secretary of state. James J. McNally of Milwaukee and Louis A. Lange of Fond du Lac were presented. The ballot resulted: Lange, 366; McNally, 158. On motion the nomination was made unanimous. G. H. Landgraf of Green Lake county and Karl A. Mathie of Wausau were named for superintendent of public instruction. Mathie received 404 votes and Landraf 192. On motion Mathie was declared the unanimous nominee.

For treasurer D. L. Luckow of Baraboo received the nomination by acclamation. For railroad commissioner William A. Redner of Ashland was nominated by acclamation.

For insurance commissioner, John E. Dennis of Dunn and William H. Ferber of New London were presented. Ferber received 425 and Dennis 176. On motion Ferber was declared the nominee by a unanimous vote.

For attorney general Olaf R. Skaar of La Crosse, M. E. Burke of Dodge and J. E. Dickinson of West Superior were presented. Skaar received 463; Burke, 159; Col. George W. Bird 7. It was announced during the vote that Dickinson was not a candidate. On motion Skaar was declared the unanimous choice.

A. E. Warden of Waukesha was unanimously chosen to succeed himself as Chairman of the state central committee.

Just before final adjournment Delegate W. H. Rogers of Madison offered the following resolution:

"We, the Democrats of Wisconsin, in convention assembled, reaffirm our allegiance to the Democratic party and its policy as enunciated in its national platform."

Scarcely had Mr. Rogers finished reading the resolution when another delegate arose to a point of order and stated that early in the convention it was decided to refer all resolutions to a committee on resolutions.

Still another delegate made a motion to adjourn. This was put and adopted with almost a unanimous vote, there being not over two or three feeble protests. The resolution, therefore, was completely ignored. The convention then at 5:20 adjourned sine die.

NEW LUMBER MILL.

Three Hundred Thousand Dollar Plant for Bemidji.

Bemidji, Minn., Sept. 6.—The Crookston Lumber company has begun the work of clearing off the timber from the 100 acres of land on the south end of Bemidji lake upon which it is to construct its big saw mill. It will take six months of active preparation and construction work to get the plant in running operation. It will cost about $300,000, and will be the most complete mill property in Minnesota. The timber for this plant will be brought down from the headwaters of the Mississippi and from along the line of the Minnesota & International railway in eastern Beltrami and northern Itasca counties.

Banks and Postoffices.

Washington, Sept. 6.—Authority has been granted for the organization of national banks in Minnesota as follows: The National Bank of Commerce of Mankato, capital, $1200,000; Security National Bank of Albert Lea, capital, $50,000; First National Bank of McIntosh, capital, $25,000. Reuben J. Steffa was appointed postmaster at Ryan, Goodhue county, Minn., vice Philip Ryan, resigned.

Child Scalded to Death.

Galesville, Wis., Sept. 6.—The little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. Terpening fell into a pail of boiling water and suffered burns from which she died soon after. The child was cooked from shoulders to the lower limbs.

Ottumwa Linemen Strike.

Ottumwa, Iowa, Sept. 6.—A strike of all linemen in the employ of the Ottumwa street railway is on and it is thought the telephone linemen may go out in sympathy. The men ask for an increase in pay.

PRESIDENT IS ALL RIGHT.

Has Recovered From the Effects of the Accident.

Oyster Bay, N. Y., Sept. 6.—The president yesterday entertained Grand Duke Boris at luncheon. The grand duke came to Oyster Bay from Newport on Ogden Mills' yacht, the Felicia. With him were Count Cassini, the Russian ambassador at Washington; Ogden Mills and Assistant Secretary of State Peirce, the representative of this government. The president met his distinguished guests in the wide hall of his home on Sagamore Hill, and after the presentations, which were made by Count Cassini, luncheon was announced. The grand duke called simply to pay his respects and at 3:30 the party left on the Felicia for Newport.

President Roosevelt and Secretary Cortelyou have recovered from the effects of their accident, but still bear awkward marks of the catastrophe. Dr. Lung, the president's official physician, thinks that the marks on the president's face will disappear in about four days.

The president will send a wreath of flowers to be placed on the casket of William Craig, his faithful bodyguard, who was killed.

Arrangements have been completed for the president's trip to Chattanooga, which begins to-day.

The president is receiving a large number of messages of congratulation over his escape from serious injury. These have come from some of the crowned heads of Europe as well as from leading public men and private citizens in this country.

CITY'S FAME HURT.

Pittsfield Citizens Greatly Regret Accident to the President.

Pittsfield, Mass., Sept. 6.—With the excitement which followed the accident to President Roosevelt in this city in a great measure abated the citizens yesterday were discussing the question of responsibility for the occurrence which on all sides is considered as having marred the city's fame, in that a street car in disputing the right of way with the President of the United States at least was extremely discourteous. That the attempt to do this resulted in a fatality and in the very narrow escape from death or injury of the president himself and the governor of the commonwealth, are considered as adding to the gravity of the offense.

At the House of Mercy it was stated that the condition of D. J. Pratt, the driver of the president's carriage was satisfactory.

Less interest than was generally expected was shown in the appearance before the district court of Motorman Madden and Conductor Kelly, who had charge of the car that struck the president's carriage. Not more than fifty persons were present. The case was not even called, and after a conference between counsel for the street railway men and the court, it was agreed to postpone the matter for two weeks.

PRESIDENT GOES SOUTH.

He and His Party Will Make a Brief Tour.

Washington, Sept. 6.—President Roosevelt and party will reach Washington over the Pennsylvania railroad at 6:45 o'clock this evening and leave for the brief Southern tour at 7:30 o'clock on a train over the Baltimore & Ohio railroad. The party will consist of the president, Secretary Cortelyou, Assistant Secretary Barnes, Dr. G. A. Lung, the president's physician, Stenographers Latta and Weaver and representatives of the press associations.

JUST LIKE REAL WAR.

Admiral Higginson Attempts to Silence Fort Wright.

Fisher's Island, N. Y., Sept. 6.—Fort Wright was again attacked last night and it would appear that Admiral Higginson and Admiral Coughlan have brought their fleets together for the purpose of silencing, if possible, the guns of the fort, which is admitted to be the most strongly fortified on Long Island sound. Admiral Higginson's maneuver last night was an excellent one and brought out the finest points of the game of war. He came down upon the forts in two sections. The cruisers were sent ahead with the apparent purpose of having the fire concentrated upon them. He then crept up with his battleships and opened fire with the purpose of crumbling the fort to pieces.

ODEON THEATER BURNED.

And Music Hall in Cincinnati Is Damaged—Loss of $110,000.

Cincinnati, Sept. 6.—A fire which started under the stage of the Odeon theater, now used for musical purposes, and the adjoining Music hall, yesterday morning destroyed that building, causing a loss of $100,000, and damaged the south wing of Music hall to the extent of $10,000. The Odeon was owned by the Music Hall association and was leased to the college of music. It is announced that the fall musical festival will not be delayed, as a temporary roof will be placed on the hall. Music hall was insured for $300,000.

MAN HAS ANTHRAX.

La Crosse Citizen Contracts Disease From Dead Animals.

La Crosse, Wis., Sept. 6.—George Kehr of this city lies in a serious condition at his home suffering from anthrax, which he contracted while hauling carcasses of animals which died from the disease. While Kehr is seriously ill, the physician believes he will recover.

Boers Will See Chamberlain.

London, Sept. 6.—The conference which was to have taken place yesterday at the colonial office between the secretary, Joseph Chamberlain, and the Boer generals, has been postponed until to-day. It will be private.

England Ships Us Coal.

London, Sept. 6.—The newspapers here announce that the British steamers Glencoe and Devonshire are loading 8,000 tons of anthracite coal at Swansea for New York, these being the first cargoes of that description.

BREAK IN STRIKE

STRIKING COAL MINERS ARE ANXIOUS TO RETURN TO WORK.

OPERATORS ARE VERY HOPEFUL

CONFIDENCE THAT MEN WILL GRADUALLY GO BACK IS STRENGTHENED.

OUTPUT OF COAL INCREASING

PREPARATIONS FOR RESUMPTION AT DIFFERENT MINES CONTINUE.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Sept. 7.—The output of yesterday in the anthracite region is estimated to have been about 17,650 tons, being increased over that of Thursday by the addition to the operations of the Bellevue washery of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western company, which started yesterday morning.

There are also several small washeries which supply local trade. The confidence of the operators in the belief that the strikers will gradually return to work is being strengthened by the action of the men since the publication of President Baer's letter, there being a noticeable indication of a desire to go back to work. Many of the operators believe that if the men could act freely, without fear of being called non-unionists, or of interference with themselves or families, most of them would return to work.

The fact that the strike relief fund is not being received as rapidly nor in as large amounts as the men would like it, is causing desertions.

Merchants Make a Kick.

At Nanticoke the merchants declined to fill any more orders until payment was made. This brought the locals to time, and yesterday a payment was made. The union officers, despite this, continue to state that a large amount of relief money is being received, and that all the strikers are satisfied.

Preparations for resumption at different mines continue. The Erie company yesterday continued bringing back its mules from the farms and they are now being taken down the mines and are ready for work.

The failure of the strike in the Pocahontas district is also having an effect on the strikers here, and the operators report that the prospect is most encouraging for an increase in the operating force and a general resumption of work.

PLATT SAYS STRIKE WILL END.

New York Senator Sticks to His Original Statement.

New York, Sept. 7.—Senator Platt yesterday repeated his assertion that the coal strike would be settled in a fortnight from last Saturday, and the representatives of the coal company reiterated that there could be no settlement except by the strikers returning to work. Senator Platt was seen in the afternoon at his office.

"The strike will be settled in two weeks from the time I last made the prediction," he said.

"How is it going to be settled? Is either side to give way?" he was asked.

"I will not say, but I stand by my original statement on the subject," he replied.

WANT WINTER CLOTHING.

Troops in Strike Region Prepare for Cold Weather.

Tamaqua, Pa., Sept. 7.—The nonunion men in the Panther creek valley again went to work yesterday without an escort. Maj. Gearhart, in command of the troops, says that so long as the strikers do not interfere with the nonunion men he will not send any of the soldiers out on patrol duty. The troops are sending requisitions for winter clothing. Plans are being made to convert one of the dancing pavilions at Manila Park, where the troops are stationed, into a barracks. The opinion prevails among the officers that they will remain on duty for a long while.

GOVERNOR AND CITIZENS

Will Confer Next Thursday on the Strike Situation.

Harrisburg, Pa., Sept. 7.—Gov. Stone has fixed next Thursday to meet a committee appointed by the People's alliance at Hazleton to discuss the best means of ending the anthracite coal strike. The governor said he would be gland to meet any and all persons who might want to see him on matters pertaining to the strike.

GO TO WORK AT ONCE.

Flat Top and Elkhorn Mines Don't Wait for Monday.

Bramwell, W. Va., Sept. 7.—Many of the miners who have been on a strike in the Flat Top and Elkhorn coal fields appeared at the mines yesterday ready for work, stating that they did not care to wait until Monday, the day agreed upon to begin. Probably 1,000 men went to work yesterday.

Fire Destroys Creamery.

Garner, Iowa, Sept. 7.—Fire completely destroyed the creamery here. Loss, $3,000.

Kaffir Corn in Kansas.

Topeka, Kan., Sept. 7.—The Kansas bureau of agriculture has issued a report on the sorghum industry in Kansas which shows the remarkable increase in the acreage of Kaffir corn and its effect on the state's prosperity.

Prof. Heilprin Safe.

Philadelphia, Sept. 7.—Relatives of Prof. Angelo Heilprin of this city, the noted explorer and scientist, have received a telegram announcing that he is safe on the Island of Martinique. Grave fears had been entertained.

NEARLY $100,000,000.

A Jamestown Paper's Estimate of North Dakota's Income in 1901.

North Dakota's farm products for the year 1901, at a conservative estimate, aggregated $94,000,000 in value, or about $235 per capita, or $1,400 for the head of each family in the state. There are the figures, in round numbers:

Wheat, 60,000,000 bushels; value, $37,000,000. Oats, 30,000,000 bushels; value, $10,500,000. Rye, 30,000 bushels; value, $150,000. Flax, 17,000,000 bushels; value, $21,250,000. Barley, 5,000,000 bushels; value, $2,000,000. Corn, 2,000,000 bushels; value, $1,000,000. Potatoes, 2,000,000 bushels; value, $1,400,000. Other root crops and vegetables, $1,200,000. Tame hay, 350,000 tons; value, $1,750,000. Wild hay, 2,000,000 tons; value, $2,000,000. Wool, 2,000,000 pounds; value, $250,000. Poultry and eggs, $2,500,000. Milk and butter, $3,000,000. Live stock, $10,000,000.

To these may be added $500,000 for coal; $500,000 for wood and $2,000,000 for manufactured products, aside from flour, etc; and we have a total of $97,000,000 as the products of North Dakota for the single year. What state can make a better showing?

North Dakota has a population of 400,000; 3,131 miles of railroad; 600 postoffices; 221 newspapers; 3,085 schools; 4,200 teachers; $2,600,000 worth of school property.

People south and east of North Dakota are wont to think of that state as a land of wild uncertainty, says the Jamestown Capital; a land of poverty and hard toil; a state much after the old-time idea of Kansas, full of enthusiasm, good air, good appetites and long distances, but nothing much more substantial and satisfying. The people of North Dakota can well afford to be thus thought of, for the solid benefit is theirs, whatever tradition about the state may say.

North Dakota, counting the actual production of the soil per capita—the best test of a state's agricultural worth—is one of the richest spots on the face of the earth. The state raised last year about fourteen acres of grain for every man, woman and child in its population. It raised forty bushels of flax and 235 bushels of wheat per capita of population last year, which sold at an aggregate of $150 per capita. The state has $50 worth of live stock per capita, and has more acres of good farm land per capita than probably any other state in the Union.

NORTH DAKOTA'S EXHIBIT.

At the World's Fair at St. Louis Will Be Fine.

The North Dakota educational exhibit will demonstrate that our state has school facilities and opportunities equal to any state in the Union.

Correspondence is solicited by W. F. Cushing, superintendent state exhibits Bismarck, regarding curios which would add interest or attractiveness to the state exhibit at St. Louis.

Although North Dakota is not considered a mineral state, her exhibit in the mines building will astonish even her own citizens. One of the leading geologists of the state predicts that the wealth that lies under the surface in this state will some day produce more wealth than all that is grown and raised on the surface.

Fine pictures are wanted by the state to adorn the walls of the state building and booths at the exposition, and for illustrating the souvenir book to be distributed there. Views of every county should be shown, but if the people don't send them in to Bismarck their section will not be represented—and they will have "no kick coming."

The creamery men will have a fine butter exhibit at the St. Louis exposition. The state will have its own plate glass refrigerator in which life size figures in butter will be shown. North Dakota butter took third place at the Pan-American exposition in competition with the old dairy states, and we hope to stand in first place at St. Louis.

Among the numerous state exhibits at St. Louis will be a section of the earth one foot wide and thirty-three feet deep. It will be taken from the pit where the Dickinson Pressed and Fire Brick company gets its clay for building brick, pottery, fire brick and the coal for burning the clay. Samples of the manufactured product will be shown alongside of the clay from which it is made.

LAND VALUES.

A Section Near Larimore Sold for $30 Per Acre.

As an illustration of the manner in which land values are advancing, not only in the valley, but in other sections of the state, a sale that was completed a couple of days ago can be referred to. This is the purchase of Section 10, in Larimore township, by Clay Larimore, from ex-Senator Horace F. Arnold, the consideration being $19,200, or $30 per acre. The land is situated in a section of the country that has always been considered fair, but not of the very best, and $30 per acre, even a couple of years ago, would have been considered ridiculously high. This is but a fair sample of the manner in which values have been climbing, and are climbing at the present time, as it will be some time to come, from present indications, before the highest mark is reached. While the tract sold is not large, the fact that it was sold at the price it was, to one of the bonanza farmers of the Red River valley, who has owned land practically adjoining it for years, goes to show that it was not bought without a thorough knowledge of the character of the land.

ASPHALT IN NORTH DAKOTA.

Raw Paving Material of Superior Quality Said to Exist South of Dickinson.

What is asserted to be a superior quality of asphalt has been discovered on the lands of the Cannon Ball River Land company, south of Dickinson.

The deposit resembles coal, and is in the vicinity of a coal vein.

Samples have been submitted to experts, and upon their report a preliminary examination will be made of the region where the asphalt was discovered, to calculate the extent of the deposit.

The Crimson Blind

CHAPTER XLII. (Continued.)

A sudden light of rage lit up Henson's blue eyes. He caught Enid almost roughly by the shoulders and pushed her into the drawing room. There was something coming, she knew. It was a relief, a minute or two later, to hear Williams' whistle as he crossed the court yard. Henson knew nothing of Van Sneck's presence, nor was he likely to do so now.

"You are forgetting yourself," Enid said. "How dare you touch me like that?"

"By Heavens," Henson whispered, vehemently, "when I consider how I have been fooled by you I wonder that I do not strike the life out of you. Where is your sister?"

Enid assumed an air of puzzled surprise. She raised her eyebrows, coldly. But it needed no very brilliant intelligence to tell her that Henson had discovered something.

"I had only one sister," she said, "and she is—"

"Dead! Rot! No more dead than I am. A nice little scheme you had put up together with that scribbling ass, David Steel. But Steel is going to get a lesson not to interfere in my affairs, and you are going to get one, also. Where is your sister?"

Despite his bullying triumph, there was something nervous and anxious about the tone of the question. It was not quite like Henson to let his adversary see that he had scored a point. But since the affair of the dogs Henson had not been quite his old self. It was easy to see that he had found out a great deal, but he had not found out where Chris was yet.

"I know nothing," said Enid. "I shall answer no questions."

"Very well. But I shall find out. Accident put me on the trail first, and I have been to see that man Walker. He never saw your sister after her 'death,' nor did the undertaker. And I might have met my death at the fangs of that dog you put upon me. What a fool Walker was."

Enid looked up a little anxiously. Had Walker said anything about a second opinion? Had he betrayed to Henson the fact that he had been backed up by Hatherly Bell? Because they had been to a deal of trouble to conceal the fact that Bell had been in the house.

"Dr. Walker should have called in another opinion," she said, mockingly.

"The man was too conceited for that, and you know it," Henson growled; "and finely you played upon his vanity."

Enid was satisfied. Walker had evidently said nothing about Bell; and Henson, though he had just come from Littimer, knew nothing about Chris.

"You have made a statement," she said, "and in reply I say nothing. You have chosen to assume that my sister is still alive. Well, it is a free country, and you are at liberty to think as you please. If we had anything to gain by the course you suggest—"

"Anything to gain!" Henson burst out, angrily. "Everything to gain! One whom I deemed to be dead is free to follow me, to pry into my affairs, to rob me. That was part of Steel's precious scheme, I presume. If you and your sister and Miss Gates hadn't talked so loudly that day in the garden, I might not—"

"Have listened," said Enid, coldly. "Ears like a hare and head like a cat. But you don't know everything, and you never will. You scoundrel, you creeping, crawling scoundrel! If I only dared to speak! If I cared less for the honor of this unhappy family—"

"If you could only get the ring," said Henson, with a malicious sneer. "But the ring is gone. The ruby lies at the bottom of the North Sea."

Some passionate, heedless words rose to Enid's lips, but she checked them. All she could do now was to watch and wait until darkness. Van Sneck must be gotten out of the way before anything else was done. She did not dare to use the telephone yet, though she had made up her mind to ask Steel to come over and take Van Sneck away. Later on she could send the message.

Van Sneck had eaten a fairly good meal, so Williams said, and had fallen into a heavy sleep. There was nothing for it but to wait and watch. Dinner came in due course, with Mrs. Henson, ragged and unkempt, as usual, taking no notice of Henson, who watched her furtively during the meal. Enid escaped to her own room directly afterwards, and Henson followed his hostess to the drawing room.

Once there, his manner changed entirely. His lips grew firm, his eyes were like points of steel. Mrs. Henson was pacing the dusty floor, muttering and crooning to herself. Henson touched her arm, at the same time holding some glittering object before her eyes. It was a massive ruby ring with four black pearls on either side.

"Look here," he whispered. "Do you recognize it? Have you seen it before?"

A pitiful, wailing cry came from Mrs. Henson's lips. She was trembling from head to foot with a strange agitation. She gazed at the ring as a thirsty man in a desert might have looked at a draught of cold spring water. She stretched out her hand, but Henson drew back.

"I thought you had not forgotten," he smiled. "It means much to your honor, peace, happiness—your son restored to his proper place in the world. Last time I was here I wanted money, a mere bagatelle to you. Now I want £10,000."

"No, no!" Mrs. Henson cried. "You will ruin me—£10,000! What do you do with all this money? You profess to give it to charity. But I know better. Much you give away that more may come back from it. But that money you get from a credulous public. And I could expose you, ah, how I could expose you, Reginald Henson!"

"Instead of which you will let me have that £10,000."

"I cannot. You will ruin me. Have you not had enough? Give me the ring."

Henson, smilingly, held the gem aloft. Mrs. Henson raised her arm, with the dust rising in choking clouds around her. Then, with an activity astonishing in one of her years, she sprang upon Henson and tore the ring from his grasp. The thing was so totally unexpected from the usually gentle lady that Henson could only gasp in astonishment.

"I have it!" Mrs. Henson cried. "I have it, and I am free!"

Henson sprang towards her. With a quick, fleet step she crossed to the window and fled out into the night. A raging madness seemed to have come over her again; she laughed and she cried, as she sped on into the bushes, followed by Henson. In fear and desperation the latter had quite forgotten the dogs. He was in the midst of them, they were clustering around himself and Mrs. Henson before he was aware of the fact.

"Give me the ring," he said. "You can't have it yet. Some day I will restore it to you. Be sensible. If anybody should happen to see you." Mrs. Henson merely laughed. The dogs were gamboling around her like so many kittens. They did not seem to heed Henson in the joy of her presence. He came on again, he made a grab for her dress, but the rotten fabric parted like a cobweb in his hand. A warning grunt came from one of the dogs, but Henson gave no heed.

"Give it to me!" he hissed, "or I will tear it from you!"

CHAPTER XLIII.

Nearing the Truth.

David Steel stood contemplating the weird scene with almost doubting eyes. In his wildest moments he had never imagined anything more dramatic than this. The candle in its silver sconce, that Mrs. Henson had snatched up before her flight, was perilously near her flimsy dress. Henson caught her once more in a fierce grip. David could stand it no longer. As Henson came by him his right arm flashed out, there was a dull thud, and Henson, without having the least idea what had happened, fell to the ground with a very hazy idea of his surroundings for a moment or two.

Equally unconscious that she had a protector handy, Mrs. Henson turned and fled for the house. A minute later and she was followed by Henson, still puzzling his racking head to know what had happened. David would have followed, but the need for caution flashed upon him. If he stood there, perfectly still, Henson would never know who his antagonist was. David stood there, waiting. As he glanced around he saw some little object glittering at his feet. It was the ruby ring!

"Be you there, sir?" a rusty voice whispered near by.

"I am, Williams," David replied. "I have been waiting for some time."

Williams chuckled, making no kind of apology for his want of punctuality.

"I've been lookin after our man, sir," he said. "That Dutch chap what Miss Enid said you'd come for. And I saw all that business in the shrubbery just now. My! If I didn't feel good when you laid out Henson on the grass. The sound of that smack was as good as ten years' wages for me. And he's gone off to his room with a basin of vinegar and a ream of brown paper. Why didn't you break his neck?"

David suggested that the law took a prejudiced view of that kind of thing, and that it would be a pity to hang anyone for such a creature as Reginald Henson.

"Our man is all right?" he asked.

"As a trivet," said Williams. "Sleeping like a babby; he's in my own bed over the stable. I'll show you into the harness room, where Miss Enid's waiting for you, sir, and then I'll go and see as Henson don't come prowling about. Not as he's likely to, considering the clump on the side of the head you gave him. I take it kind of Providence to let me see that."

Williams hobbled away, chuckling to himself and followed by David. There was a feeble oil lamp in the harness room. Enid was waiting there, anxiously.

"So you have put Henson out of the way for a time," she said. "He passed me just now, using awful language, and wondering how it had all come about. Wasn't it a strange thing that Van Sneck should come here?"

"Not very," David said. "He is evidently looking for his master, Reginald Henson. I have not the slightest doubt that he has been here many times before. Williams says he is asleep. Pity to wake him just yet, don't you think?"

"Perhaps it is. But I am horribly afraid of our dear friend, Reginald, all the same."

"Our dear Reginald will not trouble us just yet. He came down as far as London with Bell. Of course, he has heard the news of Van Sneck's flight. Was he disturbed?"

"I have never seen him in such a passion before, Mr. Steel. And not only was he in a passion, but he was horribly afraid about something. And he has made a discovery."

"He hasn't found out that your sister—"

"Is at Littimer Castle? That is really the most consoling part of the business. He has been at Littimer for a day or two, and he has not the remotest idea that Christopher Lee is our Chris."

"A feather in your sister's cap. She has quite captivated Littimer, Bell says."

"And she played her part splendidly, Mr. Steel. It is very, very good to know that Hatherly has cleared himself in the eyes of Lord Littimer at last. Did Reginald suspect—"

"Nothing," Steel said. "He is utterly and hopelessly puzzled over the whole business. And Bell has managed to convince him that he is not suspected at all. That business over the Rembrandt was really a brilliant piece of comedy. But what has Henson found out?"

"That Chris is not dead. He has seen Walker and the undertaker. But he does not know yet that Bell was in the house that eventful night, which is a blessing. As a matter of fact, Reginald has not been quite the same man since Rollo nearly killed him that exciting evening. His nerves seem to be greatly shaken."

"That is because the rascal feels the net closing round him," Steel said. "It was a fine stroke on your sister's part to win over that fellow Merritt to her side. I supplied the details per telephone, but the plot was really Miss Chris'. How on earth should we have managed without the telephone over this business?"

"I am at a loss to say," Enid smiled. "But tell me about that plot. I am quite in the dark about that side of the matter."

David proceeded to explain his own and Chris' ingenious scheme for getting Merritt into their power. Enid followed the story with vast enjoyment, tempered with the fact that Henson was so near.

"I should never have thought of that," she said; "but Chris was always so clever. But, tell me, what was Henson doing in the garden just now? Williams says he has been ill-treating my aunt; but that seems hardly possible, even in Reginald."

"It was over a ring that Mrs. Henson had," David explained. "She was running away with it, and Henson was trying to get it back. You see—"

"A ring!" Enid gasped. "Did you happen to see it? Oh, if it was only—But he would not be so silly as that. A ring is the cause of all the troubles. Did you see it?"

"I not only saw it, but I have it in my possession," David replied.

Enid turned up the flaring little lamp with a shaking hand. Quite unstrung, she held out her fingers for the ring.

"It is just possible," she said, hoarsely, "that you possess the key of the situation. If that ring is what I hope it is we can tumble Henson into the dust to-morrow. We can drive him out of the country, and he will never, never trouble us again. How did you get it?"

"Mrs. Henson dropped it and I picked it up."

"Please let me see it?" Enid said, pleadingly. "Let me be put out of my misery."

David handed the ring over; Enid regarded it long and searchingly. With a little sigh of regret, she passed it back to David once more.

"You had better keep it," she said. "At any rate, it is likely to be valuable evidence for us later on. But it is not the ring I hoped to see. It is a clever copy, but the black pearls are not so fine, and the engraving inside is not so worn as it used to be on the original. It is evidently a copy that Henson has had made to tease my aunt with, to offer her at some future date in return for the large sums of money that she gave him. No; the original of that ring is popularly supposed to be at the bottom of the North Sea. If such had been the case—seeing that Henson had never handled it before the great tragedy came—the original must be in existence."

"Because the ring must have been copied from it," Enid said. "It is a very faithful copy indeed, and could not have been made from mere direction—take the engraving inside, for instance. The engraving forms the cipher of the house of Littimer. If Henson has the real ring, if we can find it, the tragedy goes out of our lives for ever."

"I should like to hear the story," said Steel.

Enid paused and lowered the lamp as a step was heard outside. But it was only Williams.

"Mr. Henson is in his bed room still," he said. "I have just taken him the cigars. He's got a lump on his head as big as a billiard-ball. Thinks he hit it against a bench. And my lady have locked herself in her room and refused to see anybody."

"Go and look at your patient," Enid commanded.

Williams disappeared, to return presently with the information that Van Sneck was still fast asleep and lying very peacefully.

"Looks like waiting till morning, it do," he said. "And now I'll go back and keep my eye on that 'ere distinguished philanthropist."

Williams disappeared, and Enid turned up the lamp again. Her face was pale and resolute. She motioned David towards a chair.

"I'll tell you the story," she said. "I am going to confide in you the saddest and strangest tale that ever appealed to an imaginative novelist."

CHAPTER XLIV.

Enid Speaks.

"I am going to tell you the story of the great sorrow that has darkened all our lives, but I shall have to go a long way back to do it," Enid said. "I go back to the troublous days of Charles, as far back as the disastrous fight at Naseby. Of course, I am speaking more from a Royalist point of view, for the Littimers were always followers of the Court.

"Mind you, there is doubtless a deal that is legendary about what I am going to tell you. But the ring given to my ancestor, Rupert Littimer, by Prince Rupert himself, is an actuality.

"Naseby was over, and, so the legend goes, Prince Rupert found himself desperately situated and in dire peril of capture by Cromwell's troops, under one Colonel Carfax, a near neighbor of Rupert Littimer; indeed, the Carfax estates still run parallel with the property round Littimer Castle.

"Now, Carfax was hated by all those who were attached to the fortunes of the king. Seeing that he was of aristocratic birth, it was held that he had violated his caste and creed by taking sides with Roundheads. History has told us that he was right, and that the Cavaliers, picturesque as they were, were fighting a dubious cause. But I need not go into that. Carfax was a hard, stern man who spared nobody, and many were the stories told of his cruelty.

"He and Rupert Littimer were especially at daggers drawn. I believe that both of them had been in love with the same woman, or something of that kind. And the fact that she did not marry either made little difference to the bitterness between them.

"Well, Carfax was pressing close on Rupert, so close, indeed, that unless some strategy were adopted the brilliant cavalry leader was in dire peril. It was then that my ancestor, Rupert Littimer, came forward with his scheme. He offered to disguise himself and go into the camp of Carfax and take him prisoner. The idea was to steal into the tent of Carfax and, by threatening him with his life, compel him to issue certain orders, the result of which would be that Prince Rupert could get away.

"'You will never come back again, friend,' the Prince said.

"Rupert Littimer said he was prepared to run all risk of that. 'And if I do die, you shall tell my wife, sir,' he said. 'And when the child is born, tell him that his father died as he should have done, for his king and for his country.'

"'Oh, there is a child coming?' Rupert asked.

"Littimer replied that, for aught he knew, he was a father already. And then he went his way into the camp of the foe, with his curls cut short and in the guise of a countryman who comes with valuable information. And, what is more, he schemed his way into Carfax's tent, and, at the point of a dagger, compelled him to write a certain order which my ancestor's servant, who accompanied him, saw carried into effect, and so the passage for Prince Rupert was made free.

"The ruse would have succeeded all round but for some little accident that I need not go into now. Rupert Littimer was laid by the heels, his disguise was torn off, and he stood face to face with his hereditary foe. He was told that he had but an hour to live.

"'If you have any favor to ask, say it,' Carfax said.

"'I have no favor to ask, properly so called,' Littimer replied; 'but I am loth to die without knowing whether or not I have left anybody to succeed me—anybody who will avenge the crime upon you and yours in years to come. Let me go as far as Henson Grange, and I pledge you my word I will return in the morning!'

"But Carfax laughed the suggestion to scorn. The court party were all liars and perjurers, and their word was not to be taken.

"'It is as I say,' Rupert Littimer repeated. 'My wife lies ill at Henson Grange and in sore trouble about me. And I should like to see my child before I die.'

"'Then you shall have the chance,' Carfax sneered. 'I will keep you a close prisoner here for two days, and if at the end of that time nothing happens you die. If, on the other hand, a child is born to you, then you shall go from here a free man.'

"And so the compact was made. Unfortunately, or fortunately, as the case may be, the story got abroad, and some indiscreet person carried the news to Dame Littimer. Ill as she was, she insisted upon getting up and going over to Carfax's camp at once. She had barely reached there before, well, long ere Rupert Littimer's probation was over, he was the father of a noble boy. They say that the Roundheads made a cradle for the child out of a leather breastplate, and carried it in triumph round the camp. And they held the furious Carfax to his word, and the story spread until it came to the ears of Prince Rupert.

"Then he went to see Dame Littimer, and from his own hand he drew what is known in our family as Prince Rupert's ring. He placed it in Dame Littimer's hand, there to remain for a year and a day, and when the year was up it was to be put aside for the bride of the heir of the house forever, to be worn by her until a year and a day had elapsed after her first child was born. And that has been done for all time, my aunt, Lady Littimer, being the last to wear it. After Frank was born it was put carefully away for his bride. But the great tragedy came, and until lately we fancied that the ring was lost to us forever. There is, in a few words, the story of Prince Rupert's ring. So far, it is quite common property."

Enid ceased to speak for a time. But it was evident that she had more to say.

"An interesting story," David said. "And a pretty one to put into a book, especially as it is quite true. But you have lost the ring, you say?"

"I fancied so until to-night," Enid replied. "Indeed, I hardly know what to think. Sometimes I imagined that Reginald Henson had it; at other times I imagined that it was utterly gone. But the mere fact that Henson possesses a copy practically convinces me that he has the original. As I said before, a true copy could not have been made from mere instructions. And if I could only get the original, our troubles are all over."

"But I don't see how the ring has anything to do with—"

"With the family dishonor. No, I am coming to that. We arrive at the time, seven years ago, when my aunt and Lord Littimer and Frank were all living happily at Littimer Castle. I told you just now that the Carfax estates adjoin the Littimer property. The family is still extant and powerful, but the feud between the two houses has never ceased. Of course, people don't carry on a vendetta these peaceful days, but the families have not visited for centuries.

"There was a daughter, Claire, whom Frank Littimer got to know by some means or other. But for the silly family feud, nobody would have known or cared, and there would have been an end to the matter, because Frank had always loved my sister, Chris, and we all knew that he would marry her some of these days.

"Lord Littimer was furiously angry when he heard that Frank and Claire had got on speaking terms. He imperiously forbade any further intercourse, and General Carfax did the same. The consequence was that these two foolish young people elected to fancy themselves greatly aggrieved, and so a kind of Romeo and Juliet, Montague and Capulet business sprang up. There were secret meetings—meetings entirely innocent, I believe, and a correspondence, which became romantic and passionate on Claire Carfax's side. The girl had fallen passionately in love with Frank, while he regarded the thing as a mere pastime. He did not know then, indeed, nobody seemed to know until afterwards, that there was insanity in the poor girl's family, though Hatherly Bell's friend, Dr. Heritage, who then had a practice near Littimer, warned us as well as he could. Nobody dreamed how far the thing had gone.

"Then those letters of Claire's fell into Lord Littimer's hands. He found them and locked them up in his safe. Frank, furious at being treated like a boy, swore to break open the safe and get his letters back. He did so, and in the same safe, and in the same drawer, was Prince Rupert's ring. When Lord Littimer missed the letters, he missed the ring, also, and a large sum of money in notes, that he had just received from his tenants. Frank had stolen the ring and the money, so it seemed. I shall not soon forget that day.

"After taking the letters Frank had gone straight to Moreton Wells, and it looked for a little time as though he had fled. Within an hour of the discovery of his loss Lord Littimer met Claire Carfax on the cliffs. She was wearing Prince Rupert's ring. Frank had sent it to her, she said. Anybody but a man in a furious passion would have seen that the girl was not responsible for her actions. Littimer told her the true circumstances of the case. She laughed at him in a queer, vacant way and fled through the woods. She went down to the beach, where she took a boat and rowed herself out into the bay. A mile or more from the shore she jumped into the water, and from that day to this nothing has been seen of poor Claire Carfax."

"Or the ring, either?" David asked.

"Or the ring, either. The same night Lady Littimer started after the boy. Littimer was going to have Frank prosecuted. Lady Littimer fled to Longdean Grange, where Frank joined her. Then my uncle turned up, and there was a scene. It is said that Lord Littimer struck his wife, but Frank says that she fell against his gesticulating fist. Anyway, it was the same as a blow, and Lady Littimer dropped on the floor, dragging a table down with her, flowers and china and all. You have seen that table in Longdean Grange. Since that time it has never been touched; the place has never been swept or dusted or garnished. You have seen my aunt, and you know what the shock has done for her—the shock and the steady persecutions of Reginald Henson."

(To Be Continued.)

WHY SHE SOUGHT HIM.

Judge Job Hedges the Victim of a Joke—Woman Came to Kill Him.

Judge Job Hedges was the victim of a joke last week, whose point he does not yet clearly see.

A woman came into his office and started on a tale of woe.

As he was in evident mental distress he had not the heart to turn her away, but sat listening patiently for a solid half hour to her rambling story.

Unable to make any sense out of it, he said, at length:

"Madam, I should be glad to help you in any way I can, but I can't see what you're driving at. Kindly tell me, in as few words as possible, the object of your visit."

"Certainly, sir," she answered, politely. "I went first to Lawyer Emanuel Friend, and he sent me here, and so I—"

"But the object of your visit?" interrupted Hedges.

"Oh, yes!" she said, recalling it, at last. "Now you speak of it, I remember. I came here to kill you."

"She is the thirty-fifth crank that man Friend has sent me in three months," sighed the judge, afterward. "I don't generally kick, but when it comes to killing it's time to draw the line."—New York World.

BILLIARD MAN'S LAMENT.

Craze for Ping-Pong Has Caused Billiard Halls to Be Deserted—Transformed Places.

"Ping-pong has undone us," complained the proprietor of a well known Broadway billiard parlor the other day. "Look at those $1,500 billiard tables, covered over with boards and turned into ping-pong tables. We had to do it. No help for it.

"Our customers grew fewer and fewer, and I was hardly making expenses. One day I saw several of my best patrons going into a place around the corner, and I read the reason on a cheap sign: 'Ping-Pong, 50 Cents an Hour.'

"A fellow who couldn't get together enough capital to buy one billiard table had set up a lot of cheap wooden tables and was coining money running a ping-pong place. I surrendered. Carpenters came next day, and fixed up half my fine billiard tables for ping-pong.

"Too bad, isn't it? I feel I ought to apologize ten times a day to every table. But my patrons are coming back. There's consolation in that."—New York Times.

Used to Carrying a Load.

Papa—Are you sure you can support my daughter in the style to which she is accustomed?

The suitor—Well, I will only say that yesterday I disposed of my automobile which I kept in good repair for over two years.

Papa (brokenly)—She is yours, my boy. I, too, once owned an auto.—Brooklyn Life.

Frightful Mortality.

"What do you mean by saying that base ball causes more deaths than all other sports combined?"

"It's responsible for the funerals of at least 10,000 grandmothers of office boys every year."—New York Evening World.

All in the Imagination.

He—She declares she wouldn't marry the best man living.

She—Probably she won't; but that won't prevent her from marrying, some day, the man whom she considers the best man living.—Philadelphia Press.

Ethel—Yes; and I guess I wasn't so naughty, after all, 'cause He didn't make any fuss about it.—Philadelphia Press.

STEPPED OFF TO MEET HER.

Amusing Incident Told by Louisville Courier-Journal.

Sunday when the excursion train from Paris filled with negroes bound for the camp meeting, reached this city, says the Louisville Courier-Journal, it passed the station and went through Cynthiana at the rate of about twenty-five miles an hour, the idea being to keep the crowd on board until the arrival at the grounds at the Falmouth pike crossing. Just before reaching Pike, street a negro man jumped from the train. Of course, the momentum of the cars carried him along at a terrific pace. His body was going so fast that his legs could not possibly keep up, but they made a valiant effort to do so, and such a lickity-split a negro never cut before. He galloped across the gutter at Pike street at tremendous speed, barely missed a telephone pole, flew up into the air, turned a couple of somersaults, and landed all in a heap in the middle of the street. His eyes were as big as saucers and seemed to pop out. As he slowly gathered himself together his trousers were split, his knees were bruised and bleeding, his arms were wrenched, his coat-tails were in tatters, and his battered stiff hat was mashed down tight over his ears.

At that moment a negro girl who knew him came along.

"Why, how do you do, Mr. Hopkins?" she exclaimed.

"Why, how do you do?" he answered in deep, calm tones, with carefully measured accent. "How do you do? You are looking quite wo-wo-well. I just stopped off the train to meet you."

THE BANK BOOK.

I do not ask for books of covers bright,
And colors blent in many a cunning weave—
Vain books, which flaunt abroad, with gilt bedight,
And wear their hearts upon their very sleeve.
And which, when once within we've briefly peered
To see why they so gallantly should flout,
We find to be, perchance as we had feared,
Hollow and empty, and turned inside out!

Give me, instead, a sturdy volume, small,
Well thumbed, of covers modest, sober-hued;
Not shouting its own praises, but withal,
A volume plain, with honest worth imbued.
Wherein but pleasing truths are paramount,
Impaired by no hare-brained extravagance;
Presenting sundry facts of good account,
Dealing with economics and finance.

A trusty volume, which from day to day
Is opened for my special benefit;
Which tells me things no other volume may (Because, forsooth, 'tis by a teller writ);
And when a weighty enterprise I plan,
Or when a pleasure I would have, unless
The gods forbid—my book I quickly scan,
And straight its pages answer no or yes.

—The Ladies' World.

Told of Deaf Irish Dean.

A dean whose name may not be given is nearly stone deaf, says Temple Bar. His deafness is said to lead to malapropos answers. Staying at a friend's house, he was asked if he would like to have a pair of slippers. His face assumed an expression of portentous solemnity, and he made reply: "That question must be reserved for the general synod." On another occasion he was asked what family he had. "Twenty-six, and an immediate prospect of a considerable increase." He thought he had been asked as to the number of children at his school. Just one more story of my deaf dean. He is reported to be famous for changing horses, and not to be particularly lucky in horseflesh. Some one asked him how Mrs. —— was. The reply was peculiar: "She is vicious in the extreme; she won't stand the curb, and is strongly inclined to run away." Needless to say, he was not referring to the good gray mare, who, no doubt, was going very steadily in double harness.

Another Lincoln Story.

The story is told that Lincoln was one day walking through a field when he suddenly saw that he was pursued by a mad bull.

The nearest object of escape was an old strawstack, and Lincoln made for it with lightning speed. Reaching it before the bull caught up to him, he commencing running around it, with the bull in mad pursuit.

After several revolutions Lincoln discovered that his long legs had covered the ground faster than he had hoped, and a bright idea occurred to him. A few more strides brought him within reach of the bull's tail, which he clutched and the two went flying around faster than before.

It soon began to dawn upon his bullship that he was the one pursued, and he began to bellow with fear and disappointment, when Lincoln exclaimed, "See here, darn you, you began this fight, I didn't."

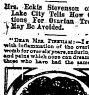
What Results from Electricity.

Although the predictions freely made a few years ago that the development of electric traction would quickly drive horses from the field of labor have not been fulfilled, yet the Electrical Review cites statistics to prove that the disappearance of the horse is actually taking place, although so slowly as not to attract much attention. In Paris the number of horses fell off about 6 per cent between 1901 and 1902. In London the decrease in the same time was 10 per cent. In Berlin, Vienna and St. Petersburg a similar falling off is shown by the census of horses. In New York it is estimated that the number of horses has decreased 33 per cent in the last twenty years.

THE SURGEON'S KNIFE

Mrs. Eckis Stevenson of Salt Lake City Tells How Operations For Ovarian Troubles May Be Avoided.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I suffered with inflammation of the ovaries and womb for over six years, enduring aches and pains which none can dream of but those who have had the same experience.



MRS. ECKIS STEVENSON.

Hundreds of dollars went to the doctor and the druggist. I was simply a walking medicine chest and a physical wreck. My sister residing in Ohio wrote me that she had been cured of womb trouble by using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and advised me to try it. I then discontinued all other medicines and gave your Vegetable Compound a thorough trial. Within four weeks nearly all pain had left me; I rarely had headaches, and my nerves were in a much better condition, and I was cured in three months, and this avoided a terrible surgical operation."—MRS. ECKIS STEVENSON, 250 So. State St., Salt Lake City, Utah.—$5000 forfeit if above testimonial is not genuine.

Remember every woman is cordially invited to write to Mrs. Pinkham if there is anything about her symptoms she does not understand. Mrs. Pinkham's address is Lynn, Mass.

Not Frightened.

"Remember," said the patient adviser, "that rich have wings."

"Well," answered the more or less cynical person, "wings never hurt anybody that I am aware of."—Washington Star.

HEARTH AND BOUDOIR

SOME FASHIONABLE FANCIES AND FASHION FRILLS.

Early Fall Coat That Will Soon be a Necessary Garment—Some Hints on the Collar—A Paris Novelty—For Cool September Days.

Swagger Collar.

The collar is a paramount essential in early fall costumes. Of course, the stock, or throat dressing of any sort, is always an important matter in the treatment of a woman's temperament and her gowns, so the term "collar" as a perfectly new idea, applies to something recently sprung by fashion builders. This "something" in latest importations is an exorbitant, bertha-like affair cut low in the neck and worn round the shoulders. In the front it shows a relationship with revers and fichus. You can easily understand that this new collar gives a chance for original voluminousness.

A deep type of collar in yellow silk batiste is embroidered in black and cream silk and has insets of ecru lace edged with yellow silk. It adds distinction to a gown of tobac brown peau de soie.

Another collar is of black silk mousseline over black taffeta. It is embroidered in white silk and spangled with tiniest cut jet. The edges are finished with black silk lace an inch and a half wide loosely ruffled at the joining.

For Cool September Days.

Miss matched effects are not very popular this season with two notable exceptions. One is the covert coat, to be worn with skirts of dark blue or black mohair or serge, and the other is the skirt of shepard's checked cheviot to be worn with close fitting body coats of dark blue or black matching the check. In this costume the coloring is black and white, the material being braid in radiating tucks, each of which shows a tiny piping of black cloth, and is stitched with black Corticelli silk to within about twelve inches of the edge, where it is freed to give the flare. The little close fitting Eton coat is made of the black cloth and shows the favorite velvet faced coat collar. The revers are faced with white moire, and ornamented with a single row of fancy braid.

A Paris Novelty.

One of the taking Paris novelties is a flat-topped pyramid braid, either in one color or in black and white. Two or three fine silk cords outline the pyramid, and many dressmakers in Paris are putting the braid in double widths upon the material, thus forming squares. Another braid is a heavy, wide basket weave in brilliant silk, and still another is a scallop which has deep points in its upper edge and is bordered on the scallop with a cord and loop-edged braid. This comes in fourteen styles and colors, and in sizes varying from one-fourth of an inch to an inch. Scythe braid in five sizes, with corded effects, is another popular braid for fall, and button effects in braids, together with all the flat braids of irregular and pointed outlines promise to hold their own the coming season.

An Early Fall Coat.

The Directoire Eton front, arranged to be worn open or closed as the exigencies of Dame Fashion and our equally capricious climate demand, is a special feature of many of the coats of the season, whether long or short. This natty little coat is an exceptionally happy example of this design. It is made of satin finished cloth of a brilliant dark blue color, all the edges being finished with a strap of tan broadcloth, stitched with Corticelli spool silk in self color. The coat collar is bordered by a similar strap, but the facing of revers is of white moire antique. The buttons are very handsome examples of baroque.

Quite Informal.

A new social fad for the fall season is the "afternoon surprise." One member of a certain set makes it her business to know when a certain other member will be at home on an afternoon. Then arrangements are made for the "surprise." This surprise is made up from six to twelve women, all friends of the prospective surprised hostess, a tea given by the guests, and a gift to the lady of the house by those who entertain her and themselves on her premises. Little "surprises" of any jolly social sort may be introduced as "varieties."

Fashionable Frills.

White mousseline is banishing the green veil from the smart hat.

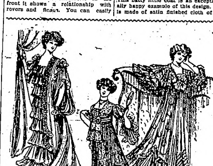
In fall suitings is a sleek and silky shot stuff with a nap like velvet.

The size of the season's hat renders a parasol a mere accessory of dress.

An imported gown distinctly presages the return of short gown and petticoat.

Pique is less modish than linens and crashes.

The lace and embroidery vogue makes a yoke almost a necessity of the modish gown.



Tea and house gowns of the showrooms are on the most elaborate order, in all manner of handsome materials from the heavy to the transparent. Most of them reflect empire styles, though there are a few models tight fitting at the waist, these usually in cashmere or henrietta cloth. Moire in black, white and delicate shades is a new material for these gowns, and, whatever its shade, is beautifully trimmed. Lace, all kinds of embroidery, cording, braid, rose ruchings, chiffon, mousseline de soie and insertions appear among the trimmings. Ribbon also enters largely into their make-up, and some are alternate bands of satin ribbon and insertion, while in other gowns the ribbon is velvet.

Three different shades of chiffon are used for some tea gowns. Thus a foundation is white, a middle chiffon is delicate green and the outside one is rose pink. Fluffy ruffles trim the bottom of such a dress very prettily.

No Flying Trip for Him.

King Edward VII., as is well known, is much interested in matters relating to flying ships, and especially is he interested in Santos-Dumont and his efforts. A few weeks before the coronation it was extensively rumored that the king had quite made up his mind to accompany the clever young Brazilian in one of his aerial flights; that he had, in fact, made all arrangements for his travel through the air. A certain well known scientific peer asked his majesty one evening, after dinner, whether the rumor concerning the royal aerial voyage was really true.

"Now, Lord ——," answered King Edward laughingly, "is it likely that I would take this flying ship trip? The coronation has not yet taken place, and I can assure you that I wish to wear my earthly crown before I put on the other."—New York Times.

She was Persuaded to Try St. Jacobs Oil, and All Pain Disappeared Immediately.

It is undoubtedly a fact beyond dispute that the strongest advertising medium the proprietors have is that of people who recommend others to use St. Jacobs Oil. People who have themselves experienced a happy result which invariably follows the use of this great remedy, show their gratitude by recommending it to those whom they know are similarly affected. This is the case of Margaret Lee, of 71 Brightfield road, Lee Green, Wis.

"Having suffered from muscular rheumatism for years, and not receiving any benefit from various remedies, I used St. Jacobs Oil; pain and soreness removed at once; no return of rheumatism." St. Jacobs Oil is sold in 25 cts. and 50 cts. sizes by all druggists.

Slightly Mixed.

"I had kidney trouble very bad, in fact, I suffered so much that, for days at a time I could not get out of the chair where I had been sitting, without assistance.

"I cannot describe the pains I suffered, for they were something fearful.

"About seven or eight months ago I began using Dodd's Kidney Pills, and very soon found that they were helping me.

"I can truthfully say that they have done me more good than all the other medicines I have ever taken.

"I have been greatly benefited by them, and it is my desire to let others know, so that if anyone is suffering as I have suffered they may know where a cure may be found."

POLITICAL NOTES.

Next Tuesday is the day set for the primary election and every patriotic citizen should turn out and cast his ballot for the nomination of his favorite candidate. While a great deal of the fight is centered upon the nomination of a congressman, there are other fights in which the voters should take an active interest.

As would be natural to expect, the fight for congressman in this district has centered between two candates—Ezra G. Valentine and Havor Steenerson. While there are three other candidates,—Grindeland, Comstock and Smith—it is not thought by good judges that these three combined will receive over thirty per cent of the vote cast. Both Mr. Valentine and Mr. Steenerson are strong in all sections of the district, and the voter who has a choice between the two should vote for one of the other, if he has a choice. There are many reasons why we believe Mr. Valentine is more entitled to the vote of the people, chief of which is his well known reputation for honesty ability and that he is a worker, yet we will not quarrel with those who have different views. In less than a week the voters will have decided the question and we are perfectly willing to abide by the result

A. K. Strand, of Norman county was in the city the first of the week. Mr. Strand is a candidate for the Republican nomination for state senator and he says he is meeting with a great deal of success throughout the district.

Prof. James Wilson was down to Red Lake Falls last week looking after his candidacy for the Republican nomination for county superintendent of schools. He is greatly pleased with the support being given him in that section of the county, and says that he will receive a good vote down there.

J. J. Weeks is in the country this week looking after his candidacy for the Republican nomination for clerk of court. Mr. Weeks is a hustler and if he secures the nomination will undoubtedly be elected by a large majority.

Halvor Steenerson will be in Thief River Falls today and at 2 o'clock this afternoon will address a meeting in the Odd Fellows' hall regarding his candidacy for congress in this district.

L. H. Bailey, of Bemidji, was in the city Tuesday in the interests of the candidacy of E. J. Swedback for the nomination for state senator. Mr. Bailey states that Mr. Swedback will vote for the reelection of Moses E. Clapp for U. S. senator, and he is the only candidate for the Republican nomination that will pledge himself for Clapp. Thief River Falls feel very grateful for the services Mr. Clapp has rendered this city in the past, and now propose to stand by the man who will vote for Clapp's re-election

The last issue of the Red Lake Falls Gazette contains an excellent picture of Thomas Germo Republican candidate for county attorney of Red Lake County. Mr. Germo is a former Blue Earth county boy, a graduate of the law department of the State University and withal a man who can be relied upon. The voters of Red Lake County will make no mistake in selecting a man of Mr. Germo's make up and well known ability.—Blue Earth County Enterprise.

The Beltrami County News has the following to say of E. J. Swedback Republican candidate for state senator for the 61st Legislation District:

E. J. Swedback is making an aggressive campaign for the senatorial nomination, and has strong hopes of securing substantial recognition of the approaching primaries. Mr. Swedback is a self-made man, who has by years of industry and toil built up a flourishing business on a sound financial basis. His honesty has never been questioned, and his past is an open book to all who care to look it up. He is in thorough accord with Governor Van Sant in his position on the merger question, as against combines of competing lines of railroads.

Red Lake County Republicans can make no mistake in voting for Mr. Swedback.

W. F. Street, of Bemidji, candidate for the Republican nomination for state senator, was in the city between trains Monday.

Thomas Germo, Republican candidate for county attorney, was in the city last week. Mr. Germo says he is meeting with a great deal of success all over the county.

Cyrus Little Smith, candidate for the Republican nomination for congressman from this district, addressed the voters of this city Tuesday evening at Odd Fellows hall. Mr. Smith is an interesting speaker and those who attended were well paid. He said that he had been fighting battles for the Republican party for years, while the big chief of Crookston was always too busy to attend Republican meetings, but now that everything was Republican he was endeavoring to secure the plum. Mr. Smith gave an interesting and intelligent discussion of the trust problem, and ending by saying that he did not insult anyone's intelligence by soliciting their vote upon the grounds of his birthplace the church he attended, or the brand of whiskey he drank.

E. J. SWEDBACK,

Candidate for the Republican nomination for state senator. Mr Swedback is the only candidate for the Republican nomination that will openly state he will vote for the re-election of Moses E. Clapp for U. S. senator, the other two candidates, Mr. Street and Mr. Strand refused to commit themselves while in the city the first of the week. If you want to see Moses E. Clapp continue to be our U. S. senator, vote for E. J. Swedback.

W. F. STREET, Candidate for the Republican Nomination for State Senator.

And there even was a city in a county which is called Beltrami, yea, even unto the city which is the home of Bemidji, of the tribe known as Chippewas, one whose surname was Street. And he was of those known as lawyers and he was also a scribe and wielded the pen of iron and the people said, one unto another, "This is a wise man: yea, verily, he is a learned man: let us elect him to interpret the laws according to the statutes of the Republicans and democrats—yea, verily, even of the Populists. And it was even so. And this man, whose surname was Street, was elected and the people were pleased thereat and they elected him many times for they said, Behold, he a good and faithful servant." And he waxed popular and gathered unto himself many shekels of gold and silver. And the people, seeing that this man was honorable and upright, said, "Let us put upon him the toga of a senator, that he may sit among the law-givers of the state and he will bring us to obtain that which is our due and lift up his voice for the people who abide within his district and he will not sell out our birthright for a mess of pottage." Now it came to pass that there also resided in this city of Bemidji, one L. H. B. Ally, who was also of the profession of the law; and he was exceedingly wroth at Street for he was a jealous man, and he desired, yea, with a great desire, to occupy the place of Street with the people and he sought to set the people against Street, but without avail, for great was the love of the people for Street. So this L. H. B. Ally went hence from his office, which is in the city of Bemidji, and when he came nigh unto his henchmen he spoke unto them, saying, "Behold the people would put the toga of senator upon Street. Go thou out amongst them and tell them they know not what they want; we will give them for senator, one Swedback, yea, even he of the logs and lumber." But the people, when they heard these things, gave L. H. B. Ally the horse laugh and spake unto him, saying, "Cheese it," "cut it out," "go 'way down and sit back," and such like expressions! "Verily, we will send to that city which is called St. Paul, the longest, liveliest and most picturesque Street to be found." And Street wot not that B. Ally would have smote and slain him politically; neither did he care a continental. And thus endeth the first chapter.—Farley Telegram.

STEENERSON

Nominated for Congress by the Republicans.

Halvor Steenerson was undoubtedly nominated for congressman by the Republicans on Tuesday. Figures furnished the News by the Crookston Journal show that out of 98 voting precincts in the Ninth congressional district, casting about two-thirds of the Republican vote, Steenerson has 3393; Valentine, 1563; Grindeland, 2216; Comstock, 602; Smith 278. It is thought that the total vote will be about 11000, and that Steenerson will have a majority of nearly 800.

Indians Must Do It.

Secretary Hitchcock has decided that dead and down operations shall be conducted on the diminished Red Lake reservation, but that lumbermen are not to have any hand in them except to buy the logs after they have been cut and banked. Accordingly, Indian Commissioner Jones has instructed Major Scott to cut the dead and down timber this winter, using only Indian labor and paraphernalia, to be purchased and paid for from the proceeds of the logs. Secretary Hitchcock decided to adopt this system because of the trouble and experience with the lumbermen two years ago when they cut a large amount of green timber under their dead and down contracts, for which payment was demanded but which has not been paid as yet.

In a recent report to the department, Major Scott pointed out two methods of operating. One was to let contracts, as was done two years ago, the other to have the operations conducted under his immediate supervision, the logging outfits to be purchased by him and Indian labor employed. He said there was one objection to the latter method, however, because the outfits could not be sold at any where near there real value next spring, and there would consequently be considerable loss. The secretary, however, decided that it would be better to take the chance of loss on the outfits rather than to have the lumberman cut the green timber under the guise of cutting the dead and down. Major Scott has been authorized to begin work as soon as he can. He estimated that there was between twelve and fifteen billion feet of logs on the ground for which the Indians can get anywhere from $5 to $12 per thousand feet.

COUNTY TICKET,

Men Nominated at the Primaries Tuesday.

The vote at the primary election in Red Lake county Tuesday was generally very light. The Republicans polled the largest vote and the Democrats were second.

The vote of People's Party was very much less than was expected. The following were nominated by the various parties for county offices. The Republican is given first, the Democrat second and the Popu list last:

Auditor—O. H. Peters, Adam Zeh and James Ford.

Sheriff—Charles Sampson, W. J. Kelley and Arthur Lizee.

Register of Deeds—Thomas Crompe, and Sam Gibeau.

County Attorney—Thomas Germo and F. A. Grady.

Judge of Probate—James McIntyre, N. W. Tarrant and Ed Moran.

Surveyor—W. C. Smiley and P. O. Hagglund.

Clerk of Court—J. J. Weeks and Joseph Perrault.

Supt. of Schools—James A. Wilson and Frank Jeffers.

Other Results.

It is thought that James Tawney receives the Republican nomination for congressman in the First district; Mike Dowling in the Seventh district; Loren Fletcher; in the Fifth district; J. Adam Bede in the Eighth district and C. B. Buckman in the Sixth district.

A. D. Stephens won in his fight for state senator in the Polk county district. His oppenent was Hugh Thompson of East Grand Forks.

It is hard to tell who received the Republican nomination for senate, but it is understood that A. K. Strand, of Norman county, is in the lead. Swedback carried this county.

EMPEROR SAYS GOOD-BYE.

Tells American Generals That He Is Interested in Us.

Berlin, Sept. 14.—Emperor William in saying good-bye to Generals Corbin, Young and Wood yesterday remarked that he was especially interested in the Americans. He admired President Roosevelt unmeasuredly. He admired his versatility, courage, power for hard work and insight into the needs of his country. His majesty added that he watched Mayor Seth Low's administration of New York because he thought it important to the commercial world that New York city should be well governed. The emperor also said he was very sorry Andrew D. White, the United States ambassador, was leaving his court. He had the most cordial feeling for him personally because of the man he is and for his services in fostering good will between Germany and the United States. Gen. Corbin had an opportunity to present President Roosevelt's message about the St. Louis exposition and Emperor William said that he would see that Germany had a good representation.

The State Day by Day.

GOV. RAMSEY'S BIRTHDAY.

Friends Call to Congratulate Him on the 87th Anniversary of His Birth.

Friends of Alexander Ramsey, Minnesota's venerable war governor, called on him Monday at his residence in St. Paul to congratulate him upon the arrival of his eighty-seventh birthday. Although Gov. Ramsey doesn't get about quite as actively as he did in '61, he still retains a surprising amount of vigor and vitality for one of his age. His mental faculties remain undimmed.

Gov. Ramsey was born near Harrisburg, Pa., Sept. 8, 1815, his father being of Scotch, and his mother of German descent. At the age of ten he became an orphan. A relative assisted him to obtain an education and later started him in business. He afterward attempted to learn the carpenter's trade, but his love for reading and study triumphed, and he decided to enter the law. He was admitted to practice in 1839. He took a prominent part in the presidential campaign of William Henry Harrison. He went to congress from his district in 1843 and was re-elected in 1844, his term ending in 1847. President Zachary Taylor offered Mr. Ramsey the governorship of the Territory of Minnesota April 2, 1849. The new governor arrived with his family May 27, 1849, and issued a proclamation four days later, declaring the territory organized. Among his notable official acts was the negotiation of the treaty of 1851 with the Sioux at Traverse de Sioux, and with the Chippewas at Pembina. He was elected governor of the state in 1859 and was re-elected in 1861. He was made United States senator in 1863, served twelve years in that capacity, and was afterward appointed secretary of war and the navy.

LARGEST ON RECORD.

August Iron Ore Shipments From the Northern Mines.

Iron ore shipments at Duluth last month were the largest on record, amounting to 2,400,000 tons from Minnesota mines and 1,600,000 tons from Michigan and Wisconsin. Minnesota mines have so far this year sent down the lakes the enormous total of 9,710,000 gross tons, which is more than 2,000,000 tons greater than to the same late last year.

The Duluth, Missabe & Northern road has ordered nine locomotives of ninety tons each, much like the large locomotives of the Duluth & Iron Range road. With these in use the road will be able to increase its loads by about 800 tons.

At the Great Western a large pump has been added to the boilers at work unwatering, and the mine will be ready to hoist ore in a month. The Oliver Iron Mining company has taken over the McGillis property and has commenced work there.

The Minnesota Iron company (United States Steel corporation) is opening a tenth mine in the Hibbing district. It is to be called the St. Clair and is located on the se 1-4 of the nw 1-4 of section 23, T. 58, R. 20, the town that is furnishing the finest ore on the range. The St. Clair was bought in fee a year or more ago from Messrs. Congdon & Hartley for something more than $400,000. The company is erecting at Hibbing a fine, large two-story office building and laboratory, and all its operations in the district are under the supervision of Pentecost Mitchell, a well posted and thoroughly competent mining manager.

SET FIRE AT JEFFERS.

Two Men Arrested, One of Whom Makes Confession.

Jeffers, Minn., Sept. 11.—J. G. Curtis of Echo and A. Hauss, who has been working on a farm near Echo, have been arrested, charged with setting the Central hotel on fire two weeks ago, which caused a loss to A. A. Faust's general merchandise store and implement house and Nels Anderson's restaurant building occupied by Fred Trowbridge. Hauss has made a complete confession, claiming that he was hired by Curtis to do the deed, but Curtis denies the whole story. Hauss has apparently proved his story in so many instances that it is believed a question of only a short time before Curtis will break down. Sheriff Ness brought Hauss here yesterday to find the bottle which contained the kerosene oil with which he started the fire, and the key to the building that Curtis gave him. He found both of these without any trouble. It is expected that other surprises will be brought out at their examinations, which will take place at Windom in a few days.

EDITRESS A BRIDE.

Rush City Woman Publisher Is Married to Col. J. F. Stone.

Rush City, Minn., Sept. 11. — Mrs. Franklyn W. Lee, editor of the Rush City Post, was married last night to Col. John F. Stone of Pine City. The wedding occurred at the bride's residence in the presence of immediate friends, Rev. Spicer officiating. The groom became prominently known as the proprietor of the Pioneer hotel at Pine City, which he conducted many years. The bride enjoys a reputation as a leading newspaper woman, having successfully conducted the Rush City Post since the death of her first husband, Franklyn W. Lee, five years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Stone will reside at Rush City.

WORK FOR GRAND JURY.

Winona's Investigating Body Has a Flood of Criminal Business.

Winona, Minn., Sept. 11.—The grand jury for the September term of the district court will have more cases to consider than any jury for the past fifteen years. There are more cases on the criminal calendar this year than civil cases, a condition never before experienced in this county. There are three cases in which charges of murder or manslaughter are to be investigated.

INDIAN SCHOOLS.

Facilities on White Earth Reserve Are Overtaxed.

The schools on the White Earth reservation opened last week with a large attendance. When the Mille Lacs Indians are removed here there will be added to the school population between 200 and 300 children. The present school capacity is sufficient for about 400 pupils. Proposals are now being advertised for for furnishing and delivering the necessary material for the construction and completion of two day schools with a capacity of thirty pupils each. A day school is now being maintained at the agency with an average attendance of about forty. This school does not differ in any way from the ordinary district school in rural white communities. The government furnishes the necessary books, school furniture and fuel and pays the teacher. In the day schools away from the agency it is customary to have a teacher and a housekeeper, and the children are given a noonday meal and taught in the ordinary domestic duties. This plan is likely to be followed in the new day schools to be erected.

Agents from the different non-reservation schools have been on the reservation collecting pupils for their respective schools. Many pupils have been transferred from the reservation schools to the larger Indian training schools located off the reservation. Some have gone to Riggs' Institute in South Dakota, to Genoa Indian training school at Genoa, Neb., to Pipestone school at Pipestone, Minn., Pierre, S. D., Lawrence, Kan., and Chilocco, Okla. There are now about 300 pupils belonging to this reservation in attendance at these non-reservation schools. The education of these pupils is costing the government about $50,000 a year, and the schools on the reservation are maintained at an annual cost of about $60,000, so that more than $100,000 is being annually expended for the education of the White Earth Chippewas.

Under the new ruling of the Indian office no child of more than one-eighth Indian blood who does not live on an Indian reservation and have an allotment there, can be enrolled as a pupil in any Indian school. Any pupil who runs away from an Indian school forfeits all school privileges unless he returns at his own expense and completes his time.

GOOD ROADS BOOM

May Be Expected—Two Views of Convention Results.

The success of the good roads convention is declared not only by the officials that have managed it, but by the farmers that have attended it.

Col. Martin Dodge, director of public road inquiries in the department of agriculture, who represents the federal government, said:

"We have been giving these good roads demonstrations for the past two years and we have visited eleven states, Michigan, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Alabama. We have held one and sometimes several conventions in each state, but nowhere have we held a convention that attracted so widespread and intelligent an interest; nowhere have the speakers been of like importance, representing as they have here both the church and the state through men of such reputation as Archbishop Ireland and Gov. Van Sant. We expect that immense profit to the Northwest will follow the series of demonstrations that we intend to make, but of course we should like to accept many invitations that we must refuse. To succeed at any point we require the cooperation of three factors—the federal government, the railways and the local community. Here we have been very fortunate. The government has sent to our assistance Supt. Machan of the rural free delivery service and the local community has been strongly represented, also the fair association.

"I am convinced that you have a marvelous agricultural outlook in this state; not only is the farming population extremely intelligent and progressive, but the soil is very rich and there is an absence that surprises me of all such obstructions as rocks, forests, mountains, swamps and areas of untillable land. In fact, after passing many months in the Southeastern states, I can fairly say that you have made more progress within fifty years than the population down there has made in 200."

LOSS BY POTATO ROT.

Cold Weather Retards Corn—Climate and Crop Bulletin for Past Week.

The summary of the government's climate and crop service bulletin for Minnesota for the past week follows:

There were light showers on the 2d, 4th and 5th from Polk county northward, heavier rains in the eastern half on the 5th and light rains in the southern half on the evening of the 7th or morning of the 8th. The heaviest rains during the week were in the southeastern counties on the 5th. Every day of the week was moderately cool, except the 7th and on the morning of the 4th there were light frosts, which caused no injury except in a few much exposed places, where flax was frosted a little. There was little or no rain during the week in the middle west and southwest, and in parts of the central portion, and there stacking and threshing have progressed well, but elsewhere in the state all work in grain was hindered and delayed by the showers. There is still a little late flax to be cut in different parts of the state. Potatoes are being dug. The potato rot is causing considerable loss. The cool weather is retarding the ripening of corn and the late varieties will require good weather until Sept. 20 to ripen. Some flint corn is being cut in small quantities from Crow Wing county southward along the Mississippi. There is a good deal of corn this season which will be caught by frost unless cold weather holds off unusually late. As soon as this corn is frosted it should be cut without delay, and if possible before rain, in order that it may be saved in the best condition.

MARKS MANY HISTORIC SPOTS

Monuments and Tablets Erected on the Sites of Incidents Connected With the Great Sioux Outbreak.

The Minnesota Valley Statistical society has recently issued a pamphlet, historical and descriptive, of the monuments and tablets erected by the society in the Upper Minnesota valley, which is not only an interesting publication, but an important contribution to the history of the state. The society was organized at Morton, Renville county, in 1895, and its declared general purpose is the presentation of the authentic history of the Minnesota valley, including the preservation of historic sites and the commemoration of historic events, etc. The president of the society, Hon. Charles D. Gilfillan of Morgan, Redwood county, is an old and prominent citizen of the state, and the work of the organization, especially the incidental expenses, has been almost wholly under his patronage.

C. D. GILFILLAN.

The publication referred to was written by Maj. R. I. Holcombe, the society's historian. It describes the various monuments and tablets built by the society to preserve the sites of certain incidents and in honor of the devotion and important services of some of the characters, both whites and Indians, connected with the great Sioux Indian outbreak of the fall of 1862, in that part of the state, now embraced in Renville and Redwood counties.

According to the society's pamphlet, it is not generally understood, even by the citizens of Minnesota, that the violent outbreak and rebellion of the Sioux Indians in this state, in the fall of 1862, constituted, in many respects the most formidable and important Indian war in American history. More Indians were engaged, more whites were killed, and more property was destroyed than in any other conflict or series of conflicts with the savages since the first settlement of the country.

In any former Indian wars not more, in the aggregate, than 500 white persons lost their lives. In the few days of the Minnesota massacre 868 men, women and children perished by actual count. Those killed whose remains were never found and the soldiers and citizens killed or mortally wounded in the hostile engagements with the Indians made the total death list number at least 950. The value of property destroyed was fully $1,000,000.

The massacres of Wyoming and Cherry Valley, which have been so often described, so befittingly commemorated in song and story and monument, and whose details are well known, are hardly to be compared in character and extent with the massacres of Sacred Heart and Beaver Creek, of which not one American in a hundred has ever heard. The defenses of New Ulm, Fort Ridgely and Birch Coulie were as gallant episodes as any that are recorded in the military annals of the Republic, and yet the American historian commonly gives them but the briefest mention, or omits them entirely from his pages.

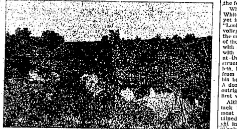
The outbreak occurred in August, 1862, during a stirring and important period of the War of the Rebellion, when the attention of the country was engaged with the operations of the Union and Confederate armies in Virginia and Maryland, in Kentucky and Tennessee, and in Missouri and Arkansas. Writers and chroniclers of the time gave but passing attention and comment to what were alluded to as the "Indian troubles in Minnesota," and busied themselves with the greater events, involving the life of the nation.

The most important scene of the outbreak was at the Redwood Agency (or the "Lower Agency") of the Sioux, on the south bank of the Minnesota, in what is now Redwood county, two miles southeast of the village of Morton. There were two Sioux agencies, the Redwood and the Yellow Medicine, the latter situated near the confluence of the Yellow Medicine river with the Minnesota, and often called the Upper Agency. The Redwood agency was named for the little river about ten miles to the westward, or up the Minnesota from the Agency.

All about the former site of the Redwood Agency is classic ground. Here the great Indian reign of terror fairly commenced, and here, after it was suppressed, many of its participants were tried by a military commission for their crimes. Above and below, or westward and eastward, in the near neighborhood, were the Indian villages of the chiefs, Little Crow, Blue Earth, Traveling Hail, and Big Eagle to the west, and those of Wacouta, Wabasha, and Hushasha, from whence the sudden attack upon the unsuspecting white people of the Agency was made. At and in the vicinity of the Agency site, the Historical society has placed several monuments and tablets.

The first victim of the savage onslaught upon the Lower Agency was the most prominent of the entire outbreak, Hon. James W. Lynd. This gentleman was a native of Baltimore, born in 1830, but was reared and educated at Cincinnati. He had received a college education, and was a man of accomplishments and ability. Becoming interested in Indian studies, he came to Minnesota in 1853 and located among the Sioux. He thoroughly mastered the Indian language, and spent years in the study of the history and general character of the Sioux or Dakota tribe, and for some time prior to his death he had been engaged in revising for publication the manuscript of an elaborate work containing the results of his studies and researches. Under the circumstances, the greater part of this manuscript was lost. He was a man of versatile talents, had been an editor, lecturer, public speaker, and was a member of the Minnesota State senate in 1861. He was buried where he fell, in front of a trading house door, and the society has erected an appropriate monument over his grave.

In 1863, the Indian who killed Mr. Lynd was captured in what is now North Dakota by the scouts under Maj. Joseph R. Brown. His Indian name was Waukon Wasechon Heiyadin, meaning One Who Travels Like a Scared White Man,—or one who walks like a missionary. He was taken to Davenport, Iowa, where the other Indian prisoners were confined, and died in prison the following year.



PRESENT VIEW OF THE REDWOOD FERRY BATTLE GROUND.

Note.— At the time of the battle the ferry rope ran between the figures 1 and 2. Capt. Marsh and his men were ambuscaded on the north side of the river on the ground shown immediately in the rear of figure 2.

The society marked with tablets and "markers" the former sites of trading houses at the Agency, the house where the Indians captured were tried for murder, rape and robbery, Chief Little Crow's house, and the site of Camp Pope, about two miles west of Redwood Falls.

The Lower Agency was located on the high bluff bank of the Minnesota river. A road had been graded down the bluff and led across the river to Fort Ridgely and the country below. The river was crossed by a ferry. The north ferry landing was the scene of the ambuscade of Capt. Marsh and his company (Company B, Fifth Minnesota Volunteers) on the afternoon of the first day of the outbreak, when the captain and twenty-three of his men were killed and five wounded. This affair is called in history the Battle of Redwood Ferry, and to mark the scene, the society erected a substantial granite monument with an appropriate inscription.

The society's pamphlet gives an interesting account of the deadly Indian ambuscade at Redwood Ferry. From this it seems that the startling news of the tragic scenes at the Lower Agency reached Fort Ridgely at about 10 o'clock on that day (Aug. 18, 1862,) but the extent and formidable character of the great Indian uprising were not understood until several hours later. The messenger who bore the shocking tidings was J. C. Dickinson, the proprietor of a boarding house at the Agency, and who brought with him a wagon load of refugees, nearly all women and children. Capt. Marsh was in command of the fort, with his company (B, Fifth Minnesota,) as a garrison. Lieut. T. J. Sheehan, with Company C of the same regiment, had been dispatched to Fort Ripley, on the Upper Mississippi, near St. Cloud.

Sending a messenger with orders to Lieut. Sheehan, recalling him to Fort Ridgely and informing him that the Indians were "raising h—l at the Lower Agency," Capt. Marsh at once prepared to go to the scene of what seemed to be the sole locality of the troubles. He was not informed, and had no instinctive or derived idea of the magnitude of the outbreak. Leaving about twenty men under Lieut. T. P. Gere to hold the fort until Lieut. Sheehan's return, Capt. Marsh, with about fifty men of his company and the old Indian interpreter, Peter Quinn, set out for the Agency, distant about twelve miles—or, as the road then ran, perhaps fourteen miles—to the northwest. On leaving Fort Ridgely the captain and the interpreter were mounted on mules; the men were on foot, but the captain had directed that teams, with extra ammunition and empty wagons for the transportation of the men, should follow, and these wagons overtook the command "about three miles out."

In due time the little command came to the Redwood ferry, but there is confusion in the printed accounts as to the exact time. As the men were in wagons the greater part of the way, the distance, allowing for sundry halts, ought to have been compassed in four hours, at farthest. Half way across the bottom the captain ordered the men from the wagons and marched them on foot, perhaps a mile, to the ferry house and landing.

Meanwhile, on the way, the soldiers had met fifty fugitives from and seen the bodies of fourteen victims of the massacre; yet the commander, an officer of good judgment generally, and of some knowledge of the Indians, did not seem to comprehend the situation. The language of his dispatch to Lieut. Sheehan indicates that he believed the trouble was local and confined to the Redwood Agency. His conduct in marching straight forward, after he must have known that the uprising was, to some extent, at least, widespread, indicates his confidence in his strength to overcome any opposition he might meet. Peter Quinn, the old interpreter, with his forty years' experience in Minnesota, believed from the first receipt of the news that the danger was serious. On leaving Fort Ridgely with Capt. Marsh and his men, he said to Sutler B. H. Randall: "I am sure we are going into great danger. I do not expect to return alive." Then, with tears in his eyes, he continued: "Good-bye; give my love to all." Whether Quinn gave his opinions to Capt. Marsh, can never be known; if he did, their influence was ineffective.

When Capt. Marsh and his men reached the crest of Faribault's hill they saw to the southward, over two miles away on the prairie about the Agency, a number of mounted Indians. Of course, the Indians could and did see Marsh and his party. But knowledge of the coming of the soldiers had already reached the Indians, from marauders who had been down the valley engaged in dreadful work, and preparations were made to receive them. Scores of warriors, with bows and guns, repaired to the ferry landing, where it was known the party must come. Numbers crossed in the ferry boat to the north side of the river and concealed themselves in the willow to steady his men, to form them in line for defense, and to have them fire at least one volley. But now the Indians were in great numbers on the same side of the river, only a few yards away. They had secured possession of the log ferry house, from which they could fire as from a block house, and they were in the thickets all about. Many of them were naked, except as to breech clouts. Across the river, near the bank, were numbers behind the logs belonging to the Agency steam saw mill, and a circle of enemies was rapidly being completed about the little band.

While the conversation between White Dog and Interpreter Quinn was thickets near by. The boat was finally moored to the bank on the east or north side, "in apparent readiness for the command to use for its crossing, though the dead body of the ferryman had been found in the road." A tribute to this ferryman, who was a Frenchman named Hubert Miller, (though he is mentioned in some histories as Jacob Manley) and who stood to his post until he had passed over the last fugitive, is given in the booklet.

When the command reached the ferry landing, only one Indian could be seen. This was Shonka-ska, or White Dog, who was standing on the west bank of the river, in plain view. White Dog was considered a Christian, or civilized Indian. At one time he had been "Indian farmer" at the Lower Agency. He bore a good reputation in the country until the outbreak, and many yet assert that he has been misrepresented and unjustly accused. However, the military commission convicted him of disloyalty and treachery, and he was hung at Mankato, with thirty-seven others, in the following December.

A conversation in the Sioux language was held between White Dog and Interpreter Quinn, Capt. Marsh suggesting the most of the questions put to the Indian through the interpreter. The surviving soldiers say that, as they understood the conversation, as it was interpreted by Mr. Quinn, White Dog assured Capt. Marsh that there was no immediate danger; that the Indians were willing, and were waiting to hold a council at the Agency to settle matters; and that the men could cross on the ferry boat in safety, etc.

HON. JAMES W. LYND.

While the conversation between White Dog and Interpreter Quinn was yet in progress, the latter exclaimed "Look out!" The next instant came a volley of bullets and some arrows from the concealed foe on the opposite bank of the river. They were armed chiefly with double-barreled shot guns loaded with "traders' balls," and their firing at the short distance was very destructive. Pierced with a dozen bullets, Interpreter Quinn was shot dead from his saddle at the first fire, and his body was well stuck with arrows. A dozen or more soldiers were killed outright and many wounded by the first volley.

Although the sudden and fierce attack by overwhelming numbers was most demoralizing, Capt. Marsh retained his presence of mind sufficiently yet in progress the latter exclaimed, "Look out!" The next instant came a volley of bullets and some arrows from the concealed foe on the opposite bank of the river. This was accompanied and followed by yells and whoops and renewed firing, this time from the Indians on both sides of the river. They were armed chiefly with double-barreled shotguns loaded with "traders' balls," and their firing at the short distance was very destructive. Pierced with a dozen bullets, Interpreter Quinn was shot dead from his saddle at the first fire, and his body was afterward well stuck with arrows. A dozen or more soldiers were killed out right and many wounded by the first volley.

Although the sudden and fierce attack by overwhelming numbers was most demoralizing, Capt. Marsh retained his presence of mind sufficiently to steady his men, to form them in line for defense, and to have them fire at least one volley. But now the Indians were in great numbers on the same side of the river, only a few yards away. They had secured possession of the log ferry house, from which they could fire as from a block house, and they were in the thickets all about. Many of them were naked except as to breech clouts. Across the river near the bank were numbers behind the logs belonging to the agency steam sawmill, and a circle of enemies was rapidly being completed about the little band.

Below the ferry a few rods was a dense willow thicket, from two to ten rods in width and running down the north or east bank of the river for a mile or more. Virtually cutting or forcing their way through the Indians, Capt. Marsh and fourteen of his men succeeded in reaching this thicket, from which they kept up a fight for about two hours. The Indians poured volleys at random from all sides into the thick covert, but the soldiers lay close to the ground, and but few of them were struck. Two men, named Sutherland and Blodgett, were shot through the body and remained where they fell until after dark, when they crawled out, and finding an old canoe, floated down the river and reached Fort Ridgely the next day. Of a party of five that had taken refuge in another thicket three were killed before dark. One of the survivors, Thomas Parsley, remained in the thicket with his dead comrades until late at night when he too escaped and made his way to the fort.

Gradually the imperiled soldiers worked their way through the thick grass and brush of the jungle in which they were concealed until they had gone some distance east of the ferry. Meantime they had kept up a fight, using their ammunition carefully, but under the circumstances almost ineffectually. The Indians did not attempt to charge them or "rush" their position, for this was not the Indian style of warfare in such a contingency.

About 4 o'clock p. m., when the ammunition was reduced to not more than four rounds to a man, Capt. Marsh ordered his men to swim the river and try and work their way down on the west side. He entered the river first and swam to about the center and there went down with a cramp. Some of the men went to his assistance, but were unable to save him. He was unwounded and died from the effects of the paralyzing cramps which seized him. Some days afterward his body was found in a drift, miles below where it sank.

After the drowning of Capt. Marsh, the command, then consisting of fifteen men, devolved upon Sergeant John F. Bishop. The men then resumed their slow and toilsome progress toward the fort. Five of them, including the sergeant, were wounded, one of them, Private Ole Svendson, so badly that he had to be carried. The Indians, for some reason, did not press the attack further, after the drowning of Capt. Marsh, and all of them, except Ezekiel Rose, who was wounded and lost his way, reached Fort Ridgely that night. Rose wandered off into the country, and was finally picked up near Hendrickson. Five miles from the fort, Bishop sent forward Privates James, Dunn and W. B. Hutchinson, with information of the disaster, to Lieut. Gere.

The loss of the whites was one officer (Capt. Marsh) drowned, twenty-four men—including twenty-three soldiers and Interpreter Quinn—killed, and five men wounded. The Indians had one man killed, a young warrior of the Wah-pa-koota band, named To-wa-to, or All Blue. When the band lived at or near Faribault this To-wa-to was known for his fondness for fine dress and for his gallantries. He was a dandy and a Lothario, but he was no coward.

The affair at Redwood Ferry was most influential upon the character of the Indian outbreak. It was a complete Indian victory. A majority of the soldiers had been killed, their guns, ammunition, and equipments had fallen into the hands of the victors, the first attempt to interfere with the savage program had been signally repulsed, all with the loss of but one man. Those of the savages who had favored the war from the first were jubilant over what had been accomplished and confident of the final and general result. There had been but the feeblest resistance on the part of the settlers who had been murdered that day, and the defense made by the soldiers had amounted to nothing. There was the general remark in the Indian camps that the whites, with all of their vaunted bravery, were "as easy to kill as sheep."

If Capt. Marsh had succeeded in fighting his way across the river and into the agency, thereby dispersing the savages, it is probable that the great red rebellion would have been suppressed in less than half the time which was actually required. The friendly Indians would doubtless have been encouraged and stimulated to open and even aggressive manifestations of loyalty; the dubious and the timid would have been awed into inactivity and quiescence. As it was, the disaster to the little band of soldiers fanned the fires of the rebellion into a great conflagration of murder and rapine. Redwood Ferry was a miniature Bull Run in its effects.

Didn't Turn Out the Gas.

Senator Ellsworth tells the following story of a Western farmer who was visiting Albany for the first time:

"While standing in the lobby of the state capitol at Albany, talking to some friends a few weeks ago, I was introduced by one of my colleagues to a typical Western farmer, who had just arrived in the city the night before, and was being shown around the capitol building. The old fellow had never been in a large town in his life, and after telling me in his own quaint way of some of the sights and places he had seen in the city the previous night, he suddenly turned and said to me in somewhat confidential tones:

"'Say, before leaving home I had read about them fellers that blow out the gas and get suffocated, and I warn't fooled by that darned thing up in my room in the hotel. I seen a light in a glass bottle hanging on the end of a string, and I couldn't put the durned thing out. So I took the knot out of the string and put the bottle in the bureau drawer, and what yer think, senator? Blest if 'twarn't burning when I got up this morning.'"—New York Times.

RECORD OF THE PAST.

The best guarantee of the future is the record of the past, and over fifty thousand people have publicly testified that Doan's Kidney Pills have cured them of numerous kidney ills, from common backache to dangerous diabetes, and all the attendant annoyances and sufferings from urinary disorders. They have been cured to stay cured. Here is one case:

Samuel J. Taylor, retired carpenter, residing at 312 South Third St., Goshen, Ind., says: "On the 25th day of August, 1897, I made an affidavit before Jacob C. Mann, notary public, stating my experience with Doan's Kidney Pills. I had suffered for thirty years, and was compelled at times to walk by the aid of crutches, frequently passed gravel and suffered excruciatingly. I took every medicine on the market that I heard about and some gave me temporary relief. I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills and the results I gave to the public in the statement above referred to. At this time, on the 19th day of July, 1902, I make this further statement that during the five years which have elapsed I have had no occasion to use either Doan's Kidney Pills or any other medicine for my kidneys. The cure effected was a permanent one."

A FREE TRIAL of this great kidney medicine which cured Mr. Taylor, will be mailed on application, to any part of the United States. Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. For sale by all druggists. Price 50 cents per box.

NURSES' LIVES UNROMANTIC.

Seldom Marry Physicians or Patients They Have Attended.

It is generally supposed that there is a good deal of romance about the life of a professional nurse and that large hospitals are matrimonial bureaus where men and women fall in love with incessant regularity. Exactly the opposite is true. Nurses, as a rule, do not marry men whom they have nursed as patients, nor do they select for husbands the physicians with whom they come in contact in a professional way.

In the last year and a half but one engagement among the nurses at the Chicago hospital has been announced, and the incident was so unusual that it created no end of comment. The affair was, in fact, an extreme novelty, although the female attaches of the institution are unusually good looking.

"This proves that nurses do not lead the romantic lives that they are credited with by the outside world," said a physician. "I have frequently heard it said that men who had been seriously ill often married the trained nurses who had taken care of them. This is nonsense. I have employed hundreds of these women nurses in the course of my practice, and have yet to hear of a match resulting from one of them. As a general thing the patient takes an aversion to the nurse who has cared for him, and the better one has looked after him and the more strictly she has enforced the doctor's instructions the less he has cared for her.

"Physicians sometimes fall in love with the nurses they meet in their practice, but such affairs, instead of being common, are rare. If any girl enters the profession with the idea of capturing a husband she is apt to find herself sadly sold."

DUPLICATES OF UNIQUE BOOKS.

Several Cases Where They Managed to Turn Up Within Very Short Time.

"There is, perhaps, nothing more certain to turn up than a second copy of a 'unique' book. For over four centuries the now famous 1493 edition of the Malermi Bible (Venice) was as completely lost as if it had never existed. Within about a month of each other two copies were descovered, one by Mr. Voynich in Italy and the other by the Duc de Rivoli in Vienna. Quite recently a third copy has been unearthed by a Continental book seller, and doubtless other examples will be found in due course. A fine copy is worth at least $1,500. The peculiarity of the 1493 issue is that many of the wood cuts are quite different from those in the 1490 and 1494 editions; four of these beautiful illustrations are reproduced in facsimile in Mr. Voynich's 'Second List of Books.'"—The Athenaeum.

Defacing London.

No more completely wanton innovation has been made in our time than the epidemic of tawdry gilt lettering upon the street fronts of London. The rapidity with which it has spread indicates the abject state of public opinion upon architecture. Twenty years ago a universal outcry would have been raised if any one had dared to propose spoiling whole streets with this frippery; now nobody cares. But the question arises whether among the liberties of Englishmen that of defacing a great capital can reasonably be included.—London Builders' Journal.

King Edward's Kind Heart.

One of the kindest things the king ever did was some years ago, when he heard officially, before it was publicly announced, of the very sad accidental death in India of a young officer whose family he knew. His majesty was so afraid that the poor mother might hear of it suddenly, or see it in the papers the next day, that he sent for the boy's uncle that same evening and dispatched him into the country to break the news to his people.—The Scotsman.

HIS MEMORY LIVES

FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF THE DEATH OF M'KINLEY IS OBSERVED.

SPECIAL EXERCISES ARE HELD

EVERY CITY, TOWN AND HAMLET PAYS TRIBUTE TO HIS MEMORY.

WIDOW'S PROGRAM NOT VARIED

ALL DAYS TO MRS. M'KINLEY HAVE BEEN MEMORIAL DAYS.

St. Paul, Sept. 16.—Yesterday, the first anniversary of the death of President McKinley, was observed throughout the length and breadth of the land, and apparently in every city, town and hamlet there was a memorial gathering of some nature.

The attendance at the various churches where memorial services were held was larger than usual and there were special programs in many churches, including the favorite musical numbers of the martyred president. Appropriate exercises were also held in the benevolent and other public institutions. Portraits of McKinley, festooned with crepe or flowers, were seen, and in many cases the floral tributes were as elaborate as on Easter. The death of the president was the basis of all the services and many were the eulogies pronounced. Churches of every sect and creed joined in observing the day and paying a tribute to the memory of the departed president.

In His Home City.

Canton, Ohio, Sept. 16.—There was a general observance of McKinley memorial day in the city which claimed him as its own. From almost every pulpit there was reference in prayer or in address to him and his work. His favorite hymns were used. The address that attracted most attention here was that given by Judge William R. Day, former secretary of state and a friend and adviser of McKinley for many years. The address was delivered in the First M. E. church, of which McKinley was a member and in which the public funeral was held Sept. 19, 1901. Although deeply conscious of the fact that it was just one year ago that her beloved husband died, Mrs. McKinley did not vary the program followed by her for several months. All days to her have been memorial days. Her usual trip to West Lawn cemetery was taken in the forenoon and she laid evergreens and flowers on the casket that contains the remains of the nation's martyred chief. Mrs. Garrett A. Hobart, who is her guest, went with her into the McKinley tomb and also laid a boquet of flowers on the coffin.

Displeases President Roosevelt.

Oyster Bay, N. Y., Sept. 16. — Rev. Dr. Homer Washburn, rector of Christ Episcopal church, in the presence of President Roosevelt and his family and a congregation that filled the church to overflowing, yesterday preached a sermon in which he devoted considerable attention to "possibility of danger coming by and through the unguarded use of great wealth concentrated in the hands of a few," and of which he also stated that "if ever circumstances indicated that one was placed providentially in the executive chair of the nation, then circumstances that attended the promotion of Mr. Roosevelt so indicated." The first part of the rector's sermon was devoted to an eulogy upon the life and character of the martyred president, and to this President Roosevelt listened attentively. But when in the second part of the sermon Mr. Washburn took occasion to speak of the possibility of danger coming through certain trusts, and also to laud the president, Mr. Roosevelt became restive. His face colored and he plainly showed signs of disapproval of the rector's utterances. At the conclusion of the sermon he turned to Mrs. Roosevelt, who sat beside him, and whispered: "He shouldn't have done that."

After the services the president stated that he had requested Mr. Washburn to hold memorial services, but that he had no knowledge of what the sermon contained, nor had he any intimation that the rector would refer to the trusts or to himself.

Where the Tragedy Occurred.

Buffalo, Sept. 16.—The anniversary of the death of William McKinley was universally observed in this city. The pastors in all the churches paid tribute to the memory of the martyred president and the congregations sang his favorite hymns, "Nearer My God to Thee" and "Lead Kindly Light" were sung by the worshippers in small chapels and missions and gloriously intoned on the great organs in the larger churches, seemingly with special significance and fervor. In the afternoon a public meeting was held in the city convention hall.

Sang His Favorite Hymns.

Cincinnati, Sept. 16. — McKinley memorial services were held in all the churches of this vicinity yesterday. The attendance was larger than usual. There were special programs in many churches, including the favorite musical numbers of the martyred president. No day was ever more generally observed in sacred or secular circles here.

Specially Observed in New York.

New York, Sept. 16.—The first anniversary of the death of President William McKinley was specially observed in a large number of the churches of this city, while it was referred to by the pastors of almost all the others.

ROOSEVELT'S NEXT TRIP.

His Western Itinerary Being Prepared by Secretary Cortelyou.

Washington, Sept. 16. — Secretary Cortelyou is in Washington engaged in making out the itinerary of the president's Western trip, which will begin Friday next. Milwaukee will be the first stop in the Northwest where the president will leave the train. He will make a speech in Milwaukee and then proceed to St. Paul, where on Tuesday morning he will address the convention of the American League of Civic Improvement. The president will make a run through Minnesota and South Dakota, then down to Sioux City, Denison, the home of Secretary Shaw; Omaha and Leavenworth, Kan., back through Iowa, stopping at Clarinda, the home of Representative Hepburn; Des Moines and several other places in the state, and then to St. Louis on Oct. 1. From St. Louis he will go to Springfield, Ill., to attend the Illinois State fair, and then to Chicago for a day in that city and to attend a banquet in the evening. From Chicago the president will return to Oyster Bay. The trip will take two weeks and will be the most extensive taken by President Roosevelt.

VACCINATE WITH MILK.

Minneapolis Woman Tells How Law Is Evaded.

St. Paul, Sept. 16—The citizens who are opposed to vaccination held an open meeting in Central hall, Sixth and Seventh streets, yesterday afternoon. Mrs. Lora C. Little of Minneapolis made an address in which she stated that some of the doctors in her city vaccinated people with milk or water instead of virus. They did not believe in the efficacy of vaccination, and use mild and inoffensive fluids simply to satisfy the prejudices and caprices of those that insist on being inoculated. Mrs. Little also stated that there are doctors in Minneapolis who give certificates of vaccination to the children of parents who objected to the practice, while in fact the children had not been vaccinated. It was decided to hold another meeting Friday night. A committee was appointed to wait on the charter commission with the view of having the commission submit an amendment to the charter doing away with compulsory vaccination for school children.

BRIDEGROOM GOES CRAZY.

Wealthy Man Does Queer Things and Then Jumps Into the River.

Saginaw, Mich., Sept. 16. — Miss Phoebe Grant Stephens and Charles Rabson, the latter of Atlin, B. C., were married at the home of the bride in this city Friday evening. Mrs. Rabson is the daughter of the late William Grant Stephens, a cousin of Gen. U. S. Grant, and has taught school in this city and at Elkhart, Ind. Her husband, who journeyed 4,000 miles to be married, is said to be the owner of two of the best gold mines in the Atlin district. About 3 o'clock yesterday morning he aroused his wife and despite her fears at this strange action, forced her to go out in the street with him. Forcing his way into a neighbor's house, he was knocked down. From thence the crazed man made his way to the river and jumped in. The body has not yet been recovered. He is said to have had a large sum of money on his person.

ACT OF FIENDS.

Nebraska Woman Assaulted and Murdered by Tramps.

Beatrice, Neb., Sept. 16.—Mrs. Kate Fournell, living with her parents near Steinhauer, was Friday night criminally assaulted by tramps, who then murdered her and dragged her body into the yard, where they set fire to her clothing. When found her clothing was entirely burned from the body. The woman had been left in charge of the home by her mother and brother, who had gone to town, and who discovered her dead body when they returned Saturday. The men had evidently broken open the house, which they looted, after committing the crime. A pack of bloodhounds has been put on the trail.

CHOKE A BABE.

Strangled to Death and Swathed in Clothes Soaked in Acid.

San Francisco, Sept. 16.—The horrible death of an infant was reported to the police by the matron of a foundling home on Golden Gate avenue. A stylish carriage drove up to the home last night and a well dressed man deposited the child in the front yard. The man hurried back to the carriage, which also contained a woman, and the coachman lashed up his horses furiously. The babe had been choked insensible and its body was swathed in clothes saturated with gin and carbolic acid. The little one lived but a short time.

NEELY FIGHTS FOR CASH.

Institutes Proceedings to Recover Six Thousand Dollars.

Washington, Sept. 16.—Information has been received at the war department that C. F. W. Neely has instituted proceedings in New York to recover the $6,000 which was found upon him at the time of his arrest in Cuba. This money is now at the war department. It will not be given up except by a decree of the court.

Blown to Pieces.

Ironwood, Mich., Sept. 16. — John Jatizalz and John Thompson, Finnish miners, were killed by the explosion of a box of powder in the Pabst mine.

Appointed by Gov. Herreid.

Pierre, S. D., Sept. 16—Gov. Herreid has appointed Dr. C. B. Alford of Huron a member of the state board of health to fill a vacancy.

Wealthy Banker Drops Dead.

Lenox, Mass., Sept. 16.—Samuel D. Babcock, eighty-one, a wealthy New York banker and stockholder in the Commercial Cable company, dropped dead here last night while walking on Main street. Heart failure caused it.

Destructive Storms in Germany.

Berlin, Sept. 16—Destructive storms raged in many parts of Germany yesterday. In Saxony the temperature sank to zero and a hurricane-like wind unroofed many houses and injured many people.

NOT A RAY OF HOPE

STRIKE SITUATION GIVES NO PROMISE OF EARLY SETTLEMENT.

BOTH SIDES STILL REMAIN FIRM

THIS WEEK CONCEDED TO BE MOST CRITICAL SINCE STRIKE BEGAN.

PREPARING TO START MINES

FEARING INTERFERENCE THE SHERIFF IS CALLED UPON FOR PROTECTION.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Sept. 16.—For the first time in over a month there is not a single rainbow in sight anywhere on all the strike horizon.

What is more, it does not look as though there were a single peg left on which to hang one, unless it might be something the president himself might say or that somebody said he had said. But even this would have to be something pretty definite and specific to inspire the strikers with much hope.

For the first time since the strike began, nearly five months ago, Mr. Mitchell occupies the center of the stage alone and unsupported. All eyes are fixed upon him and on him alone for a hint as to what the next move will be. That this week is one of the most critical of any since the great struggle began is generally accepted as beyond question. Every illusion and delusion which has served to into the belief that the coal operators would concede to compromise something is now gone. Strikers and operators are face to face on precisely the same grounds on which they stood last spring when the strike was declared.

There are persistent rumors afloat here that the Philadelphia & Reading Coal and Iron company will to-day post notices at their forty-eight collieries in the Pottsville region offering the miners concessions to go to work. It is stated on seemingly good authority that a slight advance of wages will be offered.

Supt. Barnard of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western company's collieries in the Wyoming region last evening notified Sheriff Jacobs that additional men would be put to work to-day at the collieries which resumed operations last week and probably one or two more

Would Be Started Up.

Supt. Barnard fears that increased activity at the mines may cause interference upon the part of outside parties, and he requests the sheriff to furnish ample protection for the workmen. Sheriff Jacobs says he does not expect an outbreak, but will have a large force of deputies at hand to send any place in the region where trouble should occur.

President Mitchell is still silent on the conference held with Gov. Stone at Harrisburg on Saturday. He said last evening that there was no change in the strike situation.

To-day will begin the nineteenth week of the strike. The date on which senator Platt predicted that the strike would end has passed and the hope which was installed into the people in this locality because of that prediction has ended in succeeding by a feeling that the end is still far off.

Non-Unionist Killed.

Tamaqua, Pa., Sept. 16—By the accidental discharge of a rifle in the hands of Hugh Black, a deputy in the Lehigh Coal and Navigation company's No. 4 stockade, near Nesquehoning, Saturday night, Paul Haulick, a non-union man, was instantly killed. Coroner Fehler held an inquest yesterday. A verdict of accidental death was rendered.

KILLED IN THE STREET.

Tragedy the Outgrowth of the Union Pacific Strike.

Omaha, Neb., Sept. 16.—Earl Caldwell, a machinist who recently came here from Chicago, was killed in the street here early yesterday. The tragedy is an outgrowth of the Union Pacific strike. Caldwell and another strikebreaker, who came into the city from the shops, were set upon by six men and terribly beaten. Caldwell's companion escaped, but when help came in answer to Caldwell's cries he was unconscious. He died soon afterward.

THOUGHT HIM A BURGLAR.

New Jersey Youth Shoots and Kills a Friend.

East Orange, N. J., Sept. 16.—Edward G. Taylor, nineteen years old, mistook his friend, Clarence White, an electrician twenty-one years old, for a burglar in the residence of Dr. Tifft Brecklwith at 60 South Arlington avenue, shortly before 1 o'clock this morning and shot him through the right breast. White died almost instantly.

Mysterious Tragedy.

Rochester, N. Y., Sept. 16.—Ethel D. Dingle, a very pretty girl, lies dead from a wound in her throat while Leland Dorr Kent is in the homeopathic hospital, his throat also slashed, but not fatally. Kent's statement to the coroner has not been made public, but he claims that the girl wounded him and then killed herself. His story is doubted.

Burning Gusher Goes Out.

Beaumont, Tex., Sept. 16. — The burning gusher went out of its own accord yesterday and last night the oil field was in darkness. It is believed the well choked itself up and that it will have to be cleaned before it will again produce oil.

Frankfort, Ky., Sept. 16—Gov Beckham yesterday directed Attorney General Pratt to proceed with legal proceedings to stop the McGovern-Corbett prize fight at Louisville.

BIG LOSS TO WOLSEY, S. D.

Several of the Best Buildings in the Place Are Burned.

Huron, S. D., Sept. 16.—Property to the value of $40,000 was destroyed by fire in Wolsey, the junction of the Chicago & Northwestern and Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railways thirteen miles west of this city yesterday afternoon. A special train over the Northwestern line carried a portion of the Huron fire department to Wolsey, arriving in time to save the whole business portion of the town from destruction. The burned district includes several of the best buildings in the place, and the destruction is the worst ever experienced there by fire. The losses mostly fall upon men illy able to stand them. Fortunately little wind was blowing and this prevented the fire from spreading to the residence portion of the place. Besides the business houses destroyed the Odd Fellows, Modern Woodmen and Workmen lost their halls and most of their paraphernalia and several roomers also suffered loss. The origin of the fire is unknown.

ENDS HER LIFE AT HOSPITAL.

Patient Suffering From Melancholia Takes Carbolic Acid.

St. Paul, Sept. 16. — Miss Mary T. Abrahams of Minneapolis, a patient at St. Luke's hospital, died Saturday night of carbolic acid poisoning. She had suffered for five years from melancholia, and it was decided to give her treatment at St. Luke's. Dr. A. W. Dunning was consulted and took charge of the case. She engaged a private room at St. Luke's at 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon. She also employed a special trained nurse to take care of her. She left her room for a few moments about 7 o'clock and when she returned collapsed. The nurse called the house doctors. Her condition indicated carbolic acid poisoning, but the physicians could not resuscitate her. A half-ounce phial which had contained carbolic acid was found in her pocket. Coroner A. W. Miller was called and pronounced the case suicide.

PRICE OF HER LOVE.

West Superior Man Granted $1,000 for Alienation of Affections.

West Superior, Wis., Sept. 16—Burt Winslow secured a judgment of $1,000 against Dwight H. Kennedy for alienation of his wife's affections. He brought suit in the superior court for $10,000 and claimed that Kennedy visited his wife and wrote to her, finally advising her to leave her husband, which she did. The woman testified in Kennedy's behalf. Letters that passed between the woman and Kennedy were introduced in evidence. The jury was out fifty-five minutes. Winslow is a railroad man and Kennedy is prominent in gun club and sporting circles.

Three Thousand Germans Expected to Emigrate From Minnesota, Wisconsin and Iowa.

St. Paul, Sept. 16.—The Order of St. Benedict has purchased 100,000 acres of wheat and farming land in the Saskatchewan valley upon which will be established a German Catholic colony. The order will erect schools, colleges, convents and churches. German Catholic farmers, mechanics and artisans will be gathered from Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa and adjacent states, and it is expected that before the end of a year the colony will number at least 3,000 persons.

INDIAN LAND EXAMINER.

Wisconsin Man Appointed Chippewa Inspector.

Washington, Sept. 16.—Acting Commissioner Richards of the general land office has appointed William O'Neil of Ashland, Wis., chief examiner of the Chippewa Indian lands in Minnesota. Mr. O'Neil is authorized to employ fifteen assistants and more later. Their work will be to determine the timber or agricultural character of these lands, make estimates as to the amount and value of timber on each tract, etc., preliminary to the sale of these tracts separately.

WOMEN IN PULPITS.

Delegates to the W. C. T. U. Convention Deliver Sermons.

Mitchell, S. D., Sept. 16. — Yesterday representatives of the W. C. T. U. convention occupied the pulpits in four churches of the city, and last evening a large union meeting of the delegates and the churches of the city was held at the opera house, which was addressed by Miss Brehm, president of the Illinois association. The convention has been a splendid success and good reports have been made by the officers.

STRUCK BY PASSENGER TRAIN

Mrs. Joseph Simmons Is Killed Near Bixby.

Bixby, Minn., Sept. 16—Mrs. Joseph Simmons was killed on the railroad crossing half a mile north of this village by the north-bound Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul passenger train. The train struck the team on the crossing and threw Mrs. Simmons to the right of way. Both her legs and right arm were broken and her skull fractured. The team was killed.

WINONA'S SIX NEW ROUTES.

Congressman Tawney Succeeds in Securing Additional Facilities.

Winona, Minn., Sept. 16.—Through the efforts of Congressman Tawney six more rural routes will be established in Winona county about Nov. 1. Two of these are out of St. Charles, two Utica and two Lewiston. The First district has now a good rural mail service, as good as in any part of the United States.

Two Children Burned to Death.

St. Paul, Sept. 16.—Fire, resulting from an explosion of kerosene used to start the kitchen fire in the home of Louis Moritz destroyed the house, two children, Louis, aged two years, and Annie, aged seventeen, perishing in the flames. In trying to save his daughter Mr. Moritz was badly burned, but will recover. Three other children narrowly escaped.

FIRE'S SAD HAVOC

MANY LIVES LOST AND MUCH PROPERTY DESTROYED IN WASHINGTON.

DEVASTATED BY FOREST FIRES

OVER THIRTY KNOWN TO BE DEAD AND DOUBTLESS MANY OTHERS PERISHED.

PROPERTY LOSS IS ENORMOUS

FIFTY SECTIONS OF FINEST TIMBER ON THE COAST IS DESTROYED.

Kalama, Wash., Sept. 16. — News reached here late last night that the forest fires on Lewis river have wrought sad havoc. D. L. Wallace, wife and two children were burned to death. They were camping in the woods when caught by the fire. Their wagon was found burned up, the charred bodies lying near. A twelve-year-old boy of Mrs. Hanley's also is dead. Mrs. John Polly and baby, and another, name unknown, and Mrs. James Hughes are dead. Fifteen are without clothing save gunny sacks. Five logging camps are burned out completely. The worst of the fire is on Lewis river about twelve miles above Wormland. The country is well settled and there are doubtless other casualties not yet reported. The fire has spread from Lewis river north to the Kalama river, and fifty sections of the finest timber on the coast are destroyed. Oak Point, twenty miles below here on the Columbia river,

Is Totally Destroyed.

There are no reports of lives lost, but the loss to property is estimated at about $300,000. A great fire is also raging in the northern part of the country. Everything combustible in its path is consumed. Hill's camp is reported destroyed; Muckley Bros.' No. 2 camp is also burned out; Moreland's camp is badly damaged. Seven donkey engines were ruined. Two men from Barr's camp are reported missing. In Cowlitz county five people are dead and two missing, with only partial reports from the burned district. A courier just arrived from Lewis river states that there are only two houses left standing on the river from Trait's place to the head of the river, a distance of thirty miles, and that no less than fifteen persons have perished.

Hundreds of People Homeless.

Portland, Or., Sept. 16.—About 300 people are left homeless in Multnomah and Clackamas counties as a result of the forest fires that have raged for the past week. In the fire that destroyed the town of Palmer, near Bridal Veil, two boys named Hamilton were caught while trying to escape from the flames and burned to death. The timber losses in Clackamas county have been immense and the whole length of the Clackamas river presents nothing but vistas of ruined settlements. The most distressing losses have been those suffered in the vicinity of Spring Water, Clackamas county, and Lentz. There is no way of securing a correct estimate of the loss, but it will certainly exceed $1,000,000 in this state.

MOC AFTER "MESSIAH."

English Clergyman Who Affirms That He Is Christ Is Roughly Handled.

London, Sept. 16. — Extraordinary scenes, verging upon riot, occurred at Clapton, where nearly 5,000 persons attempted to mob a former Episcopal clergyman named Smyth Piggott, who is now leader of an eccentric sect called the "Agaphemonites." Piggott last week announced himself as the Messiah. Exposures of the man, which filled many columns in the newspapers, heightened public interest in the matter to such a pitch that yesterday Piggott was taken from the mob only by the efforts of mounted policemen. In spite of warnings the chapel in which Piggott held services yesterday was invaded by jeering crowds, but in the face of howling disorder Piggott again affirmed that he was the Christ.

STEALS AIRSHIP PLANS.

Paris Watchmaker Fined for Theft of New Balloon Invention.

Paris, Sept. 16. — The courts have condemned a watchmaker named Lombard of St. Maxient to pay $200 for stealing the ideas of Ernest Cuyer, an inventor of a new navigable balloon intended to be entered in the St. Louis fair contest. M. Cuyer is a civil engineer and has been studying the airship for many years. He devised one and intrusted the construction of certain parts to Lombard. As the latter took much longer over the work than was necessary, Mr. Cuyer urged him to hurry. Afterward he made inquiries and discovered that the watchmaker, who had been furnished with the complete plans of the invention, had built a model on his own account and was negotiating for its sale.

BROKEN TRUCK.

It Causes a Freight Wreck in North Dakota.

Mandan, N. D., Sept. 16.—Northern Pacific through trains were delayed by a freight wreck twenty miles west of Mandan. The wreck was caused by a broken truck. Twelve cars were ditched. Passenger train No. 3 was held at Mandan. A brakeman of the freight was seriously injured.

Countess Suspected of Murder.

Rome, Sept. 16.—The Countess Bon Martini, wife of Count Bon Martini, who was assassinated at Bologna by Tullio Murrir, his brother-in-law, has been arrested on the charge of complicity in the murder of her husband. It is alleged that the countess spurred her brother to commit the crime.

PUT OUT OF THE WAY.

Prosecuting Witness in a Robbery Case Is Murdered.

Bloomington, Ill., Sept. 16—A murder mystery was developed here by the discovery that the skull of C. C. McDonald, a horseman of Pontiac, Ill., had been crushed by a man instead of by the kick of a horse, as was first supposed. His body was found in a livery barn. The first theory was exploded by the discovery of an axe, covered with bloodstains, near the body. McDonald was a prosecuting witness in a case of highway robbery and was to have testified before the grand jury next week.

GOV. RAMSEY'S BIRTHDAY.

Friends Call to Congratulate Him on the 87th Anniversary of His Birth.

Friends of Alexander Ramsey, Minnesota's venerable war governor, called on him Monday at his residence in St. Paul to congratulate him upon the arrival of his eighty-seventh birthday. Although Gov. Ramsey doesn't get about quite as actively as he did in '61, he still retains a surprising amount of vigor and vitality for one of his age. His mental faculties remain undimmed.

Gov. Ramsey was born near Harrisburg, Pa., Sept. 8, 1815, his father being of Scotch, and his mother of German descent. At the age of ten he became an orphan. A relative assisted him to obtain an education and later started him in business. He afterward attempted to learn the carpenter's trade, but his love for reading and study triumphed, and he decided to enter the law. He was admitted to practice in 1839. He took a prominent part in the presidential campaign of William Henry Harrison. He went to congress from his district in 1843 and was re-elected in 1844, his term ending in 1847. President Zachary Taylor offered Mr. Ramsey the governorship of the Territory of Minnesota April 2, 1849. The new governor arrived with his family May 27, 1849, and issued a proclamation four days later, declaring the territory organized. Among his notable official acts was the negotiation of the treaty of 1851 with the Sioux at Traverse de Sioux, and with the Chippewas at Pembina. He was elected governor of the state in 1859 and was re-elected in 1861. He was made United States senator in 1863, served twelve years in that capacity, and was afterward appointed secretary of war and the navy.

LARGEST ON RECORD.

August Iron Ore Shipments From the Northern Mines.

Iron ore shipments at Duluth last month were the largest on record, amounting to 2,400,000 tons from Minnesota mines and 1,600,000 tons from Michigan and Wisconsin. Minnesota mines have so far this year sent down the lakes the enormous total of 9,710,000 gross tons, which is more than 2,000,000 tons greater than to the same date last year.

The Duluth, Missabe & Northern road has ordered nine locomotives of ninety tons each, much like the large locomotives of the Duluth & Iron Range road. With these in use the road will be able to increase its loads by about 800 tons.

At the Great Western a large pump has been added to the boilers at work unwatering, and the mine will be ready to hoist ore in a month. The Oliver Iron Mining company has taken over the McGillis property and has commenced work there.

The Minnesota Iron company (United States Steel corporation) is opening a tenth mine in the Hibbing district. It is to be called the St. Clair and is located on the ne 1-4 of the nw 1-4 of section 23, T. 58, R. 20, the town that is furnishing the finest ore on the range. The St. Clair was bought in fee a year or more ago from Messrs. Congdon & Hartley for something more than $400,000. The company is erecting at Hibbing a fine, large two-story office building and laboratory, and all its operations in the district are under the supervision of Pentecost Mitchell, a well posted and thoroughly competent mining manager.

SET FIRE AT JEFFERS.

Two Men Arrested, One of Whom Makes Confession.

Jeffers, Minn., Sept. 11.—J. G. Curtis of Echo and A. Hauss, who have been working on a farm near Echo, have been arrested, charged with setting the Central hotel on fire two weeks ago, which caused a loss to A. A. Faust's general merchandise store and implement house and Nels Anderson's restaurant building occupied by Fred Trowbridge. Hauss has made a complete confession, claiming that he was hired by Curtis to do the deed, but Curtis denies the whole story. Hauss has apparently proved his story in so many instances that it is believed a question of only a short time before Curtis will break down. Sheriff Ness brought Hauss here yesterday to find the bottle which contained the kerosene, and the fire, and the key to the building that Curtis gave him. He found both of these without any trouble. It is expected that other surprises will be brought out at their examinations, which will take place at Windom in a few days.

EDITRESS A BRIDE.

Rush City Woman Publisher Is Married to Col. J. F. Stone.

Rush City, Minn., Sept. 11. — Mrs. Franklyn W. Lee, editor of the Rush City Post, was married last night to Col. John F. Stone of Pine City. The wedding occurred at the bride's residence in the presence of immediate friends, Rev. Spicer officiating. The groom became prominently known as the proprietor of the Pioneer hotel at Pine City, which he conducted many years. The bride enjoys a reputation as a leading newspaper woman, having successfully conducted the Rush City Post since the death of her first husband, Franklyn W. Lee, five years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Stone will reside at Rush City.

WORK FOR GRAND JURY.

Winona's Investigating Body Has a Flood of Criminal Business.

Winona, Minn., Sept. 11.—The grand jury for the September term of the district court will have more cases to consider than any jury for the past fifteen years. There are more cases on the criminal calendar this year than civil cases, a condition never before experienced in this county. There are three cases in which charges of murder or manslaughter are to be investigated.

INDIAN SCHOOLS.

Facilities on White Earth Reserve Are Overtaxed.

The schools on the White Earth reservation opened last week with a large attendance. When the Mille Lacs Indians are removed here there will be added to the school population between 200 and 300 children. The present school capacity is sufficient for about 400 pupils. Proposals are now being advertised for furnishing and delivering the necessary material for the construction and completion of two day schools with a capacity of thirty pupils each. A day school is now being maintained at the agency with an average attendance of about forty. This school does not differ in any way from the ordinary district school in rural white communities. The government furnishes the necessary books, school furniture and fuel and pays the teacher. In the day schools away from the agency it is customary to have a teacher and a housekeeper, and the children are given a noonday meal and taught in the ordinary domestic duties. This plan is likely to be followed in the new day schools to be erected.

Agents from the different non-reservation schools have been on the reservation collecting pupils for their respective schools. Many pupils have been transferred from the reservation schools to the larger Indian training schools located off the reservation. Some have gone to Riggs' institute in South Dakota, to Genoa Indian training school at Genoa, Neb., to Pipestone school at Pipestone, Minn., Pierre, S. D., Lawrence, Kan., and Chilocco, Okla. There are now about 300 pupils belonging to this reservation in attendance at these non-reservation schools. The education of these pupils is costing the government about $50,000 a year, and the schools on the reservation are maintained at an annual cost of about $60,000, so that more than $100,000 is being annually expended for the education of the White Earth Chippewas.

Under the new ruling of the Indian office no child of more than one-eighth Indian blood who does not live on an Indian reservation and have an allotment there, can be enrolled as a pupil in any Indian school. Any pupil who runs away from an Indian school forfeits all school privileges unless he returns at his own expense and completes his time.

GOOD ROADS BOOM

May Be Expected—Two Views of Convention Results.

The success of the good roads convention is declared not only by the officials that have managed it, but by the farmers that have attended it.

Col. Martin Dodge, director of public road inquiries in the department of agriculture, who represents the federal government, said:

"We have been giving these good roads demonstrations for the past two years and we have visited eleven states, Michigan, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Alabama. We have held one and sometimes several conventions in each state, but nowhere have we held a convention that attracted so widespread and intelligent an interest; nowhere have the speakers been of like importance, representing as they have here both the church and the state through men of such reputation as Archbishop Ireland and Gov. Van Sant. We expect that immense profit to the Northwest will follow the series of demonstrations that we intend to make, but of course we should like to accept many invitations that we must refuse. To succeed at any point we require the cooperation of three factors—the federal government, the railways and the local community. Here we have been very fortunate. The government has sent to our assistance Supt. Meehan of the rural free delivery service and the local community has been strongly represented, also the fair association.

"I am convinced that you have a marvelous agricultural outlook in this state; not only is the farming population extremely intelligent and progressive, but the soil is very rich and there is an absence that surprises me of all such obstructions as rocks, forests, mountains, swamps and areas of untillable land. In fact, after passing many months in the Southeastern states, I can fairly say that you have made more progress within fifty years than the population down there has made in 200."

LOSS BY POTATO ROT.

Cold Weather Retards Corn—Climate and Crop Bulletin for Past Week.

The summary of the government's climate and crop service bulletin for Minnesota for the past week follows:

There were light showers on the 2d, 4th and 5th from Polk county northward, heavier rains in the eastern half on the 5th and light rains in the southern half on the evening of the 7th or morning of the 8th. The heaviest rains during the week were in the southeastern counties on the 5th. Every day of the week was moderately cool, except the 7th and on the morning of the 4th there were light frosts, which caused no injury except in a few much exposed places, where flax was frosted a little. There was little or no rain during the week in the middle west and southwest, and in parts of the central portion, and there stacking and threshing have progressed well, but elsewhere in the state all work in grain was hindered and delayed by the showers. There is still a little late flax to be cut in different parts of the state. Potatoes are being dug. The potato rot is causing considerable loss. The cool weather is retarding the ripening of corn and the late varieties will require good weather until Sept. 20 to ripen. Some flint corn is being cut in small quantities from Crow Wing county southward along the Mississippi. There is a good deal of corn this season which will be caught by frost unless cold weather holds off unusually late. As soon as this corn is frosted it should be cut without delay, and if possible before rain, in order that it may be saved in the best condition.

ESCAPES ON A RACE HORSE.

Montana Fugitive Convict Surrenders After a Queer Escapade.

Deer Lodge, Mont., Sept. 14.—Tom O'Brien, who escaped from the state penitentiary about three weeks ago, early yesterday morning presented himself at the prison doors and surrendered. O'Brien's case is most unique. O'Brien's object in escaping was that he might have the public on his side of the alleged crime for which he was sent to the prison. Pursued by the officers, the fugitive furnished letter after letter to the Butte Miner, in which he set forth his case, pleading for public sympathy. O'Brien is a graduated veterinary surgeon and was a trusty at the penitentiary. Before he escaped he gave the prison hound opium and then mounted a well known race horse belonging to the warden, on which he made a flying rush past the guards.

MANY STORES BURN.

Heavy Fire Loss at Prentice Yesterday Morning.

Prentice, Wis., Sept. 14.—Fire here burned out one whole block and part of another yesterday morning. The following buildings were consumed: Owen Bros.' general store and dwelling house, Columbia hotel, S. T. Nelson's shoe store, Oliver Valoin' saloon, C. Myor's hotel, laundry, barber shop and millinery store, Emmerson Bros.' office and several barns and storehouses. The loss is about $50,000; partly insured. The fire originated in the Columbia hotel, caused by the overturning of a lamp.

CAR JUMPS TRACK.

Director of Road Has Leg Broken — Others Escape.

Iowa Falls, Iowa, Sept. 14.—A motor containing President E. S. Ellsworth, Auditor W. V. Shipley, Directors G. E. Shaw and William Welden and Engineer R. C. Young, jumped the track on the Des Moines, Iowa Falls & Northern road near Nevada. All escaped without serious injury except Shaw, whose worst hurt is a fractured leg. A special from this city went to the scene of the accident to bring home the party, which was making a tour of inspection of the line.

ENGINEER KILLED IN WRECK.

Smashup Near Hibbing on the Eastern Minnesota Is Fatal to One.

West Superior, Wis., Sept. 14.—H. T. Miller, residing in this city, an engineer on the Eastern Minnesota branch of the Great Northern, was killed in a wreck near Hibbing. An ore laden train ran into a loaded freight car which had been switched to the main track from a siding.

Money for Normal Dormitory.

Aberdeen, S. D., Sept. 14.—The state board of regents have passed a resolution recommending that the state legislature appropriate $10,000 for the erection of a dormitory for the Northern normal school and $2,000 for furnishing the same. The board is highly pleased with the way the school has opened, and are disposed to aid it in every way possible. The school is filling rapidly, and pupils will be greatly convenienced by the erection of a dormitory.

Mysterious Shooting.

Kensington, Minn., Sept. 14.—Theodore Thompson, suffering from powder burns in one side of the face and a wound from a rifle ball in the neck, presented himself at Dr. Munn's office to have the wounds dressed. There is some mystery about how the shooting occurred which Thompson does not seem inclined to clear up. The wounds are not considered dangerous.

Lake City to Pickle Things.

Lake City, Minn., Sept. 13. — Lake City is to have a new industry in the near future. Several leading men of this city are interested in establishing a pickling factory and have organized with a capital of $100,000. The plant will be in the old Lake City flouring mill and will employ upward of 100 men.

Another Horse Is Stolen.

Winona, Minn., Sept. 14.—The horse thieves are still active in this vicinity, despite the extra efforts sheriffs are taking to prevent depredations. Thursday a horse and buggy belonging to a Mr. Merman, who lives a short distance west of the city on the Minnesota City road, were stolen.

Expensive Law Violation.

Waukon, Iowa, Sept. 14.—In the district court, now in session, Henry Rippo of New Albin, was fined, which, with costs, made $333.70. He had to pay for running his mulct joint without securing bondsmen as the law requires.

He Killed Three.

Portland, Or., Sept. 14. — The jury in the case of A. J. Belding, charged with killing three persons in this city two months ago, returned a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree.

Killed While Hunting.

Wood Lake, Minn., Sept. 14.—A son of Edward Johnson, a farmer living about four miles west of here, was accidentally shot to death while hunting with a few of his friends.

Bad Blaze at Ackley.

Ackley, Iowa, Sept. 14. — Fire destroyed the business houses of G. D. Lann, Otto Radlo, Anderson & Wheeler, W. H. Saucer marble works and a Chinese laundry.

Shy One Eye.

La Crosse, Wis., Sept. 14. — John McCloud of Vinegar Hill lost one eye and possibly both by accidentally dropping a bottle of powder on the stove.

Eloped With a Child.

Boscobel, Wis., Sept. 14. — Myron Eggleston, a familiar character about town, aged forty-six, eloped with the thirteen-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mark Dixon. Officers are on the trail of the couple.

Cholera Carries Off Hogs.

Curlew, Iowa, Sept. 14. — Hog cholera is now raging in this vicinity to an alarming extent. Many farmers have lost all their hogs, and the hog crop will be light from this part of the state.

OIL FIELD ON FIRE

LOSS WILL BE HEAVY, IF THE FIELD IS NOT ENTIRELY DESTROYED.

BURNING OIL RUNS IN STREAMS

FIRE SPREADS RAPIDLY AND THE WHOLE FIELD WILL SOON BE ABLAZE.

TANKS OF PETROLEUM EXPLODES

SEEMS LITTLE CHANCE OF STAYING THE PROGRESS OF THE FLAMES.

Beaumont, Tex., Sept. 13.—The oil field is on fire, and, judging by the great volume of smoke which is flowing in from Spindle Top, there is grave danger that great loss will be sustained, if the field is not entirely destroyed. The fire started in some waste oil along the Texas & Sabine tracks and burned about thirty feet of trestle. This was put under control and it was believed all danger had passed, but in the meantime the fire in some way had been communicated to the field and a number of huge settling tanks containing thousands of barrels of petroleum have already exploded, and others are reported to be in the direct line of the fire, which has spread over a wide area already. The ground is saturated with oil and there is no chance for stopping the progress of the flames for some time. The fire is spreading rapidly and it is believed that the whole field will be ignited in a few hours. A telephone message from Gladys, which is the station at the oil field, says the whole of the Keith-Ward tract, embracing several acres and containing a large number of wells, has been burned over and it is believed that some of the

Wells Have Caught Fire,

though this is not as yet positively determined, as no one can approach to find out.

At 1 o'clock this morning the big tanks belonging to the Higgins company were burning. Runners had been sent out in every direction for the men who own or represent the companies.

The telephone service is entirely inadequate to care for the scores of calls and the streets are filled with people, thousands of whom are on the way to the field in every sort of vehicle and on foot.

A statement issued yesterday showed that there are 410 producing wells in the field, some of which are buried under earth to safeguard against fire.

The agent of the Gladys telephoned that the flames seemed to have remained stationary during the last few minutes, and unless there are further explosions of oil tanks the fire may be confined to the present burning district. The tank known as the Higgins has blown off its top and the burning oil is running along the ground, and this may be communicated to other tanks.

PEOPLE OF MARS OUR SUPERIORS

The Martians as a Race a Million Years Our Seniors.

Chicago, Sept. 13.—That the planet Mars is peopled by a superior race of human beings is the opinion of Prof. George W. Hough, astronomer at the Dearborn observatory at Northwestern university. The noted educator is just as firm in his conviction that the people of the earth will never be able to converse with the inhabitants of the sister planet. It is possible that the inhabitants of the other planet may attempt to signal within the next few hundred centuries, but he considers earthly science too much in its infancy to accomplish any such feat. The Martians and their secrets are destined, in the opinion of Prof. Hough, to remain as a closed book to men of the earth, at least for hundreds of centuries. The astronomer, after years of investigation and almost ceaseless observation of the planet's movements, has reached the conclusion that this communication, if possible, would be of great advantage to the scientists of the earth.

That the people of Mars are superior to the inhabitants of the earth he explains by the assertion that the race of Martians is at least 1,000,000 years older than that on the earth. In this almost inconceivable length of time the people there have gained a depth of scientific research he considers that is impossible here on earth.

"AND LADY."

Bradlee Strong and May Yohe Are Registered at Buenos Ayres.

Buenos Ayres, Sept. 13. — Putnam Bradlee Strong and May Yohe arrived here last Sunday on the royal mail steamship Danube. They are at the Grand hotel where they are registered as "Bradlee Strong and lady." May Yohe is ill and a physician was called to attend her. The couple have elegant rooms at the hotel.

ASKS RED HAT FOR IRELAND.

Roosevelt Intimates That Archbishop's Promotion Would Please.

Rome, Sept. 13.—Vatican authorities say President Roosevelt has intimated to the pope that he would be pleased to see Archbishop Ireland created a cardinal as a reward for the archbishop's services to the church and the country.

Miss Johnson's Body Recovered.

Janesville, Wis., Sept. 13.—The body of Miss Edith Johnson of Chicago, who committed suicide by drowning herself in Rock river Monday, was recovered yesterday. The burial will take place in this city.

Is 102 Years Old.

Eldora, Iowa, Sept. 13. — Samuel Wescott, aged 102 years, is the oldest man in this section and resides at Toledo. He is in possession of all his faculties. He asserts that he will live ten years longer.

HE BARKS LIKE A DOG.

Boy's Condition Attributed to a Shock Sustained by Picking Up a Live Wire.

Waukegan, Ill., Sept. 12. — Because his ten-year-old son barks like a dog and has been transformed from a bright boy to a helpless object of pity, Hughlett M. Harrell of North Chicago has sued the Chicago & Milwaukee Electric Railway company and the Mineral Point Zinc company for $10,000. The complaint alleges that the boy's condition is due to negligence on the part of the railway company in failing to take proper precautions for the safety of the public. Young Harrell, while crossing the railroad track May 27, took hold of a live wire which trailed to the ground. The shock was so severe that for some time death was feared. His recovery was followed by loss of control over his muscles and a generally weakened physical condition, hence the suit.

MUST ANSWER FOR MURDER.

Inquiry Into the Bloomington Case Brings to Light Some Affectionate Letters.

Bloomington, Ill., Sept. 12.—Following a searching investigation of the facts in the case of Mrs. Joseph Leslie, who was killed by Daisy Carlton, while attempting to horsewhip the latter, the coroner's jury last night brought in a verdict recommending that Daisy be held to the grand jury without bail. The inquisition failed to develop any new facts, with the exception of the discovery of eight affectionate letters written by the Carlton girl to the husband of the dead woman. These communications, which were of the most tender description, had fallen into the possession of Mrs. Leslie, and had been confided to a woman friend for safekeeping. The references to the wife were anything but complimentary.

TO BEAT OUT HIS BRAINS.

Farmer Near Crookston Hammers His Head With a Sledge.

Crookston, Minn., Sept. 12.—Julius Volker, a wealthy German farmer living near this city, attempted to beat his own brains out by hammering himself with a heavy sledge. Being unable to accomplish his purpose, he cut his throat with a pocket knife and then stabbed himself in the abdomen. Volker's mind has been unbalanced for some time, according to statements of his family. He has been acting very queerly recently and has been watched pretty closely by the various members of his family. It is hardly probable that the man will live.

CAUSES A STIR.

Cashier of a Helena Company Arrested for a Shortage.

Helena, Mont., Sept. 12.—John Andross, for several years cashier of the Helena Water Works company, is under arrest charged with embezzling the funds of the company. The shortage is reported to amount to several thousand dollars. Andross came here seven years ago from Seattle to accept the position and has always borne a splendid reputation. News of his arrest has created a mild sensation. It is reported he has made a confession, but this cannot be verified.

DOC AMES IS NOT A DODGER.

Will Return to Minneapolis When He Recovers His Health.

West Baden, Ind., Sept. 12.—Former Mayor A. A. Ames of Minneapolis received the first news yesterday of a report that his bond had been forfeited and that application would be made to the governor of Indiana for extradition papers. Ames said that he never intended to dodge the charge of corruption in office, but that his health at this time would not permit him to leave West Baden. He said:

"When I recover my health I intend to go to Minneapolis and give them the fight of their lives. I will resist any attempt at extradition on account of my health."

TOOK CARBOLIC ACID.

Faribault Man Feared He Would Die of Consumption.

Faribault, Minn., Sept. 12. — Jesse Healy, aged twenty-two years, committed suicide by taking carbolic acid in his room at the Commercial hotel, where he had been employed for the last year. A fear that he would die of consumption as his mother and two sisters had, preyed upon his mind until it forced him to commit the deed. The young man is a son of Timothy Healy of this city and has always lived in Faribault.

"MAMMA" LEMON IS DEAD.

Wife of Iowa Editor and Philanthropist Goes to Her Reward.

Council Bluffs, Iowa, Sept. 12.—Mrs. J. G. Lemon, wife of Rev. J. G. Lemon, editor, philanthropist and minister, died yesterday. For twenty years Rev. and Mrs. Lemon have been engaged in charitable work for homeless and destitute children and old people which has extended to every section of America. As "Mamma" Lemon she has been known to thousands of homeless boys and girls.

FOR THE MASONIC HOME.

Montana Pioneer Stockman Leaves Wealth to Order.

Helena, Mont., Sept. 12.—John Auchard, a pioneer stockman who died here Monday, left the greater portion of his estate to the Masonic grand lodge of Montana, to be held in trust for a proposed Masonic home. The will gives the entire estate, except a 200-acre homestead and $5,000 left to the widow, to the grand lodge. The bequest includes 30,000 acres of land in Lewis and Clarke county and livestock. The grand master of the grand lodge is made executor of the estate.

HIT BY A TRAIN.

Narrow Escape for a Couple Near La Crosse.

La Crosse, Wis., Sept. 12.—The Burlington limited, south-bound, while going at high speed, struck a buggy containing George Dittman and Lucille Solstad, killing the horse, demolishing the buggy and hurling the occupants down a twenty-foot embankment. They are unhurt, except that Dittman has lost all recollection of any events that took place before the accident for some days back.

WILLING TO 'FESS

ALL OF THE ALLEGED BOODLERS READY TO TELL WHAT THEY KNOW.

IT IS TOO LATE NOW FOR THAT

CIRCUIT ATTORNEY ALREADY HAS ENOUGH EVIDENCE TO CONVICT.

GRAND JURY IS STILL AT IT

WILL CONTINUE INVESTIGATIONS OF CROOKED DEALS FOR SOME TIME.

St. Louis, Sept. 13.—The principal item of interest yesterday in connection with the investigation being carried on by Circuit Attorney Folk into the alleged boodle combines in both branches of the municipal assembly were the return of Former Delegate William Tamblyn from Cleveland in the custody of an officer, and the sessions of the grand jury. Before being placed in a cell Tamblyn asked to see Mr. Folk. His intention was to tell all he knew about the doings of the combine in the house of delegates; but he finally decided not to say anything at this time, for the circuit attorney told Tamblyn that if he desired to make any statement about matters that were being investigated he must do so voluntarily, without hope of clemency. Mr. Folk said he had all the evidence needed to convict the members of the house combine.

Mr. Folk said yesterday that almost every one of the indicted members of the house of delegates combine had offered to turn state's evidence, but he than two or three with promise of clemency. Before J. K. Murrell's return and confession the members of the combine, Mr. Folk said, were so sure of their position that offers of the authorities to take care of the informers were spurned.

The grand jury held two sessions yesterday. At each session a number of members of the council that passed the city lighting bill in 1899, in addition to Robert McMath, former president of the board of public improvements, and the Hemens brothers, electrical contractors, were called on to tell what they knew of the transactions connected with the defeat and passage of such measures.

All day long rumors were rife that indictments would shortly be found against members of the council combine, but the grand jury adjourned until to-day without taking such action. Mr. Folk said the grand jury would continue the investigation into the lighting scandal for several days to come.

THREATENED TO KILL FOLK.

Man Arrested for Making Threats Against the Prosecutor.

Alfred Keyes, 3808 Marino avenue, was arrested last night by Detective Harrington on complaint of Dr. Schuchardt, who charged Keyes with threatening to kill Circuit Attorney Folk, who is prosecuting the alleged bribe-taking members of the city council. Keyes, when taken before Chief Desmond, admitted saying to Dr. Schuchardt that Charles Kratz, one of the missing combine men, was his friend, but denied that he made any allusion to Circuit Attorney Folk. Keyes said that Dr. Schuchardt spoke disparagingly of Kratz and he defended him. Chief Desmond was convinced that Keyes meant no harm and permitted him to go.

PLAYS WITH THE KAISER.

American Generals Indulge in Mimic Onslaught.

Frankfort-on-the-Oder, Sept. 13. — Maj. Gen. Young and Brig. Gen. Wood and their aides-de-camp, Lieut. McKinley and Lieut. McCoy, charged with the cavalry, led by Emperor William. The Americans did not draw their swords, but they rode with the garde du corps, one of the household regiments and the emperor's bodyguard. This charge was the climax of the maneuvers. The emperor, mounted on a white Arabian horse, directed the movements and worked as hard as the troopers. The empress was present on horseback. Adjt. Gen. Corbin and Col. John A. Johnston, Earl Roberts and other foreign guests were on a hill, around which the charge was made. Gen. Corbin said it was the finest military spectacle he ever saw. Emperor William's customary salute to the Americans was, "Well, how's the khaki brigade?"

CERTAIN OF SUCCESS.

Marconi Expects to Flash Message Across to England.

London, Sept. 13. — Guthbert Hall, the London manager of the Marconi Wireless company, in an interview yesterday said Sig. Marconi would reach the United States in three weeks on the Cruiser Carlo Alberto, which has been placed at his disposal by the Italian government and which is outfitted with a wireless system. On his arrival in America Marconi will immediately begin his last series of experiments preparatory to the establishment of a commercial wireless service across the Atlantic. Marconi anticipates success in the fullest sense of the word.

Burglars Blow Safe.

Ishpeming, Mich., Sept. 13. — Burglars blew open the safe in the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway station at Republic. The agent had taken the money home with him. A revolver was all that was secured.

Donations by Carnegie.

London, Sept. 13. — Mr. Carnegie's latest donations to establish public libraries in England amount to $190,000. The Battersea council, which is strongly Socialist, accepted an offer of $75,000 by a vote of 27 to 10.

The Crimson Blind

By Fred M. White

CHAPTER XLIV. (Continued.)

"Who seems to be at the bottom of the whole trouble," said David. "But do you think that was the real ring on the poor girl's finger?"

"I don't know. I fancy Henson had a copy made for emergencies. It was he who sent the copy to Claire, and it was the copy that Littimer saw on her hand. You see, directly Frank broke open that safe, Henson, who was at the castle at the time, saw his opportunity he could easily scheme some way of making use of it. If that plot against Claire had failed he would have invented another. And the unexpected suicide of Claire Carfax played into his hands. Henson has that ring somewhere, and it will be our task to find it."

"And when we have done so?"

"Give it to Lord Littimer, and tell him where we found it. And then we shall be rid of one of the most pestilential rascals the world has ever seen. When you go back to Brighton I want you to tell this story to Hatherly Bell."

"I will," David replied. "What a weird, fascinating story it is! And the sooner I am back the better I shall be pleased. I wonder if our man is awake yet. If you will excuse me, I will go up and see. Ah!"

There was the sound of somebody moving overhead.

CHAPTER XLV.

On the Trail.

At the same moment Williams came softly in. There was a grin of satisfaction on his face.

"The brute is fast asleep," he said. "I've just been in his room. He left the lamp burning, and there is a lump on one side of his head as big as an ostrich egg. But he didn't mean to go to sleep; he hasn't taken off any of his clothes. On the whole, sir, wouldn't it be better to wake our man up and get him away?"

David was of the same opinion. Van Sneck was lying on the bed, looking vacantly about him. He seemed older and more worn, perhaps, because his beard and moustache were growing ragged and dirty on his face. He pressed his hand to his head in a confused kind of way.

"I tell you I can't find it," he said; "the thing slipped out of my hand—a small thing like that easily might. What's the good making a fuss about a ring not worth £20? Search my pockets, if you like. What a murderous looking dog you are when you're out of temper."

All this in a vague, rambling way, in a slightly-foreign accent. Steel touched him on the shoulder.

"Won't you come back with me to Brighton?" he said.

"Certainly," was the ready response; "you look a good sort of chap. I'll go anywhere you please. Not that I've got a penny of money left. What a spree it has been. Who are you?"

"My name is Steel. I am David Steel, the novelist."

A peculiarly-cunning look came over Van Sneck's face.

"I got your letter," he said. "And I came. It was after I had had that row with Henson. Henson is a bigger scoundrel than I am, though you may not think it."

"I accept your statement implicitly," David said, drily.

"Well, he is. And I got your letter. And I called.....And you nearly killed me. And I dropped it down in the corner of the conservatory."

"Dropped what?" David asked, sharply.

"Nothing," said Van Sneck. "What do you mean by talking about dropping things? I never dropped anything in my life. I make others do that, eh, eh! But I can't remember anything. It just comes back to me and then there is a wheel goes round in my head..... Who are you?"

David gave the matter up as hopeless. This was, emphatically, a case for Bell. Once let him get Van Sneck back to Brighton and Bell could do the rest.

"We'd better go," he said to Enid. "We are merely wasting time here."

"I suppose so," Enid said, thoughtfully. "All the same, I should greatly like to know what it is that our friend, Van Sneck, dropped."

It was a long and tedious journey back to Brighton again, for the patient seemed to tire easily, and evinced a marked predilection for sitting by the roadside and singing. It was very late before David reached his house. Bell beamed his satisfaction. Van Sneck, with a half-gleam of recognition of his surroundings, and with a statement that he had been there before, lapsed into silence. Bell produced a small phial in a chemist's wrapper, and poured the contents into a glass. With a curt command to drink, he passed the glass over to Van Sneck.

The latter drank the small dose, and Bell carried him more or less to a small ground-floor bed room behind the dining room. There he speedily undressed his patient and got him into bed. Van Sneck was practically fast asleep before his head had touched the pillow.

"I went out and got that dose with a view to eventualities," Bell explained. "I know pretty well what is the matter with Van Sneck, and I propose to operate upon him, with the help of Heritage. I have put him in my bed and locked the door. I shall sleep in the big arm chair."

David flung himself into a big deck lounge and lighted a cigarette.

"My word that this has been a bit of business," he said. "Pour me out a little whisky in one of the long glasses and fill it up with soda....Oh, that's better. I never felt so thirsty in my life. I got Van Sneck away without Henson having the slightest suspicion that he was there, and I had the satisfaction of giving Henson a smashing blow without his seeing me."

"Sounds like conjuring," Bell said, behind his cigar. "Explain yourself."

David went carefully into details. He told the story of Prince Rupert's ring to a listener who followed him with the most flattering attention.

"Of course, all this is new to me," Bell said, presently, "though I knew the family well up to that time. Depend upon it, Enid is right. Henson has got the ring. But how fortunately everything seems to have turned out for the scoundrel."

"If a man likes to be an unscrupulous blackguard, he can make use of all events," David said. "But even Henson is not quite so clever as we take him to be. He has found out the trick we played upon him over Chris Henson, but he hasn't the faintest idea that all this time he has been living under the same roof at Littimer."

"The girl is a wonderful actress," Bell replied. "I only guessed who she was. If I hadn't known as much as I do, she would have deceived me. But Henson has shot his bolt. After we have operated upon Van Sneck we shall be pretty near the truth. It's a great pull to have him in the house."

"And a nasty thing for Henson—"

"Who will find out before to-morrow is over. I feel pretty sure that this house is watched carefully. Any firm of private detectives would do that, and they need be told nothing, either. I know that I was followed when I went to the chemist's to fetch that dose for our friend yonder. Still, it is a sign that Henson is getting frightened."

"Why do you bring Heritage into this matter?" David asked.

"Well, for a variety of reasons. First of all, Heritage is an old friend of mine, and I take a great interest in his case. I am going to give him a chance to recover his lost confidence, and he is a splendid operator. Besides, I want to know why Henson has gone out of his way to be so kind to Heritage. And, finally, Heritage was the family doctor of the Carfax people you just mentioned before he went to practice in London. Let me once get Heritage round again, and I shall be greatly disappointed if he does not give us a good deal of valuable information regarding Reginald Henson."

"And Cross. What about him?"

"Oh, Cross will do as I ask him. Without egotism, he knows that the case is perfectly safe in my hands. And if we care to look after Van Sneck, why, there will be one the less burden in the hospital. What a funny business it is! Van Sneck gets nearly done to death under this roof, and he comes back here to be cured again!"

David yawned, sleepily, as he rose.

"Well, I've had enough of it for to-night," he said; "I'm dog-tired, and I must confess to feeling sick of the Hensons and Littimer's and all their works."

"Including their friend, Miss Ruth Gates?" Bell said, slily. "Still, they have made pretty good use of you, and I expect you will be glad to get back to your work again. At the same time, you need not trouble your head for plots for many a day."

David admitted that the situation had its compensations, and went off to bed. Bell met him the next day, as fresh as if he had had a full night's rest, and vouchsafed the information that the patient was as well as possible. He was cold and no longer feverish.

"In fact, he is ready for the operation at any time," he said. "I shall get Heritage here to dinner, and we shall operate afterwards with electric light. It will be a good steadier for Heritage's nerves, and the electric light is the best light of all for this business. If you have got a few yards of spare flex from your reading lamp, I'll rig the thing up without troubling your electrician. I can attach it to your study lamp."

"I've got what you want," David said. "Now, come in to breakfast."

There was a pile of letters on the table, and on the top a telegram. It was a long message, and Bell watched David's face curiously.

"From Littimer Castle?" he suggested. "Am I right?"

"As usual," David cried. "My little scheme over that diamond star has worked magnificently. Miss Chris tells me she has—by Jove, Bell, just listen—she has solved the problem of the cigar case; she has found out the whole thing. She wants me to meet her in London to-morrow, and she will tell me everything!"

CHAPTER XLVI.

Littimer's Eyes Are Opened.

Lord Littimer sat on the terrace shaded from the sun by an awning over his deck chair. From his expression, he seemed to be at peace with all the world. His brown, eager face had lost its usually keen, suspicious look; he smoked a cigarette, lazily. Chris sat opposite him, looking as little like a hardworking secretary as possible.

As a matter of fact, there was nothing for her to do. Littimer had already tired of his lady-secretary idea, and, had Chris not interested and amused him, he would have found some means to get rid of her before now.

But she did interest, and amuse and puzzle him. There was something charmingly reminiscent about the girl. She was like somebody he had once known and cared for, but, for the life of him, he could not think who. And when curiosity sometimes got the better of his good breeding, Chris would baffle him in the most engaging manner.

"Really, you are an exceedingly clever girl," he said.

"In fact, we are both exceedingly clever," Chris replied, coolly. "And yet nobody is ever quite so clever as he imagines himself to be. Do you ever make bad mistakes, Lord Littimer?"

"Sometimes," Littimer said, with a touch of cynical humor. "For instance, I married, some years ago. That was bad. Then I had a son, which was worse."

"At one time you were fond of your family?"

"Well, upon my word, you are the only creature I ever met who has had the audacity to ask me that question. Yes; I was very fond of my wife and son, and, God help me, I am fond of them still. I don't know why I talk to you like this."

"I do," Chris said, gently. "It is because, unconsciously, you yearn for sympathy. And you fancy you are in no way to blame; you imagine that you acted in the only way consistent with your position and dignity. You fancied that your son was a vulgar thief. And I am under the impression that Lady Littimer had money."

"She had a large fortune," Littimer said, faintly. "Miss Lee, do you know that I have a great mind to box your ears?"

Chris laughed unsteadily. She was horribly frightened, though she did not show it. She had been waiting for days to catch Littimer in this mood. And she did not feel disposed to go back now. The task must be accomplished some time.

"Lady Littimer was very rich," she went on, "and she was devoted to Frank, your son. Now, if he had wanted a large sum of money very badly, and had gone to his mother, she would have given it to him without the slightest hesitation?"

"What fond mother wouldn't?"

"I am obliged to you for conceding the point. Your son wanted money, and he robbed you, when he could have had anything for the asking from his mother."

"Sounds logical," Littimer said, flippantly. "Who had the money?"

"The same man who stole Prince Rupert's ring—Reginald Henson."

Littimer dropped his cigarette and sat upright in his chair. He was keen and alert enough now. There were traces of agitation on his face.

"That is a serious accusation," he said.

"No more serious than your accusation against your son," Chris retorted.

"Well, perhaps not," Littimer admitted. "But why do you take up Frank's cause in this way? Is there any romance budding under my unconscious eyes?"

"Now you are talking nonsense," Chris said, with just a touch of color in her cheeks. "I say, and I am going to prove it when the time comes, that Reginald Henson was the thief. I am sorry to pain you, but it is absolutely necessary to go into these matters. When those foolish letters, written by a foolish girl, fell into your hands, your son vowed that he would get them back, by force, if necessary. He made that rash speech in the hearing of Reginald Henson. Henson probably lurked about until he saw the robbery committed. Then it occurred to him that he might do a little robbery on his own account, seeing that your son would get the credit of it. The safe was open; so he walked off with your ring and your money."

"My dear young lady, this is all mere surmise."

"So you imagine. At that time Reginald Henson had a kind of home, which he was running at 218 Brunswick Square, Brighton. Lady Littimer had just relinquished a similar undertaking there. Previously Reginald Henson had a home at Huddersfield. Mind you, he didn't run either in his own name, and he kept studiously in the background. But he was desperately hard up at the time, in consequence of his dissipation and extravagance, and the money he collected for his home went into his own pocket. Then the police got wind of the affair, and Reginald Henson discreetly disappeared from Brighton just in time to save himself from arrest for frauds there and at Huddersfield. A member of the Huddersfield police is in a high position at Brighton. He has recognized Reginald Henson as the man who was 'wanted' at Huddersfield. I don't know if there will be a prosecution after all these years; but there you are."

"You are speaking from authority?"

"Certainly I am. Reginald Henson, as such, is not known to Inspector Marley, but I sent the latter a photograph of Henson, and he returned it this morning, with a letter to the effect that it was the man the Huddersfield police were looking for."

"What an interesting girl you are," Littimer murmured. "Always so full of surprises. Our dear Reginald is even a greater rascal than I took him for."

"Well, he took your money, and that saved him. He took your ring, a facsimile of which he had made before for some ingenious purpose. It came with a vengeance. Then Claire Carfax committed suicide, thanks to your indiscretion and folly."

"Go on. Rub it in. Never mind about my feelings."

"I am not minding," Chris said, coolly. "Henson saw his game, and played it boldly. I could not have told you all this yesterday, but a letter I had this morning cleared the ground wonderfully. Henson wanted to cause family differences, and he succeeded. Previously he got Dr. Bell out of his way by means of the second Rembrandt. You can't deny that there is a second Rembrandt now, seeing that it is locked up in your safe. And where do you think Bell found it? Why, at 218 Brunswick Square, Brighton, where Henson had to leave it seven years ago, when the police were so hot upon his trail. He was fearful lest you and Bell should come together again, and that is why he came here at night to steal your Rembrandt. And yet, you trusted that man blindly all the time your own son was suffering on mere suspicions. How blind you have been!"

"I'm blind still," Littimer said, curtly. "My dear young lady, I admit that you are making out a pretty strong case; indeed, I might go farther, and say that you have all my sympathy. But what you say would not be taken as evidence in a court of law. If you produce that ring, for instance—but that is at the bottom of the North Sea."

Chris took a small cardboard box from her pocket, and from it produced a ring. It was a ruby ring with black pearls on either side, and had some inscription inside.

"Look at that," she said. "It was sent to me to-day by my—by a friend of mine. It is the ring which Reginald Henson shows to Lady Littimer when he wants money from her. It was lost by Henson a night or two ago, and it fell into the hands of some one who is interested, like myself, in the exposure and disgrace of Reginald Henson."

Littimer examined the ring carefully.

"It is a wonderfully-good imitation," he said, presently.

"So I am told," said Chris. "So good that it must have actually been copied from the original. Now, how could Henson have a copy made unless he possessed the original?? Will you be good enough to answer me that question, Lord Littimer?"

Littimer could do no more than gaze at the ring in his hand for some time.

"I could have sworn—indeed, I am ready to swear—that the real ring was never in anybody's possession but mine from the day Frank was a year old until it disappeared. Of course, scores of people have looked at it, Henson among the rest. But how did Claire Carfax—"

"Easily enough. Henson had a first copy made from a description; I don't know why; probably we shall never know why. Probably he had it done when he saw your son and Miss Carfax had struck up a flirtation. It was he who forged a letter from Frank to Miss Carfax, inclosing the ring. By that means he hoped to create mischief which, if it had been nipped in the bud, could never have been traced to him. As matters turned out, he succeeded beyond his wildest expectations. He got the real ring, too, which was likely to prove a very useful thing in case he ever wanted to make terms. A second and a faithful copy was made—the copy you hold in your hands—to hold temptingly over Lady Littimer's head when he wanted large sums of money from her."

"The scoundrel! He gets the money, of course?"

"He does. To my certain knowledge he has had nearly £70,000. But the case is in good hands. You have only to wait a few days longer and the man will be exposed. Already, as you see, I have wound his accomplice, the Rev. James Merritt, around my finger. Of course, the idea of my getting up a bazar has all been nonsense. I am only waiting for a little further information, and then Merritt will feel the iron hand under the velvet glove. Unless I am greatly mistaken, Merritt can tell us where Rupert's ring is. Already Van Sneck is in our grasp."

"Van Sneck! Is he in England?"

"He is. Did you read that strange case of a man being found, half-murdered, in the conservatory of Mr. Steel, the novelist, in Brighton? Well, that was Van Sneck. But I can't tell you any more at present. You must wait and be content."

"Tell me one thing, and I will wait as long as you like. Who are you?"

Chris shook her head merrily. A great relief had been taken off her mind. She had approached a delicate and difficult matter and she had succeeded beyond her expectations. That she had shaken the man opposite her sorely was evident from his face. The hardness was gone from his eyes, his lips were no longer bitter and cynical.

"I may have been guilty of a great wrong," he murmured. "All these years I have been living under a misapprehension. And you have told me what I should never have suspected, although I never had a high opinion of my dear Reginald. Where is my wife now?"

"She is still at Longdean Grange. You will notice a great change in her, a great and sorrowful change. But it is not too late to—"

Littimer rose and went swiftly towards the house. At any other time the action would have been rude, but Chris fully understood. She had touched the man to the bottom of his soul, and he was anxious to hide his emotion.

"Poor man!" Chris murmured. "His hard cynicism conceals a deal of suffering. But the suffering is past; we have only to wait patiently for daylight now."

Chris rose, restlessly, in her turn, and strolled along the terrace to her favorite spot looking over the cliffs. There was nobody about; it was very hot there. The girl removed her glasses and pushed back the banded hair from her forehead. She had drawn a photograph from her pocket, which she was regarding intently. She was quite heedless of the fact that somebody was coming along the cliffs towards her. She raised the photograph to her lips and kissed it tenderly.

"Poor Frank!" she murmured. "Poor fellow, so weak and amiable. And yet, with all your faults—"

Chris paused, and a little eager cry escaped her lips. Frank Littimer, looking very wild and haggard, stood before her.

"I beg your pardon," he began. "I came to see you because—"

The words died away. He staggered back, pale as the foam beating on the rocks below, his hands clutching at his left side, as though there was some mortal pain there.

"Chris," he murmured. "Chris, Chris, Chris! And they told me—"

He could say no more, he could only stand there trembling from head to foot, fearful lest his mocking senses were making sport of him. Surely it was some beautiful vision he had come upon. With one unsteady hand he touched the girl's sleeve; he pressed her warm red cheeks with his fingers, and with that touch his manhood came back to him.

"Darling," he whispered, eagerly. "Dearest, what does it mean?"

Chris stood there, smiling rosily. She had not meant to betray herself; fate had done that for her, and she was not sorry. It was a cruel trick they had played upon Frank, but it had been necessary. Chris held out her hand with a loving little gesture.

"Are you going to kiss me, dear?" she asked, sweetly.

Frank Littimer needed no further invitation. It was quiet and secluded there, and nobody could possibly see them. With a little sigh Chris felt her lover's arm about her and his kisses warm upon her lips, the clever brilliant girl had disappeared; a pretty, timid creature stood in her place for the time. For the moment Frank Littimer could do no more than gaze into her eyes with rapture and amazement. There was plenty of time for explanations.

"Let us go into the arbour," Frank suggested. "No, I am not going to release your hand for a moment. If I do you will fly away again. Chris, dear Chris, why do you serve me so??"

"It was absolutely necessary," Chris replied. It was necessary to deceive Reginald Henson. But it was hard work the other night."

"You mean when I came here and—"

"Tried to steal the Rembrandt. Oh, you needn't explain. I know that you had to come. And we have Henson in our power at last."

Chris proceeded to explain from the beginning of all things. It was an exceedingly interesting and exciting narrative to Frank Littimer, and he followed it carefully. He would have remained there all day listening to the music of Chris's voice and looking into her eyes. He had come there miserable and downcast to ask a question, and behold he had suddenly found all the joy and sweetness of existence.

"And so you have accomplished all this?" he said, at length. "What a glorious adventure it must have been, and how clever you are! So is Mr. David Steel. Many a time I have tried to break through the shackles, but Reginald has always been too strong for me."

"Well he's shot his bolt, now," Chris smiled. "I have just been opening your father's eyes."

Frank laughed as he had not laughed for a long time.

"Do you mean to say he doesn't know who you are?" he asked.

"My dear boy, he hasn't the faintest idea. Neither had you the faintest idea when I made you a prisoner the other night. But he will know soon."

"God grant that he may," Frank said fervently.

He bent over and pressed his lips passionately to those of Chris. When he looked up again Lord Littimer was standing before the arbour, wearing his most cynical expression.

"He does know," he said. "My dear young lady, you need not move. The expression of sweet confusion on your face is infinitely pleasing. I did not imagine that one so perfectly self-possessed could look like that. It gives me quite a nice sense of superiority. And you, sir?"

The last words were uttered a little sternly. Frank had risen. His face was pale, his manner resolute and respectful.

"I came here to ask Miss Lee a question, sir, not knowing, of course, who she was."

"And she betrayed herself, eh?"

The Opium Curse in China.

The statement that a German firm has offered the Chinese government $16,000,000 annually for the exclusive right to sell opium throughout the empire, is significant for the evidence it affords of the hold which the opium curse has upon the Chinese people. It is quite as consistent for the Germans to secure a monopoly of this miserable traffic as it was for England to force it upon China in the first place, but in neither case is the transaction creditable to a professedl yChristian nation. The use of $15,000,000 worth of opium per year will go far towards offsetting all the good that all the missionary forces of other nations can do in China, and the fact that a traffic in the drug of such dimensions can be carried on successfully, is not a hopeful augury for the future of the Celestial empire.—Leslie's Weekly.

His Unkind "Fling."

"I saw him holding her hand," said her small brother, whereat all the other members of the family looked up.

"Yes," she replyied, calmly, "he has been studying palmistry.

"Oh!" said the small brother.

"He was reading the story of my life," she persisted, calmly.

For a moment it looked as if she had subdued the small brother. Then he remarked:

"You must be pretty old, Sis."

"What do you mean?" she demanded.

"It was a long story."

"Don't be absurd, Tommy."

"And a continued story."—Brooklyn Eagle.

Mrs. Campbell Was Angry.

Ex-Congressman Tim Campbell says Mrs. Campbell spoke to him the other day about the advertisement of a buttonless shirt.

"What kind of a shirt is that?" she inquired.

"Just like mine," answered the ex-congressman, who, in telling the story, said Mrs. Campbell didn't speak to him for a week.—New York Times.

A Deduction.

"I wan' shay ri' here that my wife's a charmer," declared the obviously-intoxicated gentleman.

No person contradicting him, he continued:

"I wan' shay again, gemmen, my wife's a charmer. Un'stan' me?—a charmer! Wow!"

Here a small, clear voice from the edge of the crowd was heard to inquire: "A snake-charmer?"—Judge.

How Necessary.

"How did that light opera of yours turn out?" asked the young composer.

"A beastly failure."

"What was the reason?"

"Well, you see, the stage manager forgot to load down the poor, simple village maidens who tra-la-la through the piece with silk dresses and paste diamonds."—Judge.

Explained.

"What's the matter with the correspondence editor?" inquired a sub-editor. "He looks mad."

"Why," replied another, "several days ago he told an anonymous correspondent how to learn to play the cornet, and now he's discovered that the fellow lives next door to him."—Cassell's Journal.

Trying to Explain It.

"It it said that the grand duke Boris will spend his time in this country quietly at San Francisco and New York."

"Yes; I notice that he is reported to have lost $3,500 at poker on the Pacific steamer coming over"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Put Teeth on the Clams.

Thomas C. Smith, a broker, was dining in a John street chop house, and, having ordered some Little Neck clams on the half-shell, asked the man who opened them what was the best thing to put on them.

"What I like to put on them best is my tooth," was John's apt reply.—New York Times.

MILWAUKEE PEOPLE

Could Hardly Believe It.—A Prominent Woman Saved From Death by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—I suppose a large number of people who read of my remarkable cure will hardly believe it; had I not experienced it myself, I know that I should not.

MRS. SADIE E. KOCH.

"I suffered for months with troubles peculiar to women which gradually broke down my health and my very life. I was nearly insane with pain at times, and no human skill I consulted in Milwaukee could bring me relief.

"My attention was called to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; the first bottle brought relief, and the second bottle an absolute cure. I could not believe it myself, and felt sure it was only temporary, but blessed fact, I have now been well for a year, enjoy the best of health, and cannot in words express my gratitude. Were Men Scarce Then?

The advantage of the modern Portia are counterbalanced by an equally large number of difficulties that confront the women lawyer. Mayor Low's secretary, James B. Reynolds, is still telling his friends a litle fling he had recently at Miss Rosalie Loow, the attorney for the Legal Aid Society. Miss Loow was conducting a hearing before the mayor and called one morning to tell Mr. Reynolds she could not attend the afternoon session.

"I've got to go over to Ludlow street and get a man out of jail," she said by way of explanation.

"Oh," exclaimed Mr. Reynolds, in grave surprise. "Are they really getting as scarce as that?—New York Times.

Buzzard Likes Blue.

It has just been discovered, presumably by a French scientist, that the miniature buzzard commonly known in New Jersey and vicinity as the mosquito has a color sense so extremely keen that it exerts a great influence on its life and methods. It appears that rapacious insect has a pronounced preference for dark blue and a decided aversion to yellow. This fact should set the fashion in pajama colors and lead the bald headed Jerseyman to adopt the practice of incasing his dome of thought in a saffron envelope, like that of a ham, at night. It should also win benisons and shekels of gold and silver for the scientist who has discovered that the mystic minstrel of the marsh and mere is not color blind.

Followed Wrong Funeral.

They are telling a good story on a pair who were to have attended a funeral the past week. The pair got into the procession at the rear, and in going down Front street became thirsty, and stopped at a saloon to get a glass of beer. They thought that they could easily catch up with the cortege again, and so they ordered another glass each. Finally, they whipped up, and, as they supposed, soon were plodding on the tail-end of the procession. Now, it happened that they were following another funeral entirely, and this one turned into Mount Calvary. When they discovered their mistake they whipped up again and hustled for Green Lawn, but when they arrived the burial was over. The couple had to explain, and there is where they made a mistake.—Columbus Dispatch.

WHAT THE LIGHTNING DOES.

Between Seven and Eight Hundred Lives Lost Each Year From Electric Shocks.

It is probably not generally known or even imagined, that every year in this country between 700 and 800 lives are lost by lightning stroke, and more than a thousand persons injured. During 1899 there were 4,253 animals—cattle, horses, mules, sheep or pigs—killed by lightning in the open fields, while the value of property destroyed, either directly or through fires caused by bolts, was estimated at $6,000,000.

There are numberless cases on record where whole herds of sheep and cattle have been struck with fatal effect. In one instance, in Colorado, ninety-one sheep were killed by a single stroke, and fifty-two in another. In Iowa where, during the year, 266 cattle were killed by lightning, the curious fact was noticed that 118 were found in close contact with wire fences. Their death was probably caused by the shock received from the fence, and not from the direct stroke, as it was evident in many cases, that the lightning struck the fence at some distance from the animals. If there had been sufficient ground connection from the fence, the cattle would probably have been saved.—Leslie' sMonthly.

In Bed Three Months.

Oolitic, Ind., Sept. 15.—Mr. W. A. Terry of this place suffered for months with a very severe case of Kidney Trouble.

He was so very bad that he was almost confined to his bed for three months.

He tried many medicines but he could not get any relief till he commenced to use a remedy introduced here some time ago as a cure for Kidney Trouble, the name of which is Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Mr. Terry says that the second day after commencing to use this remedy he could notice a very marked improvement in his condition and in a short time he was able to go about again.

He is naturally filled with gratitude to Dodd's Kidney Pills for the immense amount of good they have done him and says:

"I would recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills to every sufferer from kidney or bladder trouble, for from my experience I am sure they are the best medicine to be had for all diseases of that nature."

Why the Ex-Speaker Was Glad.

Ex-Speaker Reed loves his joke as dearly in these days as ever he did in the times when he was so much in the public eye in Washington.

It is related that the other day he met a friend from a small town in the interior, where, in rapid succession, the cashier of its principal bank had been found a defaulter, a leading business man had failed dishonorably and been imprisoned, and the county clerk (living there) had been convicted of misappropriating public funds.

Mr. Reed greeted his friend very effusively, shaking his hand heartily and saying how pleased he was to see him. The friend, somewhat surprised at the extraordinary heartiness, said:

"Mighty glad to see you, Reed, but why all this—er—?"

"Why, because," replied Mr. Reed, "I'm so very glad to see a man from X—— out of jail!"—New York Times.

PEACH STONES FOR FUEL.

Have Been Utilized in Baltimore as Substitute for Coal.

The great strike and the increased cost of coal incident thereto has directed much attention to other materials for fuel, and a Baltimore man says a good substitute for the black diamond is dried peach stones. The only objection to their use is their scarcity, which depends entirely on the size of the peach crop. Frank Hall, the Baltimorean referred to, says his family had used peach stones as fuel for years until about three or four years ago, since which time the supply has appeared to have decreased.

"We used to get the dried peach stones from a Mr. Noel, who got them from the different packing-houses and dried them on his place," said Mr. Hall yesterday. "I think we paid $2.50 a load for them, the load containing about forty-five bushels. The fuel was used in the kitchen and gave good results. The stones will make a quick, hot fire and one that will last. One and a half or two buckets of the peach stones will last as long as a bucket of coal. One has to be careful not to fill the stove too full or there will likely be an explosion similar to a gasoline explosion. The proper way to keep the fire going is to put in a shovelful at a time.

"Peach stones thrown into a damp cellar," said Mr. Hall, "are said to have a peculiar effect on a person. After the stones are in the cellar for some time gases arise, and the fumes will go to one's head and give the same effect as if the distilled product of the peach had been imbibed."

THE SPICE OF LIFE.

QUIPS AND CRANKS GUARANTEED TO CAUSE A SMILE.

Had a Right to Be Called Versatile—Scotsman Who Feared Worse Luck Than the Desertion of His Wife—A Terrible Mistake.

Worse.

The wife of a certain man having quareled with him, left him and went to live with her mother. A friend meeting him next day accosted him thus:

"Man, Jamie, this is an awfu' thing that has befa'en you. It's a great peety that the wife has went and left you."

"'Deed, man," says Jamie, "she will do waur than that."

"What waur can she do than that?" asked his friend.

"She'll come back again," answered Jamie, sorrowfully.

A Terrible Mistake.

The other day a lady called on an oculist to have her eyes fitted with glasses, saying:

"Have you magnifying glasses to make things look large?"

"Yes, madam."

"Then I will take a pair, for the other day I made a terrible blunder."

"How's that?" asked the oculist.

The lady replied:

"I mistook a bumble bee for a blackberry."

What They Thought.

Miss Askew—So your marriage is put off?

Miss Crummy—Yes; pa is not at all satisfied with his position; mamma doesn't like his family connections; auntie thinks he is too careless in his dress, and I think——"

Miss Askew—Yes, what do you think? That is the important thing.

Miss Crummy—I think I ought to wait till he asks me.

An Excellent Reason.

An old sea captain, under the impression that he was saying a good thing, asked a lady passenger why men never kiss one another, while ladies waste a world of kisses on feminine faces.

"Because," the lady replied, "the men have something better to kiss and the women haven't."

Showed Profound Conceit.

Phyllis—Harry is the most conceited man I ever met.

Maud—What makes you think so?

Phyllis—Why, he first asserts that I am the most adorable woman in the world, the most beautiful, intellectual and in every respect a paragon, and then he wants me to marry him!

A Railway Deal.

"Did you say Hiram lost that hundred dollars of his in a railway deal?"

"Yes," answered Mrs. Corntossel.

"I didn't know he was a financier."

"He ain't any. This deal was in a smokin' car. They started playin' euchre, and then switched off on another game."

The Charm of It.

Tess—She has finally convinced her husband that golf playing is sinful, especially on Sundays.

Jess—Why, I didn't know he ever cared for the game.

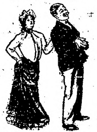
Tess—He didn't. That's the only way she could get him to play with her.

"Resting on His Laurels."

"I think," said the placid person, "that I will now rest on my laurels."

"That's another of those foolish phrases," said the man who is always finding fault. "It suggests the idea of a man who is trying to be comfortable standing on his head."

Either One Proper.



Mrs. Kidder—George, I don't want you after this to play draw poker in the drawing-room.

Kidder—All right. The ante-room will do just as well.

A Stay-at-Home Traveler.

Stranger—What wonderful tales old Blinks relates! He must have been a great traveler in his day.

Native—He was never outside the county in his life, but, you see, his mind has wandered for years.

His Suit.

Hodge—I've got a suit of clothes for every day in the week.

Podge (suspiciously)—I never see you wear any but the one you have on now.

Hodge (cheerfully)—That's the suit.

Somewhat Uncertain.

"He's what you'd call a professional public speaker, isn't he?"

"Well, I don't know. He speaks in public every chance he can get, but the public never waits to hear him."

Not Worth Mentioning.

Lightning recently struck a Boston woman and glanced off. When they asked if she wasn't shocked, she admitted that she was, but didn't mind it.

"So many extraneous objects coalesce to agitate my neurotic adjuncts," she remarked, "that the addition of personal shock from aerial electricity is really unworthy of an allusion."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

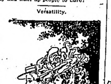
Neglected Accomplishments.

"No," said the young physician, despondently, "I don't believe I shall be a success in my profession."

"But there is no doubt about your knowledge and skill."

"None, whatever. I have the indorsement of eminent authority. But I can't play golf nor ping pong. And how is a young man who can't play golf or ping pong to go out into society and hunt up people to cure?"

Versatility.



She—They say he is very versatile.

He—I should say he was. Why, he has a new girl every day or so.

Where the Line Must Be Drawn.

"If these monopolists keep on," said the alarmist, "they will own everything."

"No, they won't," answered Mr. Diogenes Diggs, with the complacency which always comes over him when he has something disagreeable to communicate; "they'll always allow us little ambitious fellows to own enough to provide the assessor a basis for a tax levy."

Experience.

"I shall never permit myself to become a household drudge," said the bride with the honors of a university career still fresh upon her. "I shall endeavor to improve my mind."

"That is a good idea," answered her mother; "but don't let your literary pursuits monopolize you. Remember there are times when currant jelly appeals to a man a great deal more than current science."

Genuine Philosopher.

"Craps all burn to finders?"

"Yes."

"No rain in sight?"

"Not a drap!"

"Tootally-ruint, ain't you?"

"Tototally!"

"Well, what air you a-smilin' over?"

"I'm smilin' at the prospect of the sheriff comin' to levy on nothin'!"—Atlanta Constitution.

The Remark Was Ambiguous.

"That young man has a brilliant future before him," said the phrenologist.

And the little Boston boy whose bumps were being examined polished his spectacles and exclaimed:

"Pardon me, but you open up a very interesting field of inquiry. Where else could my future be if it were not before me?"

Youth's Unrestraint.

"Don't you sometimes long for your childhood's happy days?" said the sentimental person.

"Yes," answered Miss Cayenne, "there are times when I would enjoy hanging on the fence and making faces at people I don't like, instead of having to say, 'How do you do, dear? So glad to see you!'"

He Had Found Out.

Mrs. Billus—John, you ought not to be so hard on the young man who comes to see Bessie. You were a young man once yourself, and my recollection is that you were sometimes a very silly one.

Mr. Billus—Silly? I was an idiot, Maria; I was an idiot! I have found it out since.

Energetic.

The following paragraph appears in the report of a superintendent of a Burgher camp at the cape:

There have been no deaths this month, but there have been three births. We are therefore three to the good. This satisfactory state of affairs is due to the untiring energy of my assistant.—Honolulu (H. T.) Mirror.

Removing Temptation.

Mother—Gracious! Stop that noise up there. Willie, didn't I tell you not to pull that cat's tail again?

Willie—I ain't pullin' it, ma.

Mother—You must be, or the cat wouldn't scream so.

Willie—No, I ain't. I'm just cuttin' its tail off short, so I can't pull it any more.

Certainly Seemed Strange.

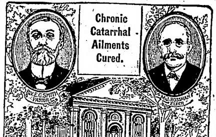
"Yes," she explained to Johnnie, "we have asked God for a little baby."

Not long after twins arrived.

"Well," commented Johnnie to his father, "It's mighty funny that you didn't know how big an order you gave."

God sends the seed, but we must furnish the soil.

PRESBYTERIAN PASTOR PRAISES PE-RU-NA.



First Presbyterian Church of Greensboro, Ga., and Its Pastor and Elder.

THE day was when men of prominence hesitated to give their testimonials to proprietary medicines for publication. This remains true to-day of most proprietary medicines. But Peruna has become so justly famous, its merits are known to so many people of high and low stations, that no one hesitates to see his name in print recommending Peruna.

The highest men in our nation have given Peruna a strong endorsement. Men representing all classes and stations are equally represented.

A dignified representative of the Presbyterian church in the person of Rev. E. G. Smith does not hesitate to state publicly that he has used Peruna in his family and found it cured when other remedies failed. In this statement the Rev. Smith is supported by an elder in his church.

Rev. E. G. Smith, pastor of the Presbyterian church of Greensboro, Ga., writes:

"Having used Peruna in my family for some time it gives me pleasure to testify to its true worth.

"My little boy seven years of age had been suffering for some time with catarrh of the lower bowels. Other remedies had failed, but after taking two bottles of Peruna the trouble almost entirely disappeared. For this special malady I consider it well nigh a specific.

"As a tonic for weak and worn out people it has few or no equals."—Rev. E. G. Smith.

Mr. M. J. Rossman, a prominent merchant of Greensboro, Ga., and an elder in the Presbyterian church of that place, has used Peruna, and in a recent letter to The Peruna Medicine Co., of Columbus, Ohio, writes as follows:

"For a long time I was troubled with catarrh of the kidneys and tried many remedies, all of which gave me no relief. Peruna was recommended to me by several friends, and after using a few bottles I am pleased to say that the long looked for relief was found and I am now enjoying better health than I have for years, and can heartily recommend Peruna to all similarly afflicted. It is certainly a grand medicine."—M. J. Rossman.

Catarrh is essentially the same wherever located. Peruna cures catarrh wherever located.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case, and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, Ohio.

WHILE the farmer is gathering his crops his body is gathering a crop of aches and pains, cuts, bruises, backache, sore muscles and stiffened joints. Why not allow Mexican Mustang Liniment to attend to the latter crop? That is just what it is intended for. It drives out the aches and heals the wounded flesh most thoroughly. It's the Best liniment for the flesh of man or beast.

THE NEWS.

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

The last legislature added to our labor laws the eight hour statue, one of the most complete and stringent in the Union. All work done by the state or for the state is limited to the eight-hour day and the eight hour clause is now made a part of every contract made by the board of control.

Mr. Rosing in his opening address commended Gov. Van Sant for his action in the merger cases and enforcing the law. He also said that if himself elected he would continue this good work but that in his opinion there was nothing more to do. Certainly the railroads cannot object to Mr. Rosing's position on the merger but the people will prefer to continue in office the man who does not sit down satisfied, but acts in the people's interests.

Two rules of the state grain inspection department made by the present administration are worthy of mention. One forbids any employee of the department going on the floor of the chamber of commerce. This is to gaurd against inspectors speculating in grain and using in that way their information gained as state employes, or being influenced in their work by a desire to effect the market. The other is a very rigid rule against accepting bribes. Both rules are strictly enforced and in this and other ways the department made purely a business department, free from all outside influences and the men given to understand that their time and effort belong wholly to the state.

Why have not Mr, Rosing and his newspaper organs had something to say of Gov. Van Sant's administration? Is it possible that they can fin no fault with the grain inspection department the prison twine factory, the labor bureau, the food and dairy commission, the insurance commission the educational department or some other branch of the state administration? Why do Mr. Rosing and his organs dodge these matters of first importance to the people and confine themselves to personalities and inuendoes.

It remains for the people of Minnesota to say if they want as Governor a man who during the extra session of the legislature made it his exclusive business to lobby against the tax bill, not from honest conviction, but for purely political reasons. This is what Mr. Rosing, the Democratic candidate for Governor did. He organized his party members and so far as he could influence them the Populist members against the bill. His argument was not one of antagonism to the merits of the bill, but was, of the most sordid political kind. He merely wanted to make trouble for the Republicans, To Democrats and Populists, men who believed the bill, if not the best, was a great improvement on the present tax code, men who believed that it would uncover and place upon the tax lists vast holdings of stocks and bonds and other hidden personal property, he simply used the plea of party expediency, that it would make trouble for the opposition. He tried to disrupt and create ill feeling in the Republican ranks, He took the position of the extreme partisan politician. Many honest Populist members were thoroughly disgusted with his action and some of his own party only joined with him after he had applied the party lash and every party influence. Whether the passage of the bill would have been wise or not, no patriotic citizen, no citizen who places the state's good above mere party interests, who believes that the business of the state should be done on a business basis, and that a measure of such vast financial importance and purely a business proposition should be considered and voted upon on its merits, can sanction the Rosing method of politics. No man who has lowered himself to the plane of the political lobbyist ever has been elected Governor of Minnesota or ever will be.

Looking Over

The entire field of science, nowhere has there been such progress as in the Science of Optics and the Fitting of Glasses. Our success in this line is due in a measure, to the fact that we embrace every meritous idea. We constantly seek to originate new methods of excellence that will in any way aid us in the practice of fitting glasses.

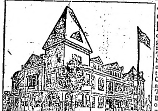
Chateau de Speer Wines

of Passaic, N. J. Vineyards.

These Wines Rival the World in Excellence.

Old, rich and mellow by age and years of care and frequent racking in fumigated cellars as is done with the Chateau Wines in France.



Photograph of Chateau de Speer.

The Chateau contains a limited supply of Private Stock Port nineteen years old, besides Burgundy and Claret of nearly the same age. The Speer Port, however, nine years old, as well as the Burgundy, Claret and Sherry, are high class wines. The ★★★Climax Brandy is 18 years old. All are preferred where known by the Medical profession as superior to any that can be had, for their excellent effect upon the system when used by invalids, the weakly and aged persons and in general family use. Northern New Jersey climate, and soil abounding in iron is just adapted for this grape for Port wine. It is the same kind of soil as in Portugal. Speer's winery and vineyards are the only Port grape vineyards in the United States; only vineyards that cultivate the real Port wine grape of Portugal; while other wines or mixtures called port are made without a single Oporto grape in them. Mr. Speer is the first and only one who imported the vines and acclimated the real Port wine grape vines of Portugal. He spent thousands of dollars as a hobby to see what he could do toward aclimating these Portugal vines here. It took eight years for them to become acclimated before Mr. Speer got a single grape; during those years all died except about eight hundred vines, when those began to grow vigorous and bear fruit; from these, layers were made for new vines. The vineyards now cover fifty six acres. It has proven a success. The grapes are allowed to hang on the vines until they begin to raisin, when they have parted with some of the water and are rich in sugar; and the wine made from Port wine grapes is the only real genuine Port wine made in America. It is by far THE wine for weakly persons, the aged and for evening entertainments.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of ten hundred eighty-six and 71-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by William Reed and Huldah Reed, his wife, Mortgagors, to Jerome W. Wheeler, Mortgagee, bearing date the first day of October, 1892, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the third day of October, 1892, at 3 o'clock P. M., in book 59 of Mortgages, on pages 223, and transcribed into the Mortgage records of Red Lake County in Book B on page 391.

Which said Mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Jerome W. Wheeler, Mortgagee, to John Steele the present holder thereof by written assignment dated the 21st day of February, 1899, and recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds for Red Lake County, on the first day of April, 1899, at 8 o'clock A. M., in Book F. of Mortgage Assignments on page 448, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof.

NOW, THEREFORE, NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That by virture of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

Lots one (1) and two (2) and the north half (½) of the northwest quarter (¼) of section number twenty-one (21) in township number one hundred and fifty-four (154) north of range number forty-three west, according to the United States survey thereof in Red Lake county and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Red Lake County, at the front door of the Court House, in the Village of Red Lake Falls in said County and State on the 29th day of September 1902, at one o'clock P. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of ten hundred eighty-six and 71-100 dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and seventy-five dollars, Attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

THIEF RIVER FALLS NEWS

By John W. Eastman.

THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN

Cuba is finding out that it is mighty expensive to keep house.

Harry Tracy was hardly off the earth before they had him on the stage.

The Sultan of Morocco has decided to give up the automobile and stick to his harem.

Russell Sage's nephew is going on the stage. But Uncle Russ will not be his "angel."

The Kansas City incline is equal in destructive force to a whole caravan of automobiles.

The sultan of Turkey has made another promise. Just so it wasn't a payment he is satisfied.

The man who has seen every president since Andrew Jackson is beginning to blow around again.

Any wise person who wants to retire to a quiet island for a few years' rest will not select Martinique.

Bay City claims to have a young woman who is slowly turning to stone. Seems hard, doesn't it?

They are organizing "Do Right" clubs in Kansas. This would be an excellent name for policemen's clubs.

Something should be done to protect the birthplace of John Brown in Connecticut. John was a good fellow.

The story of the damage to the currant crop in Greece naturally takes its place among the current news.

If the weather continues favorable Kansas corn will do its best to live up to a most astonishing line of corn stories.

Mr. Schwab's firm refusal to be pried loose from his $1,000,000 salary should relieve anxiety as to his mental condition.

The enterprising explorer who can succeed in harnessing and training a team of whales may discover the north pole some fine day.

A Massachusetts man has outlived two doctors to whom he sold his body. It is understood that in each case he refused treatment.

When Lord Wolseley says that he regards the American army as the best in the world he coincides exactly with the American idea.

If the unknown leader of the Frithjof expedition finds the pole, his name will be famous long after that of backer Zeigler is forgotten.

Dr. Mary Walker has written an article telling how men ought to dress. She never had much success in getting womankind to dress her way.

A Paris physician has discovered a new remedy for boils. Nothing, however, can excel Josh Billings' plan on having them on the neck of the other fellow.

In France they are pouring oil on the highways to stop the automobiles from raising dust. The hired girl may yet become the official street sprinkler.

William and Victor Emmanuel, according to last reports, were seen lugging the triple alliance and a kit of plumbers' tools in the direction of the woodshed.

Harry de Windt's description of his attempted land trip around the world does not inspire tourists with a wild desire to follow his route during their summer vacations.

Morgan is an early riser, so a dispatch from the east says. He probably feels that it is necessary to get out early in order to pull the string and let the sun come up.

A New York Guggenheim has ordered a $70,000 pearl necklace for Mrs. Guggenheim. Mrs. G. will have no trouble in keeping the ornament unless she should happen to go on the stage.

The Sultan of Turkey and the American legation are again on speaking terms, but the renewed friendship is liable to be rudely shattered whenever mention shall be made of that little bill.

Two girls of Rockford who took arsenic for their complexion do not know yet whether they will recover or not. The quest for beauty should not be pushed to the extreme of trying to secure a halo.

Three Kentuckians who refused to go to work were tied up by masked men and lashed. These noble colonels teach us that the old American spirit which bids a man to suffer for his principles is not dead.

The fete champetre which was given at Newport recently by Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt cost them $21,000. They don't mind a little thing like that, however. Other people had to work for the money.

There is ten times the demand for the Three-Cent-Fare statesman from all state committees seeking stump speakers than there is for anyone else.

FARMER REPENTS OF SHOOTING.

After Wounding Man and Woman He Kills Himself.

Brandon, Minn., Sept. 21. — Hasty temper and a desire to keep sportsmen off his farm caused a farmer to commit suicide after shooting a Brandon citizen and a woman. Thomas Law shot two prairie chickens on the farm owned by L. Rowe, twelve miles from the city. Rowe went to his house, got a shotgun, ran to the rig and fired two shots, one entering the stomach of Miss Therrim. The other load penetrated Law's knee. Rowe then ran to the house and swallowed the contents of a bottle of gopher poison, dying a few minutes later. Law and Miss Therrim were brought to the hospital here. The latter is very low.

SHOCK MADE HIM A MANIAC.

Brother Was Killed and Theodore Loranson Went Insane.

Fergus Falls, Minn., Sept. 21.—Theodore Loranson was brought down from Pelan, Kittson county, and committed to the insane hospital here. Loranson was starting for the threshing field in company with his brother, Albin Loranson, about a week ago. They were driving, and placed a gun in the vehicle with a view of doing some chicken shooting, and had gone but a short distance when the gun was discharged, the charge striking Albin in the head and killing him instantly. The shock was too much for Theodore, who immediately afterward developed symptoms of insanity, and four days later he was a raving maniac.

FARMERS INDIGNANT.

Claim That Elevators Grade Wheat Too Low.

Fargo, N. D., Sept. 21.—The farmers around Wheatland are indignant over what they term unjust discrimination in grades by elevator men. They claim that wheat that should be graded No. 1 Northern is classed as No. 2 and that samples of the grain have been sent to Duluth, where it was given the No. 1 Northern grade. These were taken from the same grain tanks as wheat sold at Wheatland. The farmers who are not forced to sell just now declare they will ship their wheat independently, and not patronize local elevators.

KILLED ACCIDENTALLY.

Frightful Death Due to Carelessness of Farmer's Boy.

Lake Preston, S. D., Sept. 21.—The eighteen-year-old son of a farmer named Becker was killed by the discharge of a shotgun. The boy was mowing hay and holding a shotgun in his lap with the barrel of the gun toward him. In some way the gun was discharged, the whole charge striking him in the abdomen, nearly severing the body. It seems that after the gun was discharged he fell into the mower wheel, which tore the upper part of his head entirely off.

ELECTION CONTEST.

Man Who Is Five Votes Shy Calls for Recount.

Duluth, Minn., Sept. 21.—One contest will result from the primary election in this county. Sheriff William C. Sargent, who was defeated by five votes for Republican nomination for sheriff by W. W. Butchart, yesterday noon announced his intention of demanding a recount, and his attorneys went to work to prepare the case. There are only five weeks in which to complete the recount, and swift work will be necessary.

HAS HER DIVORCE FROM JUDGE.

Sensational Suit Results in Victory for the Complainant.

Miller, S. D., Sept. 21.—Judge Gaffey last night heard the divorce case of Mrs. Pusey against her husband, John Pusey, and the divorce was granted. Criminal prosecution in the case was dismissed. The commencement of this action created a sensation here owing to the prominence of those involved and the nature of the charges, which implicated Judge Pusey's stenographer.

BURNED BY FLAMES.

Sixty Square Miles of Grain Stacks Burned by Prairie Fire.

Huron, S. D., Sept. 21. — The most destructive prairie fire in the history of Beadle county is raging in the Northwest. Parties reaching the city by train say that not a grain or hay stack is left in a radius of twelve miles long by five miles wide, and many farmers lost their entire grain crops. The damage aggregates many thousands of dollars.

WIND CAUSES FATALITY.

One Car Is Blown Alongside Another, Knocking Brakeman Off.

Hanley Falls, Minn., Sept. 21. — Brakeman Gus Peterson, twenty-six years old, whose home is at Madison, Minn., was probably fatally injured while making a switch on the Minneapolis & St. Louis railroad. The wind blew another car onto the sidetrack alongside of the car Peterson was hanging on, to make a switch, knocking him off. One car passed over both legs. He was unmarried.

DULUTH GROWS.

Superintendent of Directory Company Estimates Population.

Duluth, Minn., Sept. 21.—C. B. Stanley, superintendent of the Duluth Directory company, announces that the forthcoming volume will contain 27,456 names, as compared with 24,164 names in the directory issued last fall. He uses the multiple of 2 1-2 to ascertain the total population, which is 68,640, as compared with 60,414 a year ago, a gain of 8,226.

Mistaken for a Wolf.

Helena, Mont., Sept. 21.—Louis Gardape was shot and killed last night near Lowiston by a sheepherder in the employ of Ole Binger, who mistook Gardape for a wolf, and fired with a rifle, hitting him in the stomach.

Mining Plant Destroyed.

Helena, Mont., Sept. 21.—The ten-stamp mill, the cyanide plant and electrical machinery of the Columbia Mining company, was totally destroyed by fire yesterday, entailing a loss of $35,000.

Princeton has a pullet that is a record-breaker. She was hatched March 25 of this year, and on Aug. 6 commenced to lay and produced an egg each day until Aug. 31, when she resigned her position as champion egg layer and commenced setting. The owner of the enterprising pullet is Amos Chadbourne. He says that the chances are good for the pullet being the proud mother of a nest of chicks by the time she is six months old. The pullet is just an ordinary Plymouth Rock, but has been well fed and cared for.

MARKS MANY HISTORIC SPOTS

Monuments and Tablets Erected on the Sites of Incidents Connected With the Great Sioux Outbreak.

Upon and about the battlefield of Birch Coulie the society has placed several monuments or markers, which serve to identify important points of the battle ground. The site of this hallowed ground is about two and one-half miles east and north of the present village of Morton, in Renville county, on the west side of the great ravine called Birch Coulie.

The incidents leading to the battle of Birch Coulie may be very briefly related. Gen. Sibley occupied Fort Ridgely with his relief force on the 27th of August, nine days after the beginning of the outbreak. On the 31st he dispatched a force of about 15 men to the lower agency with instructions to ascertain, if possible, the position and condition of the Indians, and to bury the bodies of the victims of the massacre which might be found en route. This force, which was under the command of Maj. Joseph R. Brown, was composed of Company A, Sixth Minnesota infantry, under Capt. H. P. Grant; seventy mounted men of the Cullen guard under Capt. Joseph Anderson; some volunteers, soldiers, and citizens; a detail of other soldiers from the Sixth regiment and the militia force, and seventeen teamsters with teams. The next evening several of the citizens returned to the fort.

The command reached the lower agency on the 1st of September. Capt. Grant, with his company and the wagons, proceeded up the valley on the north side of the Minnesota to the mouth of Beaver creek, thence up the creek about three miles, and then marched east about six miles to near the head of Birch Coulie. This portion of the command buried the bodies of Capt. Marsh's men killed at Redwood Ferry and those of perhaps forty citizens at various points on the route. On Beaver Creek "some thirty bodies" were buried. On the way, too, in the Minnesota bottom, a German woman, named Mrs. Justina Krieger, who had been badly wounded by the Indians, and was hiding in a marsh, was rescued and carried along.

Maj. Brown and Capt. Anderson, with the "Cullen Guards," crossed the river at the Redwood Ferry, went to the agency, buried the bodies of the slain there, and went up the river, or westward, to the location of Little Crow's village, which the Indians had abandoned a few days previously. Nothing was seen which indicated that a hostile Indian had been in that vicinity for four days, although careful examination was made. Recrossing the Minnesota at a ford opposite Little Crow's village, the party ascended the bluff on the north side, and reaching the prairie road eastward to the Birch Coulie, where Capt. Grant's company had already encamped.

The camp selected by Capt. Grant was on an excellent site. It was upon level ground, convenient to wood and water, and less than half a mile from a road running between Fort Ridgely and Fort Abercrombie, on the Red River of the North. A growth of fairly good timber fringed the Coulie on either side, and in the channel was plenty of good running water. To the west, north and east stretched level prairies miles in extent.

The encampment was, virtually, a corral in its form and general character. Capt. Grant detailed thirty men, with a lieutenant and two noncommissioned officers, for a camp guard and established ten picket posts—or rather ten guard posts—at equal distances around the camp. The guard was divided, as usual, into three "reliefs." Although in what might properly be termed the enemy's country, no danger of an attack was apprehended, and therefore no picket posts worth the name were established. The camp guard posts were only about 100 yards from the corral. Maj. Brown assured the men that they might sleep as soundly "as if in their mothers' feather-beds" and the weary soldiers lay down to rest in fancied security.

JOHN OTHER DAY.

Of a truth the Indians had fallen back from the lower agency to Yellow Medicine four days before Maj. Brown reached Little Crow's village. The gallant and faithful scouts, Antoine Frenier, William L. Quinn and George McLeod, had ridden up to opposite the upper agency and learned that the savages were there in great numbers. They had left their villages about the lower agency in some haste and alarm, after their repulse and defeat at Fort Ridgely. With the exception of some scouts left behind to watch the whites, they retired to the Yellow Medicine and the mouth of the Chippewa river, where were the villages of the Wahpeton band, generally composed of friendly Sioux.

A few days after the Indians arrived at Yellow Medicine their scouts reported that Gen. Sibley and his command had reached Fort Ridgely and that New Ulm had been evacuated. Soon the chiefs and head soldiers determined to move down on the south side of the Minnesota to New Ulm, to there cross the river and get in the rear of Fort Ridgely, and then their future operations would be governed by circumstances. At the same time, 150 warriors were to go from the Yellow Medicine to the "Big Woods" and harass the country about Forest City and Hutchinson, and to seize a large quantity of flour said to be in a mill in that quarter. Little Crow took charge of the "Big Woods" expedition, sending the rest of his band under Gray Bird, a farmer Indian, but now Little Crow's "head soldier," down the river with the other bands of Wabasha, Wacouta, Hushasha, Mankato, Big Eagle, Shakopee and the rest of the Medawakantons and Wahpekootas. The savage forces left the Yellow Medicine on the 31st of August.

When, on the evening of Sept. 1, the advance of the Indians reached Little Crow's village, on the high bluff on the south side of the Minnesota, they saw on the north side, out on the prairie, some miles away, Capt. Anderson's company marching from Beaver creek eastward toward the Birch Coulie. They also saw in the village signs that white men had been there only a few hours before, and, from the trail made when they left, concluded that these were the men they could see to the northward. Some of the best scouts were soon sent across the valley to follow the movements of the mounted men, "creeping across the prairie like so many ants." A little after sundown the scouts returned with the information that the mounted men had gone into camp near the head of Birch Coulie, and that they numbered about seventy-five men. At this time, and until they attacked, they did not know of the presence of Capt. Grant's company.

PRESENT VIEW OF THE BATTLE FIELD OF BIRCH COULIE.

The view is looking north. The cross in the right, near the timber, marks the site of the corral where the whites were attacked and besieged for 36 hours.

Had the Indians persisted in their original plan to proceed quietly on their way down the south side of the river, unobserved by the whites, and paid no attention to the company of mounted men they had discovered, the result would have been most disastrous. But, with their hundreds of warriors, the temptation to fall upon the small and apparently isolated detachment of seventy-five men was too great to the Indian nature to be resisted. It was determined to surround the camp that night and attack it at daylight the next morning. About 200 warriors were selected for the undertaking. These were the bands of Red Legs, Gray Bird, Big Eagle and Mankato, with perhaps some four other bands. The leaders were subchiefs, with the exception of Gray Bird, who was the head soldier of Little Crow's band. Little Crow himself, with 150 warriors, was off on the expedition to the Big Woods towards Forest City and Hutchinson.

When darkness had come good and black and sheltering, the Indians crossed the river and valley, went up the bluffs and on the prairie and soon saw the corral of the whites. Cautiously and warily they approached the camp and had no difficulty in surrounding it, for the sentinels were at such short distance from it—not more than a hundred yards or so. The ground was most excellent for a mere camping ground, but badly chosen for a battlefield. On the east was the Birch Coulie, with a high bluff bank and fringed with timber; on the north was a smaller coulie or ravine running into the main coulie; on the south was a swale much lower than the camp; on the west was a considerable mound, and all these positions were commanding and within gunshot of the corral. The Indians could fire from concealed and protected situations, and nearly all of them had double-barreled shotguns loaded with buckshot and large bullets called traders' balls.

The Indians under Red Legs occupied the Birch Coulie, east of the camp. Some of Mankato's warriors were in the coulie and some in the swale to the south. Big Eagle's band was chiefly behind and about the knoll to the west, and Gray Bird's was in the ravine and on the prairie to the north. While they were waiting to begin the attack during the night, some of the warriors crawled through the prairie grass unobserved to within fifty feet of the sentinels, and it was seriously proposed to shoot them with arrows—making no noise—and to rush the camp in the darkness.

In the dark hour just before dawn Capt. Anderson's cook, who was early astir, had his suspicions of danger aroused by noting that some of the horses with lifted heads were staring intently toward the west, and manifesting indications of uneasiness. Some fugitive cattle which had been gathered up and driven along with the command, and which had been lying down south of the corral, rose one after another and began to move slowly towards the corral, as if retreating from danger. The cook had quietly awakened his captain and was talking to him of what he had seen when the alarm was given.

Sentinel William L. Hart of Anderson's company was on duty on the post between the eastern border of the corral and Birch Coulie. He was in conversation with Robert Gibbons, a comrade in his company. The dawn was coming faintly from the east when, looking in that direction across the Birch Coulie, Hart saw what he at first thought were two calves galloping through the tall grass of the prairie toward the coulie. In another moment he saw that the objects were two Indians skulking along and trailing their guns at their sides. "They are Indians," cried Hart to his companion, and instantly fired. As if he had given the signal, suddenly came a deadly roar from hundreds of Indian guns all about the camp, and the battle had begun. In the rain of bullets Gibbons was mortally wounded, but Hart ran to the corral unhurt and fought through the battle, living to become an officer in the police force of St. Paul, where he died in 1896.

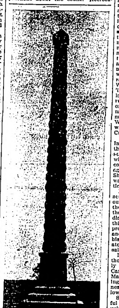
The details of the battle belong to other publications and have been frequently given. At the first alarm nearly all of the men instinctively sprang to their feet. In obedience to orders Capt. Grant's company attempted to fall into line, and the swift, well delivered volleys of the Indians struck down thirty men in three minutes. The horses, too, tied at the borders of the corral, fell fast, and their bodies were utilized as breastworks. The fight lasted all of that day, all of the succeeding night and until about noon of Sept. 3, or thirty-six hours. All this time the men on the firing line were without water, the limited supply in the camp being given to the wounded. As Big Eagle, one of the chiefs who was in the battle, says: "Owing to the white men's way of fighting, they lost many men; owing to the Indians' way of fighting, they lost but few." The loss of the whites was 20 men killed, 4 mortally wounded, perhaps 60 wounded more or less severely, and nearly every horse killed. The Indian loss was small. According to Big Eagle, indorsed by Heard, it was two killed and "several wounded."

About 9 o'clock in the morning of the first day's attack the pickets at Fort Ridgely sent in word that they could hear the report of guns in the distance to the northwest. Investigation made it certain that there was a battle in progress between Maj. Brown's command and the Indians. Col. Sibley at once sent a reinforcement. He dispatched to the relief Col. Samuel McPhail, with fifty mounted men, three companies of infantry and two small cannon, the whole force numbering 240 men.

The relief force made a swift march to near the Birch Coulie, over the Abercrombie road. On nearing the coulie a large force of Indians appeared to the left, or south, of the advance. A demonstration was made against them by Capt. Merriman's company and they fell back. The command moved forward half a mile when a very strong line of Indians was seen directly in front and on the left flank. Col. McPhail halted and prepared to fight. Two scouts of Capt. Potter's mounted company were sent forward, but soon had their horses shot under them and were chased back to the column.

The Indians were advancing and had well nigh surrounded the command, when Capt. Hendricks opened on them with his artillery and drove them back. Col. McPhail "did not deem it prudent to advance further," and sending two messengers, Lieut. T. J. Sheehan and William L. Quinn, to Col. Sibley with a report of the situation, he moved his force to a commanding position about two miles east of the coulie, where he formed a strong camp, throwing up some rifle pits, and awaited the arrival of the colonel with the general command from Fort Ridgely.

As soon as McPhail's messengers reached him Col. Sibley at once marched to the relief of the now two imperiled commands. He marched during the night, joined Col. McPhail in the forenoon of Sept. 3, moved against the Indians and by noon, without any more serious fighting, they had all been driven away from their positions about the coulie. Recrossing the Minnesota, they speedily fell back again to the Yellow Medicine. Col. Sibley returned to Fort Ridgely.



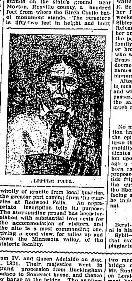
MONUMENT TO THE FAITHFUL INDIANS AT MORTON, MINN.

During the fighting the wounded whites were given the best surgical and medical aid possible, by Dr. J. W. Daniels, assistant surgeon of the Sixth Minnesota, and special surgeon of the expedition. He had a hard and trying task, for he was under fire all of the time, but he did his duty faithfully and efficiently.

Monument to the Faithful Indians.

In December, 1899, the Minnesota Valley Historical society completed the erection of a monument in recognition and commemoration of the conduct and services of the Indians who were truly loyal and faithful to the whites during the great Sioux war of 1862. It is believed that this is the only structure of the kind ever erected in the United States. The most that has ever been done to honor the services of those Indians who have been of eminent service to the whites during the wars between their tribes and the pale faces, has been to give them honorable mention in the pages of history and make them the subjects of song and story.

The Faithful Indians' monument stands on the state's ground near Morton, Renville county, a hundred feet from where the Birch Coulie battel monument stands. The structure is fifty-two feet in height and built wholly of granite from local quarries, the greater part coming from the quarries at Redwood Falls. An appropriate inscription tells its purpose. The surrounding ground has been furnished with substantial iron seats for the accommodation of visitors, and the site is a most commanding one, giving a good view, for miles up and down the Minnesota valley, of the historic locality.



LITTLE PAUL.

The society made three requirements for those whose names were to be cut in the granite die of the commemorative monument, making the list a roll of honor in all respects. 1. The subjects were to be full-blooded Indians. 2. They were to have been truly loyal to the whites throughout the entire period of the outbreak, from its inception, on the 18th of August, 1862, until the close of that year. 3. They were to have actually, by personal effort and in a practical manner, saved the life of at least one white person.

After careful and thorough investigation the society decided that the names of but five Indians, four men and a woman, were, at present, entitled to the distinction of a position in the monument's inscription. The claims of scores of others were presented, but in the society's opinion they did not meet the full requirements demanded. They either were not Indians of full blood, or they were not truly loyal throughout the war, or they did not directly save the life of a white person; indirect service could not be accepted. The names selected were these: Am-pa-tu-to-ki-cha, Mah-za-koo-te-maune or Iron That Shoots Walking, commonly called Little Paul; To-wan-a-ta-ton, or Face of the Village, whose English name was Lorenzo Lawrence; Anah-wang-maune, or Walks Alongside, whose English name was Simon, or Simon Anahwangmaune, and Mah-kah-ta-he-iya-win, or Woman Who Travels on the Ground, whose English name was Mary Crooks.

Of the services rendered by these Indians the society's pamphlet says that among other loyal and important services John Other Day led sixty-two white persons from their imperiled condition at the Yellow Medicine agency through a dangerous route to Shakopee. His conduct throughout was faithful, and he rendered practical service in many ways.

Little Paul rendered invaluable service to the whites by his continuous and successful efforts to prevent the massacre of the white captives in the hands of the hostiles. The Indians were divided in sentiment on this proposition and Paul planned and promoted their dissensions, divided and districted their councils, and by his earnest and spirited speeches created a public sentiment that led to the salvation of the wretched prisoners.

Lorenzo Lawrence conveyed from the hostile Indian camp to Fort Ridgely ten persons—Mrs. Jannette E. De Camp and her three children and Mrs. Magloire Robidoux and her five, making a perilous trip down the Minnesota river in canoes above the Yellow Medicine to the fort.

Simon Anahwangmanne was faithful from first to last, especially distinguishing himself later in the trouble by taking from a perilous captivity to freedom a white woman and her three children. From the hostile camp near Red Iron's village he took a Mrs. Neumann (or Newman) a German woman, and her three children to his tepee, and finally restored them to their friends. He placed them in his one-horse wagon, and with his son, a boy of twelve or fourteen, named Ka-tah-to, escorted them in safety to Fort Ridgely.

Mary Crooks signalized her loyalty to the whites and her devotion to humanity by saving the lives of Mrs. Urania S. White and her infant son, Frank B. White, the latter then but a few months old. Early in the morning of the second day of the outbreak, when Mrs. White and her infant were helpless captives in the Indian camp, Mary Crooks sought them out, brought them to her tepee, and she and her husband carefully protected them from harm thereafter, until they were released by Gen. Sibley's army at Camp Release. Mrs. White, who now lives in Todd county, Minnesota, testifies freely and fully regarding the generous care so received while in the hands of this noble woman.

"At the proper and appropriate time the name of another Indian woman will be added to the list above given. This will be that of Snahnah (Tinkling) now Mrs. Maggie Brass of Santee Agency, Neb. She it was who purchased from her Indian captor a young white girl fourteen years of age, Mary E. Schwandt, and carefully preserved her from all harm during the six weeks of her captivity, or until Gen. Sibley and his army came to Camp Release. The faithful Snahnah gave her only pony as the purchase price of the poor young captive, whose entire family, with the exception of a younger brother, had been murdered, and who was herself in awful peril. Mrs. Brass is yet living, and the society deemed it fitting to inscribe only the names of deceased persons on the monument.

Altogether, the work of the society is most valuable to Minnesota history, and will be better appreciated as time passes. There is much other work of the same character to be done, and much more that ought to be done.

Defacing London.

No more completely wanton innovation has been made in our time than the epidemic of tawdry gilt lettering upon the street fronts of London. The rapidity with which it has spread indicates the abject state of public opinion upon architecture. Twenty years ago a universal outcry would have been raised if any one had dared to propose spoiling whole streets with this frippery; now nobody cares. But the question arises whether among the liberties of Englishmen that of defacing a great capital can reasonably be included.—London Builders' Journal.

THE FRENCH GIRL.

Gallic Author Gives Us His Ideal in an Interesting Book, "Les Demi-Vierges."

The author of "Les Demi-Vierges" has now set to work upon raising the young French girl to his ideal. In his new work, "Lettres a Francoise," M. Marcel Prevost assumes the role of Fenelon and Madame de Maintenon, his theories of course being modernized; indeed, from the educational point of view, "de la derniere modernite." Francoise is to learn Latin and Greek, and at the same time to become an accomplished housewife. But her education is not to be confined to the library nor the home. She must be initiated into the secrets of rural life and learn something of agriculture.

Here are one or two admirable sentences from this interesting and unexpected book: "Our young ladies of a former generation never came into contact with the soil, hence much of their frivolity and inanition. Nothing like the soil to make us realize that the material world is our own provisionally only, and that individual efforts in any direction are but a feeble portion of the collected efforts of humanity. To plant an oak is indisputably a piece of altruism, since those to follow us will enjoy its shade." The author also dwells upon the exhilaration of out-of-door life and its benefits alike to body and mind.—The Scotsman.

Age of the London Bridge.

London bridge is to-day seventy-one years old, for it was opened by William IV. and Queen Adelaide on Aug. 1, 1831. Their majesties went in grand procession from Buckingham palace to Somerset house, and thence by barge to the bridge. The awnings of the royal barge were removed, that a full view of the royal pair could be had along the whole line. At London bridge a grand pavilion had been set up close to the site of Old Fishmongers' hall. It was constructed of standards captured in a hundred fights, canopied in crimson, and decorated with massive shields. When the king stepped ashore he said to two members of the new London bridge committee: "Mr. Jones and Mr. Routh, I am very glad to see you on London bridge. It is certainly a most beautiful edifice, and the spectacle is the grandest and the most delightful in every respect that I ever had the pleasure to witness." This, of course, was before any one thought of building an annex to Westminster abbey.—London Daily News.

TRAIN IS WRECKED

RUNS INTO AN OPEN SWITCH WHILE GOING FIFTY MILES AN HOUR.

FORTY-FOUR PERSONS INJURED

NONE OF THE PASSENGERS ARE REPORTED AS FATALLY INJURED.

TRAIN PACKED WITH PEOPLE

ENGINE EXPLODES, KILLING BOTH FIREMAN AND ENGINEER.

Chillicothe, Ohio, Sept. 20.—No. 2, the Royal Blue Flyer on the Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern, was wrecked at Leesburg, near here, at 8 o'clock last night, the train having ran into an open switch while running at the rate of fifty miles an hour. To add to the disaster the engine exploded and the engineer, Philip Roe, and Fireman Charles Studer, both of this city, were killed outright. Every coach on the train left the track, but advices from the scene of the wreck are that none of the passengers has been seriously injured. General Manager I. G. Rawn was in his private car on the rear of the train and he superintended taking care of the many who are more or less hurt. He ordered the injured brought to the Warner house in this city. He asked for room for forty-four persons injured. Their names cannot be obtained here, as all is confusion. The train consisted of eight coaches and who were returning home from the Cincinnati fall festival. Conductor David Thurlow was in charge of the train. The train in leaving the track knocked down several telegraph poles, consequently all wires are down and advices are meager.

No explanation can be given for the wreck. It was first thought that a freight crew had left the switch open, but there was no train on the siding at the time. The siding is a very small one and the engine while going at a high rate of speed easily jumped the track. People from here on the train report that it is one of the worst wrecks that ever occurred on the road, as all the coaches are more or less upset. The postal and baggage cars were heaped on top of the engine tank and it will take many hours to clear the wreck.

SWORDS ABOLISHED.

Canadian Mounted Troops to Be Armed Only With Rifles.

Montreal, Sept. 20. — The earl of Dundonald, the new commander of the Canadian militia has just issued a sweeping order abolishing the sword as a cavalry weapon. Mounted troops, Lord Dundonald declares, must depend for efficiency on the rifle, and he recommends that officers and men fit themselves to obtain musketry certificates. The carbines now in use will be replaced gradually by rifles.

FIGHTERS ARE ENJOINED.

McGovern and Corbett Must Not Fight in Louisville.

Louisville, Sept. 20. — Judge Field, in the Jefferson court, last night granted the injunction prayed for by State's Attorney Pratt to prevent the contest between Terry McGovern and Young Corbett scheduled for next Monday night. The attorneys for the Southern Athletic club will apply to the court of appeals to-day for a dissolution of the injunction and a decision in the matter is expected by noon.

DIES IN GREAT AGONY.

Wisconsin Traveling Man's Mysterious Death at Danville.

Danville, Ill., Sept. 20. — E. W. Meinke, a traveling man, at 8 o'clock yesterday morning was found dead in his bed at the Brunswick hotel. The cause of death is as yet unknown, but he evidently died in great agony, as his body was distorted and the face and upper part of the trunk were badly discolored. He was traveling for a Sheboygan Falls, Wis., chair concern.

BODIES IN RUINS

POSTOFFICE BUILDING AT MINOT, N. D., SUDDENLY COLLAPSES.

FIFTEEN PEOPLE ARE MISSING

SUPPOSED TO HAVE BEEN IN THE BUILDING AT TIME OF ACCIDENT.

CITIZENS QUICKLY AT WORK

FRANTICALLY TRYING TO SAVE THOSE BURIED UNDER THE DEBRIS.

Minot, N. D., Sept. 20.—Yesterday at 1 o'clock the Minot postoffice building collapsed and the ruins are being searched for probable victims. County Treasurer John Lynch and Nehemiah Davis, a prominent attorney, were seriously injured in the wreck.

It is reported that there were in the building fifteen people at the time. Postmaster Fugelso fought his way out of the debris, but is unable to tell who was in the building. The structure was no sooner a pile of ruins than crews of citizens were frantically at work, trying to save those under the mass of broken timbers and bricks, or recover the bodies of those killed. The city is greatly excited and in nervous suspense until the true conditions are learned. No bodies have as yet been found.

Minot is without mail service, the current editions of the Optic and Independent are buried in the debris, and it will be several days before postal service will be completely resumed.

The destruction of the building entails a loss of approximately $10,000. The loss to the federal government is unknown.

The cause of the accident is unexplained. The roof fell in and the walls followed.

SUICIDE'S WIDOW AROUSED.

Iowa Woman Fights Eleven Saloon Men in the Courts.

Sioux City, Iowa, Sept. 20.—Because Nick Arens, a grain buyer at Ramsen, Iowa, shot himself through the head while on a spree two weeks ago, his widow, Mrs. Nellie Arens, has begun the wholesale prosecution of the proprietors of all of the nine saloons in the town. There are eleven who run the saloons, two partners being among them, and they have been made defendants in a $10,000 damage suit because Mrs. Arens claims they sold liquor to her husband when he was intoxicated, contrary to law. The woman has also just filed suits for injunction against the saloon men, asking the court to close up their places of business for alleged violations of the law. The latter suits are set for trial Saturday morning.

HAS TWO WIVES NOW.

One Forced on Him by the Judge, Who Now Causes His Arrest.

Madison, Wis., Sept. 20.—Hard luck is pursuing Jacob M. Thompson, a Reedsburg man. Last June he eloped with Clara Johanson of Stoughton, was caught and arrested, and compromised matters by marrying the girl in court, Judge Donovan performing the ceremony. Later it was discovered that Thompson already had a wife and three children at Reedsburg, and the same court which had performed the second marriage issued a warrant for him on the charge of bigamy. He was located at West Union, Iowa, and Chief of Police Baker went there and arrested him. A requisition has been issued for his return.

INJURED IN A WRECK.

Six Passengers Hurt on Northern Pacific Near Moorhead.

Fargo, N. D., Sept. 20. — Notwithstanding the denial of the railroad officials that no one was injured in the slight wreck on the Northern Pacific between Moorhead and Glyndon, it is announced that several were somewhat injured, but none seriously. The list of injured is: S. G. Edmunds, Lohrville, Iowa, right arm bruised; Mrs. Charles Prey, Canby, Minn., slight cut on face; Floyd Ware, Three Mills, Iowa, cut on face; Mrs. James McIntyre, Osseo, Wis., injury to back; Mrs. W. Wilkinson, Crawfordsville, Ind., injury to back; Francis Keough, Marquette, Mich., complained of pain in hip and spine.

Lumber Camp Foreman Interferes, in Fight and Is Killed.

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., Sept. 20. — Henry Keiss, foreman of Lake Lumber camp near Eckerman, was shot and instantly killed yesterday by Neil Sinclair in front of a saloon. Keiss interfered in a fight between Sinclair and another man. The former left the scene but returned in a few minutes with a rifle and shot Keiss. Sinclair is under arrest.

Charged With Kidnaping.

Boscobel, Wis., Sept. 20. — Myron Eggleston, aged forty-six, and Elva Dixon, aged fourteen, who disappeared from this place a few days ago, were arrested in Austin, Minn., and brought back by the officers. The former was charged with kidnapping.

Prisoner Pleads Insanity.

Duluth, Minn., Sept. 20.—Charles E. Henderson, colored, on trial here for murdering a woman whom he claims was his wife, is attempting to set up a plea of insanity in defense.

INJURED IN A WRECK.

Six Passengers Hurt on Northern Pacific Near Moorhead.

Fargo, N. D., Sept. 20. — Notwithstanding the denial of the railroad officials that no one was injured in the slight wreck on the Northern Pacific between Moorhead and Glyndon, it is announced that several were somewhat injured, but none seriously. The list of injured is: S. G. Edmunds, Lohrville, Iowa, right arm bruised; Mrs. Charles Prey, Canby, Minn., slight cut on face; Floyd Ware, Three Mills, Iowa, cut on face; Mrs. James McIntyre, Osseo, Wis., injury to back; Mrs. W. Wilkinson, Crawfordsville, Ind., injury to back; Francis Keough, Marquette, Mich., complained of pain in hip and spine.

GIRL STEALS A HORSE.

Sheriff Catches the Youthful Female Rustler After a Hot Chase.

Prairie du Chien, Wis., Sept. 20. — Christena Peterson, a girl sixteen years old, stole a horse near Ferryville Wednesday night and started across the country to Viroqua. Sheriff W. W. Bennett started in pursuit and captured her at Purdy, Wis., bringing her to this city, where last night she was given a hearing before Judge Curran and sentenced to the industrial school at Milwaukee. When questioned in regard to the stealing she admitted all, and told a thrilling story and gave as her reason for the act the fact that she wanted to attend the fair.

TO SUCCEED HENDERSON.

Convention Called to Nominate a Candidate.

Dubuque, Iowa, Sept. 20.—The Republican congressional committee of the Third district met here yesterday and decided to call a convention at New Hampton, Iowa, Sept. 25, to consist of the delegates to the convention which nominated Col. Henderson to nominate a candidate to succeed him. This action was taken after a consideration of the Iowa election law. Before acting the members of the committee called upon Col. Henderson and requested him to reconsider his withdrawal. He declined to do so, stating that his decision was final.

DAVIS WINS IN THIRD.

Latest Returns on Congressional Primaries.

St. Paul, Sept. 20. — Later returns change somewhat the result of the primaries as previously announced. C. R. Davis has won out in the Third by a majority of about 600 over Ives. In the Sixth all doubt has been removed and C. B. Buckman is the nominee with a majority of about 400. Later returns in the Seventh change what seemed like a safe lead for M. J. Dowling, and A. J. Volstead is now leading by a narrow margin. It may be that an official count will be necessary to determine the result in this district.

SHOOTS THE PEACEMAKER.

Lumber Camp Foreman Interferes in Fight and Is Killed.

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., Sept. 20. — Henry Keiss, foreman of Lake Lumber camp near Eckerman, was shot and instantly killed yesterday by Neil Sinclair in front of a saloon. Keiss interfered in a fight between Sinclair and another man. The former left the scene but returned in a few minutes with a rifle and shot Keiss. Sinclair is under arrest.

Black Hills Forest Fires.

Mystic, S. D., Sept. 20.—Forest fires started in two places near here from sparks scattered by a Burlington locomotive, and nearly 100 acres of heavy timber was burned before it could be controlled. Every rancher and stock owner on the reserve is a volunteer fireman, subject to the call of the forest ranger for his district. The Black Hills are still beclouded with smoke, most of which comes from the smoldering flames.

Is Wanted in St. Paul.

St. Paul, Sept. 20.—County Attorney Kane made application to the governor yesterday for requisition papers for Robert P. Wallace, alias Charles Wallace, a St. Paul man who is wanted in this city on a charge of passing a forged check for $150 on the State Bank of St. Paul. Wallace is now on the "Island" in New York city serving out a ten-day sentence on the charge of trying to beat a cabman out of his fare.

Montana Democrats Break Even.

Helena, Mont., Sept. 20—Democratic primaries were held in several counties last night. Clark and Heinze show about equal strength. In Butte several bolts were indulged in and all sorts of strategy resorted to to secure advantage. Nearly all counties will have contesting delegations at the state convention.

Second Son Dies Violent Death.

Merrillan, Wis., Sept. 20.—In a fit of despondency Bert Owen shot and instantly killed himself. A sad feature of this is that the remains were found in a wood on the edge of town by his father. Mr. Owen is heavily bereaved, another son, Arthur Owen, having been found dead at Waseca, Minn., in July.

Forest Fires Burn Fiercely.

Tillamook, Or., Sept. 20—Word comes from Sand Lake that four farmhouses have been destroyed by forest fires which continue to burn fiercely on Wilson river.

Will Hold Speakership.

Dubuque, Iowa, Sept. 20.—It was announced last night that Speaker Henderson does not intend to resign the speakership at the coming session of congress.

Police Stop Fight.

last night prevented the Clifford-
Butte, Mont., Sept. 20.—The police
Hawkins fight from being held in Butte. The men have left for the Five-Mile house, where an attempt will be made to pull off the mill.

DRAMATIC SCENE IN CHURCH.

Clergyman Ends Trial by Handing In His Resignation.

Keokuk, Iowa, Sept. 23.—The case of Rev. P. L. Henness before the Iowa conference of the Methodist Episcopal church ended Saturday night as abruptly as it had begun, when the accused pastor resigned in a dramatic manner. After the trial committee appointed by Bishop Hamilton and composed of thirteen prominent divines, had been in session far into the night, Mr. Henness himself took the stand. He said it was evident to himself and to his attorneys that he was not to have fair treatment, and then he handed the parchments of his ordination in 1887 and his resignation from membership in the church as well as from the ministry. Turning to his wife, who was present, the self-unfrocked minister exclaimed: "Woman, behold the wreck of a man you have made." His wife broke down at this exhibition. The committee immediately closed its session, having lost its jurisdiction of the case. Mr. Henness, after maintaining silence stubbornly for a year, said that the reason he left his wife was for continual "nagging," which broke down his health and rendered it impossible for him to do ministerial work. The charge against him before the conference was simply his separation from his wife, whom he agreed to support but refused to live with. No question of immorality was involved.

YOUNG HERO SAVES 200 LIVES.

Flags Crowded Train Just in Time to Prevent Frightful Accident.

Winona, Minn., Sept. 23.—To Fred Anderson, a young man of this city, belongs the credit of having saved from death a train load of passengers on the Northwestern road. By the exercise of quick wit he flagged the Northwestern train that was bearing down on a horse and wagon caught on a high trestle near Stockton in the darkness. The escape of the trainful of passengers was a narrow one, for when the train was brought to a standstill the pilot was within two feet of the horse and wagon. Had the train, which crosses the trestle at a speed of sixty miles an hour, struck the obstruction, the engine and cars would have been precipitated into the depth below, with great loss of life.

THROWN FROM A CAR.

Minneapolis Society Belle Seriously Hurt at Racine.

Racine, Wis., Sept. 23.—Miss Katherine L. White, a society belle of Minneapolis, was seriously injured near Racine college yesterday afternoon by being thrown from an electric interurban car. The young woman had come to the city to accompany her nephew to the college, the most exclusive boys' school in the state, and was landing from the car to go to the school when the accident occurred. The car started before Miss White was able to step from the platform, and she was thrown with great force to the ground. She has been injured internally and is under the care of physicians.

EIGHTEEN MONTHS A FUGITIVE.

Confidential Agent at Milwaukee Skips Out but Is Caught.

Milwaukee, Sept. 23—W. P. Leppere, who has since Jan. 14, 1901, been wanted in Milwaukee on a charge of embezzling $2,000 from Jones, Evans & Co., formerly of this city, but who have since removed to Chicago, has been captured at Donald, B. C., and Detectives McManuss and Schweitzer have gone there for the purpose of bringing him back. Leppere was the confidential agent for Jones, Evans & Co., and was intrusted with large sums of money in their brokerage office in Michigan street. When he arrives in this city representatives of Jones, Evans & Co. will come from Chicago to prosecute him.

IN ANNAPOLIS.

Northwestern Men Who Will Be Admitted as Cadets.

Annapolis, Md., Sept. 23.—Of the 117 candidates examined by the civil service commission for admission to the naval academy only thirty-two passed mentally. It is thought that a number of the candidates who were only slightly deficient will be admitted by the examining board. Those from the Northwest who passed were: J. B. Wright, Minnesota; H. F. Swenson, South Dakota; L. M. Atkins, Montana; H. W. Cleveland, Wisconsin; F. E. Follet, Wisconsin; F. G. Fletcher, Iowa.

CHARGED WITH MURDER.

Man Who Is Alleged to Have Tortured Another Is Arrested.

Mandan, N. D., Sept. 23. — Sheriff Weeks yesterday arrested A. J. Harrob and turned him over to the sheriff of Gage county, Neb., who took his prisoner away without requisition papers. Harrob is charged with being implicated in the murder of David Jones in 1897 in Gage county. Frank Olds, reported to have been guilty with Harrob, has turned state's evidence. It is reported that Olds and Harrob tortured and killed Jones for his money.

MAKE A GOOD HAUL.

Sneak Thieves Rob Sioux City Men of Money and Valuable Watch.

Sioux City, Iowa, Sept. 23.—Burglars entered the homes of two business men of this city last night and secured $300 in cash and a gold watch and chain. Julius Pappe lost the cash and Dave Davidson the watch, valued at $150. Mr. Pappe's money was in bills and was taken from his pockets. Entrance was gained through a window in both instances.

Shot by Burglars.

Goldfield, Colo., Sept. 23.—Gus Kalo, night marshal, was shot and killed in a battle with burglars in Stowe's drug store early yesterday. Two shots pierced his heart, another entered the mouth and another shattered his hand.

Prefers Death to Prison.

Clinton, Iowa, Sept. 23. — George Jones, cashier of Einstine & Norris' clothing store, committed suicide when the sheriff came to arrest him on a charge of embezzling $15,000 of the firm's money.

DAY OF FUNERALS

VICTIMS OF SHILOH CHURCH PANIC ARE INTERRED AT BIRMINGHAM.

DEATH LIST NOW REACHES 110

FUNDS RAISED IN WHITE CHURCHES TO ASSIST THE NEGROES.

BALLOU DENIES RESPONSIBILITY

HE IS IN JAIL CHARGED WITH PRECIPITATING THE STAMPEDE.

Birmingham, Ala., Sept. 23. — It was a day of funerals in Birmingham, the remains of thirty-eight victims of the panic in Shiloh church being interred in the various cemeteries for negroes around the city.

All the negro churches were crowded and the natually excitable nature of the Southern negro was wrought to a high pitch by the eulogistic sermons over the dead bodies at the various churches.

The death list is now known to number 105 and 100 of these have been identified. The police assert that in addition at least five bodies were taken to private houses. This would swell the number to 110. In nearly all of the churches for whites sums were raised yesterday to assist the negroes who are unable to give their dead proper burial, and a fund aggregating $500 has been accumulated.

J. H. Ballou, who is in jail charged with precipitating the stampede, says he Does Not Feel Responsible for the accident. His statement follows:

"I was seated in the front row of the rear platform of the rostrum in company with Maj. R. R. Wright, president of the Industrial School of Georgia. The president of the convention was arranging seats for the prominent delegates, but evidently was having some trouble. In the same row with me were other delegates whom the president had requested to give up their seats. He said nothing to Maj. Wright or myself, and I, of course, being in company with Maj. Wright, thought that as he was to retain his seat, I would also. Hicks came to us and said we must give up those seats, and used abusive language. We paid no attention to him. All of this was before the arrival of Washington.

"The whole trouble was reported as being caused by Hicks and myself, but such is not the case. There were at least half of the people present who came only to hear Washington, and immediately after he closed his address they left their seats and started for the door, not only from the first floor, but from the galery as well.

"About this time Hicks again approached Maj. Wright and myself and ordered us to move, and I, as spokesman, refused. He then caught me by the lapel of the coat and reached in his hip pocket. While we were scuffling the stampede occurred."

END OF A MURDERER.

Peter Olson Is Killed by Nebraska Citizens.

Bancroft, Neb., Sept. 23.—Peter Olsen, who shot and killed his sweetheart, Mary Peterson, at Omaha Sept. 8, was yesterday killed in a fight with a posse. Olsen came to Bancroft Saturday and stopped that night at a local hotel. He was recognized by R. L. Fletcher, who notified the authorities. Constable Copple formed a posse and began looking for Olsen, who had started north on the railroad track. The members were on horseback and overtook Olsen three miles north of town, and Constable Copple ordered him to throw up his hands and surrender. He paid no attention, and on a second demand from the officer drew a revolver and fired. A general fusillade then began, and Olsen fell at the first volley. Members of the posse rushed to where Olsen had fallen, when Olsen raised his revolver and attempted to again fire, but the cartridge did not explode. A member of the posse then fired a load of shot into his body, from the effects of which he died a few minutes later.

KNOX RETURNS HOME.

Attorney General Will Prepare His Report on Sale of Panama Canal.

Washington, Sept. 23. — Attorney General Knox returned to Washington yesterday after his trip to Paris, where he conferred with officials regarding the sale of the Panama canal property to the United States. Mr. Knox devoted his time to questions affecting the title of the company and its right to dispose of the same, and has considerable data on the subject. From this he will prepare an opinion for the president, and pending that declines to make any statement on the matter for the press.

FIFTY NEW BISHOPS.

Said That Pope Considers Creation of Half-Hundred in America.

San Luis Potosi, Mex., Sept. 23. — Ignacio de Oca, bishop of San Luis Potosi, arrived home yesterday from Rome. Bishop Oca stated that the pope is considering the creation of fifty additional bishops in the United States. The health of the pope is excellent for a man of his years.

Fatal Jealousy.

Johnstown, Pa., Sept. 23.—David M. Gouchner last night shot and seriously wounded Miss Leorena Winnebrenner, aged seventeen, and then sent a bullet into his own heart, dying instantly. Jealousy is given as the cause.

Victim of Foul Play.

Danville, Ill., Sept. 23.—Thomas J. Ryan of Hoopeston, Ill., was run over by a Chicago & Eastern Illinois passenger train last night. It is believed he was killed and robbed before being struck by the train.

NAMED FOR CONGRESS.

Latest Returns From the Congressional Primaries.

Practically complete returns are now at hand from the several congressional districts. The only district in which there is a shadow of doubt as to the result is in the Seventh, where Volstad leads over Dowling by a small majority. Dowling, however, has not given up the fight. He has hopes that the official count will give him the nomination by a fair majority.

GOOD YEAR FOR CREAMERIES.

State Reports Show an Increase of Thirty-Five.

Commissioner McConnell's agitation in favor of the establishment of cheese factories in the northwestern part of the state has resulted in a large increase not in the number of cheese factories, but of the number of creameries in the state. In the majority of places where the project of a cheese factory was broached the farmers went further and subscribed for a creamery, although a number of them established cheese factories.

The reports collected by the department thus far show an increase of thirty-five creameries in the state last year. The county having the largest increase was Winona county, where three years ago there were no creameries. That county is now in a way to take a leading place among the dairy counties of the state.

The output of butter this year will be largely in increase over that of last year, according to B. D. White, the commissioner's dairy and cheese export. Conditions this year were favorable and the market for butter encouraged large productions.

The "butter trust," as it is called by the farmers, or rather the combination which sought to establish skimming stations throughout the state as feeders for a central plant, has not, said Mr. White, stopped the growth of creameries in the least.

The state buttermakers, who meet in St. Paul during the early part of December, will have with them the creamery secretaries or managers, who will also meet here. At that time, said Mr. White, the dairy and food department will try to have a uniform method of accounts adopted so that the department can secure monthly reports of the butter business in the state. The reports are now made at the end of the season, and sometimes not then, and are in very many cases unsatisfactory.

School Loans.

The state board of investment has authorized school loans amounting to $36,675, apportioned among school districts as follows:

LE SUEUR FAIR A SUCCESS.

Congressional Candidates Attend the County Exposition.

Le Sueur, Minn., Sept. 20.—The Le Sueur county fair yesterday closed here a financial success in a magnificent display of fireworks. At baseball Le Sueur Center defeated Henderson, 11 to 4, and at football St. Peter defeated New Ulm, 36 to 0. The opposing congressional candidates of the Third district, Hon. C. C. Koltars and Hon. C. R. Davis, were present.

FIVE SERIOUS INDICTMENTS.

Winona Grand Jury Returns True Bills Alleging Five Crimes.

Winona, Minn., Sept. 20.—Five indictments on very serious charges yesterday were returned by the grand jury in the district court. Two of these are for murder in the first degree, one for robbery in the first degree, one for manslaughter in the second degree and one for abduction for criminal purpose. Great interest is taken in these cases, and the trials will be the most sensational in the history of the district court.

HE SAILS THE AIR

ENGLISH AERONAUT HAS AN AIRSHIP THAT PLOWS THE CLOUDS.

HE OUTSTRIPS SANTOS DUMONT

EXCELLENT SHOWING MADE BY SPENCER IN A FLIGHT OVER LONDON.

SHIP TRAVELS THIRTY MILES

INVENTOR SEEMED TO HAVE PERFECT CONTROL OF THE VESSEL.

London, Sept. 21.—Stanley Spencer, a well known English aeronaut, yesterday successfully accomplished a remarkable flight over London in an airship of his own invention. It is estimated that his ship traveled nearly thirty miles.

From observations of those on the ground Spencer seemed to have complete control of the vessel. He started from the Crystal Palace at 3:46 o'clock and descended three hours later near Harrow. The route taken by the aeronaut was over Stratham, Clapham Common, and the smoky south side of the metropolis, across the Thames, over the populous Chelsea district, across Kensington and Earlscourt, out to Harrow and then safely past the forest buildings.—He Executed an Easy Descent at the little village of Eastcote. Spencer has been experimenting recently with his vessel at the Crystal Palace. Finding the conditions suitable he suddenly decided to start off on his dangerous voyage late yesterday, and the usual crowd of palace spectators gave him a hearty send-off. The airship at once rose to a height of about 300 feet. After traveling for about a mile with practically no deviation in his course, Spencer made various detours and seemed able to steer his ship as easily as a torpedo boat. Sear Clapham Common he came fairly close to the ground for the purpose of maneuvering. The appearance of the air craft created intense astonishment among the thousands of persons on the streets over whose heads the aeronaut passed.

Outstrips Santos-Dumont.

Percival Spencer, referring to his brother's trip through the air, said it exceeded the longest trip of Santos-Dumont, the Brazilian aeronaut, by nearly twenty miles.

Spencer's airship has a blunt nose and tail and does not taper like a cigar point as does the airships of Santos-Dumont. In general outline it has the appearance of a whale. The bag, which is seventy-five feet long, contains 20,000 cubic feet of hydrogen gas. The frame is built of bamboo and the propeller is in front instead of behind, as in the case with Santos-Dumont's vessels. The motive power of Spencer's machine is a petroleum motor of about thirty horse-power and the machinery is controlled by electric buttons. The extreme speed of the new airship in calm weather is about fifteen miles an hour. The machine accommodates only one person and its entire weight is about 600 pounds. Special features of the airship are devices to avoid pitching and dipping.

MYSTERY CLEARED UP.

Detectives Know Who Killed the Woman Whose Body Was Found in a Canal.

New York, Sept. 21.—The mystery of the murder of Mrs. Annie Pulitzer, whose nude body was found in the Morris canal, near Jersey City, has been cleared up by the discovery that the woman was killed in a flat at 103 West Fifty-eighth street, where her clothing was found last night. This announcement was made by Capt. Titus, of the detective bureau, who alleges that the murder was committed by a man named Hooper Young who has recently been employed in a cheap restaurant. Young has not been arrested and is believed to have fled the city.

ORGANIZE FOR GOOD ROADS.

North Dakotans Form Base of Great Association.

Fargo, N. D., Sept. 21.—As a result of the good roads convention here this week a North Dakota Good Roads association was organized here last evening with O. G. Barnes of Fargo president and M. F. Williams of Fargo secretary. The association will extend to each county in the state and have a vice president for each suborganization, which will form an executive committee. Each vice president is expected to organize his own county. Considerable enthusiasm was developed, and it is thought the movement will be permanent.

BURNED IN BED.

Two Children Cremated While Mother Goes After Pail of Water.

Sisseton, S. D., Sept. 21.—The children of Foster Murray, aged one and two years, were burned in bed yesterday morning. The dwelling caught fire from the stove while the mother was after water. The house was of single thickness boards and burned quickly, before any one could make an entrance.

Barbed Wire Plant Burned.

Pittsburg, Sept. 21. — The barbed wire department of the Oliver plant of the American Steel and Wire company was totally destroyed by fire last night. Loss about $150,000. The fire was caused by a lamp explosion.

Denmark Will Sell.

Copenhagen, Sept. 21.—The results of the elections of members to the landsthing, as officially given out yesterday, assure the ultimate sale of the Danish West Indies to the United States.

DESPERATE STRUGGLE OF FIEND

New Jersey Murderer Hanged After a Fierce Fight.

New York, Sept. 21.—Peter Hernia was hanged in the county jail at Hackensack, N. J., yesterday for the murder of Berney Kantea, a butcher, but before his execution was accomplished Hernia made a desperate fight. When two deputy sheriffs approached him to strap his arms he suddenly tore off two brass brackets on the side of his cell, and getting into the corridor, leaped over a partition. He then tore off a piece of lead pipe, and, crouching in a corner, shouted that he would brain any one that came near him. By this time the jail was in an uproar. The sheriff and his deputies were at first puzzled as to how to deal with the murderer and disarm him. It was finally decided to turn the hose on him. This was done, and as Hernia put up his hands to ward off the water from striking him in the face a deputy sheriff leaped over and grabbed the murderer's hand in which was the lead pipe. Other deputies quickly rushed in. Hernia was finally overpowered and securely strapped. He was then placed in a chair and carried to the gallows, his clothing dripping wet. He was lifted from the chair and the noose quickly adjusted about his neck. The sheriff then asked him if he had anything to say. He replied in a weak voice: "Good-bye, all. Excuse me." The drop was then sprung and Hernia died of strangulation.

HEAR ROAR OF BATTLE.

American Artillery Speaking to the Moros.

Manila, Sept. 21. — Capt. John J. Pershing of the Fifteenth infantry, commanding the American forces at Lake Lanao, Mindanao, at the head of a battalion of infantry, two troops of cavalry and two guns, left Camp Vicars, Island of Mindanao, Wednesday to operate against the sultan of Butig, whose fort is situated seven miles southeast of Camp Vicars. The result of the expedition is not yet known. A report from Matalong Falls, received yesterday, says that cannonading was heard Thursday, and that it was believed Capt. Pershing was engaged at Butig.

Build Military Roads.

Washington, Sept. 21.—On the urgent recommendation of Gen. Chaffee, commanding the military forces in the Philippines, Secretary of War Root Authorized the expenditure of $20,000 for immediate use in the construction of a military road in the Island of Mindanao.

MARIE HENRIETTE DEAD.

Queen of the Belgians Suddenly Passes Away.

Spa, Belgium, Sept. 21.—Marie Henriette, queen of the Belgians, died here suddenly last night at ten minutes before 8 o'clock. Neither her husband, members of her family nor her majesty's doctors were present at the time of her death. She was seated at a table eating a light dinner when she was seized with an attack of syncope. Dr. Guillaume, who, in the course of the day, had remarked upon certain disquieting symptoms in the queen's condition, was summoned immediately, but her majesty was dead before he arrived. Two members of her suite were with the queen during her last moments. As soon as the news of the queen's death became known a large crowd gathered outside the palace. King Leopold had left Bagneres-de-Luchon, France, for Spa, and other members of the royal family have been telegraphed for.

TEN MILLIONS TO BE LET LOOSE.

Secretary Shaw—Authorizes Distribution of Large Sum.

Washington, Sept. 21. — Secretary Shaw left for Chicago yesterday afternoon and will speak there to-night on the issues of the campaign. Before leaving Washington the secretary of the treasury announced that during the week he had authorized the distribution of $10,000,000 in public funds among the banks which had bonds available for security. The money will be released and these deposits completed within a few days, just as rapidly as the bonds are received at the treasury. Secretary Shaw does not anticipate that further relief measures will be necessary.

WITH MRS. M'KINLEY.

Miss Wilson Found Her Interested in Recollections of Washington Life.

Washington, Sept. 21.—Miss Glora Wilson, daughter of the secretary of agriculture, has just returned from a ten days' visit to Mrs. McKinley at her home in Canton. The visit was at the special request of Mrs. McKinley. Her constant attendant, Miss Mary Barber, was compelled to be absent from Canton for ten days, and when Mrs. McKinley was asked whom she desired during Miss Barber's absence she requested that Miss Wilson be invited. The visit, while very sad, seemed to please Mrs. McKinley, who spent much of the time recalling her Washington life.

MILLION DILLARS.

Heavy Embezzlement by an Official of a Bank in Vienna.

Vienna, Sept. 21.—A further examination of the books of the Vienna Lalderer bank shows that the embezzlements of Edmund Jellinek, an official of the cashier's department, who disappeared Wednesday, are about $1,150,000. The frauds were effected by the manipulation of checks and by making false entries in the books.

Nine Persons Drowned.

Lisbon, Sept. 21. — The French steamer Thomas sank a harbor steamer here yesterday. Nine persons were drowned.

Killed by an Explosion.

El Paso, Tex., Sept. 21.—Jesus Hernandez was killed, two other Mexicans fatally injured and a fourth severely hurt in a premature explosion of a blast in a construction camp near here on the railway now building.

Hanged for Criminal Assault.

San Antonio, Tex., Sept. 21.—Vincento Saucedo, a Mexican aged twenty-seven years, was hanged yesterday for criminal assault on his eleven-year-old stepdaughter in April, 1901. He confessed his guilt.

LAUGHS AT DEATH

LOVESWAR, THE MURDERER OF TWO MEN, PAYS PENALTY OF HIS CRIME.

AFFECTS A COARSE BRAVADO

LAUGHS AT EACH STEP IN THE EXECUTION UNTIL THE DROP FALLS.

COLD BLOODED DOUBLE MURDER

BLOWS OUT BRAINS OF MEN WHO HAD GIVEN HIM HOSPITALITY.

Sturgis, S. D., Sept. 21.—"I am satisfied. Hope you fellows will die like I do." With these words on his lips Ernest Loveswar, murderer of two, George Puck and George Ostrander, walked unassisted and laughing to the gallows.

He laughed when the noose was placed about his neck, laughed when he shook hands with the officers before they placed the black cap over his head and shut out from his eyes God's sunlight forever. He laughed when his arms were strapped, and then went laughing to death and eternity, when the trap was sprung at 1:57 p. m. At 2:10 he was declared a corpse.

His Crime.

In June of the present year George Puck, one of Sioux City's energetic young men, had just completed a simple house on the range in Western South Dakota and surrounded himself with the nucleus of cattle and horses that within a few years would have made him a fairly wealthy man. In his employ was George Ostrander of Climbing Hill, Iowa, and together they resided in what is known as the White Owl country, northeast of the Black Hills.

On the evening of June 10 Ernest Loveswar, a half-breed Indian, came to this prairie home of George Puck and asked for an advance of money on a number of horse Mr. Puck had agreed to buy. Mr. Puck had never seen any of the horses, and knowing nothing as to their character declined to pay anything until the horses were delivered.

Loveswar was very persistent, and would not take no for an answer, and, finally, becoming provoked, Mr. Puck refused to take the horses at all. The half-breed then Grew Sullen and Angry, and said he would go home. As it was dark, George Ostrander invited Loveswar to stay until morning, and made him a bed on a cot.

About 3 o'clock in the morning, while both Puck and Ostrander were asleep, the Indian stealthily approached their bed, and, using one of their revolvers with his own, shot both men through the brain at one time, and afterward crushed both their skulls with an axe.

Two days before his execution Loveswar grew despondent for a few moments and revealed an additional motive that prompted him to commit this crime. He had been proffering his attentions, without success, to a young lady in the White Owl country, and claimed that Mr. Ostrander was fast winning her favor, and that but for this fact he would not have done the killing, though he was angry at Mr. Puck for refusing him money. He added that he was sorry that he had killed Mr. Puck, but expressed no regret at having killed Ostrander.

WRECKS COME IN PAIRS.

Freight Trains Collide and One Man Is Killed—Passenger train Wrecked.

Tacoma, Wash., Sept. 21. — Two freight trains collided head-on on a heavy down grade at the eastern end of the Northern Pacific tunnel through the Cascade mountains. H. S. Shaffer was killed and Engineer A. J. Adams and Brakeman Oswald were seriously hurt. The wreck caught fire and twelve cars of lumber and coal were destroyed. The engines were wrecked. The blocking of the track necessitated the sending of Passengers No. 4 and No. 6 over the Palmer cut-off. Between Covington and Auburn No. 4, which had stopped to take water, was crashed into by No. 6, which came down the slope at high speed. The baggage and mail cars of the first train were telescoped and H. L. Moore and F. E. Chase, mail clerks, and Charles Saurens, express messenger, were hurt, but not seriously.

SMITH FOR MODERATOR.

St. Paul Minister Chosen Moderator for Congregational Association.

Fergus Falls, Minn., Sept. 21. — At the Congregational convention here yesterday Rev. Samuel G. Smith of St. Paul was elected moderator for next year; Rev. C. R. Andrews of Ada, assistant moderator, and Rev. S. J. Rogers of Minneapolis, secretary. Place of meeting not yet selected.

All Plead Not Guilty.

Winona, Minn., Sept. 21. — In the district court the parties arraigned Thursday and who took the usual time to plead, have all entered pleas of not guilty. These were Henry Nussloch, indicted for murder in the first degree; Edward Murphy, indicted for murder in the first degree and robbery in the first degree; William De Graff, indicted for abduction of a young girl for criminal purposes.

To Take Henderson's Place.

Marshalltown, Iowa, Sept. 21.—After the conference of Republican leaders yesterday C. E. Albrook, an attorney of Eldora, was announced as an aspirant for the nomination refused by Congressman Henderson.

Green Breaks His Parole.

Eau Claire, Wis., Sept. 21. — John Green, wanted at Stillwater penitentiary, yesterday was locked up here. He is serving for grand larceny and broke his parole. His mother lives here.

JEALOUS MAN'S WORK.

Shoots a Man and Woman and Attempts Suicide.

Battle Creek, Mich., Sept. 20. — Prompted by jealousy A. E. Whitcomb of Chicago shot W. Sampson of this city and Mrs. Elizabeth Notter of Chicago yesterday afternoon at Sampson's home, then he turned the revolver on himself and shot himself in the head and through the body. To make sure of death he tried to drink carbolic acid. Sampson was shot through the body as he turned to go to a closet to get a shotgun. Mrs. Notter was shot through the forearms and in the back of the head. She will survive. Both men died about midnight.

Sampson, who had been a widower about six months, had advertised for a wife. Mrs. Notter, who was then keeping house for Whitcomb in Chicago, replied and the wedding would have taken place last night but for the insane jealousy of Whitcomb.

SOLVE FRIAR PROBLEM.

American Friars Will Supplant the Spanish.

Philadelphia, Sept. 20. — An important step toward the solution of the troubles in the Philippine islands caused by the presence of the Spanish friars there was yesterday taken at Villa Nova college, when the Most Rev. Thomas Rodriguez, O. S. A., of Rome, prior general of the Augustinian order throughout the world, announced that Rev. Daniel O'Mahoney of Andover, Mass., and Rev. J. E. McErlaine of Villa Nova had been ordered to the Philippines as pioneers in the movement of American priests to those islands to succeed the Spaniards. The two priests will leave for Manila within the next two weeks and will be followed in a short time, it is believed, by several other American Augustanians. Both clergymen chosen are distinguished and able members of the order.

BLAZING IN IDAHO.

Forest Fires in the Vicinity of Yellowstone National Park.

Washington, Sept. 20.—A new forest fire is reported in the official telegraphic advices to the interior department to be raging in the section of Idaho just west of the Yellowstone National Park, and about fifteen miles north of St. Anthony, Idaho. A telegraphic report from Forest Supervisor Henry Michelson, dated at Kenosha Ranch, Colo., announces an abatement of the fires in that region. His jurisdiction includes the Pike's Peak, South Platte and Upper Creek reserves, which, he says, are covered by fire fighters. He says the fire is under control.

NORTH POLE NOT REACHED.

Lieut. Peary Is, However, Satisfied With Results of His Expedition.

Sydney, N. S., Sept. 20.—The Peary Arctic club relief steamer Windward, with Lieut. C. E. Peary on board, arrived here from Cape Sabine. All on board are well. Lieut. Peary said:

"Out expedition did not reach the north pole, but we made most important scientific discoveries. We are all well and glad to get back to civilization."

He recovered and brought back the instruments and libary abandoned by the Greeley expedition. He also brought numerous and rare specimens of natural history.

TWO MINERS KILLED.

Rope Broke and Their Bucket Fell One Hundred Feet.

Seattle, Wash., Sept. 20.—A special from Dawson says: Robert Haddock and Daniel McKenzie fell 100 feet in the shaft at Solomon Hill and were instantly killed. They were descending in the bucket when the rope broke and both were precipitated to the lower level. Haddock formerly lived at Kingston, Okla., while McKenzie was from Prince Edward's Island.

CHILDREN BURIED ALIVE.

Tons of Earth Crash Down Upon Them While at Play.

William's Station, Mich., Sept. 20.—Three little children were buried alive while on the way home from school late yesterday afternoon. They stopped to play in an excavation beside the road. Digging in the sand with pieces of board "to make a tunnel," they loosened the earth and brought tons of it down upon them.

STOLE $315,000.

Official in Austrian Bank Makes Big Haul.

Vienna, Sept. 20.—Edmund Jellinek, an official in the cashier's department of the Londerbank, disappeared hurriedly from Vienna yesterday. It was discovered that he had defrauded the bank of $315,000 by falsifying checks. The money thus obtained was spent in speculation. He has not been apprehended.

LOOK FOR CLASHES

CONDITIONS IN THE COAL MINE REGION APPROACHING A CRISIS.

MILITARY READY FOR TROUBLE

STRIKERS BECOMING AGGRESSIVE AND OUTBREAKS ARE FREQUENT.

FUSILADE OF STONES AND CLUBS

UNRULY MOB GETS AFTER A WATCHMAN FROM ONE OF THE MINES.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Sept. 23.—It is the opinion of the military men and the coal operators that conditions are rapidly approaching the point where there will be a serious clash between the soldiers or deputy sheriffs and the riotous element of the strikers. The daring attacks in the Schuylkill region with the soldiers near has shown the spirit of the men.

Preparations are being made to answer calls for help to-day, and the troops will be in readiness for rapid marching. In the Wyoming and Lackawanna regions the warnings of Sheriffs Jacobs and Schadt that further violence will compel them to ask for troops has not prevented more outbreaks. Saturday night and yesterday morning there were several attacks upon non-union men and their houses. The strikers near Edwardsville were bold enough to threaten to attack the house of James McGuire, a watchman at the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Woodward mine.

Threw Sticks and Stones.

He appealed to the company and the sheriff was requested to send guards there. He replied that the deputies could not do police duty of that sort. The company then sent officers to guard the house. Despite this the attack was made about 1 o'clock yesterday morning, and because they did not know in which of the four houses McGuire lived the mob attacked all of them. About a hundred were in the crowd and were armed with stones and clubs, and the fusilade was terrific. Windows and window sashes were carried away, doors were smashed in and the houses badly wrecked. The guards fired a number of shots, to which the mob replied and some fifty shots were fired, but none of the guards were hurt, and so far as known the mob escaped without injury. At the first alarm Sheriff Jacobs was notified and sent deputies in a carriage. They arrived after the attack began and dispersed the crowd. Three men were arrested, charged with being the ringleaders, who threatened the life of McGuire. In default of bail they were committed to jail.

WONDERFUL PLUCK OF BOY.

Carries His Amputated Leg to Hospital, Sixteen Miles Away.

Easton, Pa., Sept. 23.—With one leg cut off below the knee and the other gashed to the bone, Eugene Pickel, seventeen years old, of this city, was carted sixteen miles to the Easton hospital, where he is lying in a critical condition. Young Pickel was working at a portable sawmill near Leithsville, in Lower Saucon township, when he was caught under a log that was being cut, and, held prisoner, he was carried to the fast-revolving circular saw. His cries for help did not summon aid until the blade had severed his right leg and had cut a deep gash in the left leg. It was an hour and a half before surgical aid could be secured and the flow of blood was stopped. Pickel was then loaded into a wagon and brought here. On the way to Easton he critically examined the severed portion of the amputated limb, which he insisted on bringing home with him.

BOERS MUST PAY FOR WAR.

Colonies Will Be Required to Dig Up $500,000,000.

London, Sept. 23.—The Daily Mail this morning says the government has decided that the new South African colonies are to be required to pay $500,000,000 toward the cost of the South African war. The colonies are, however, to be allowed ample time in which to mak this payment; it will not be collected under the extension of trade and expansion of revenue permit. Consequently the loan will not be floated for two or three years. Mining profits will probably be taxed 10 per cent more than they were before the war, and money will also be obtained by granting all kinds of concessions and mineral rights.

KILLED HIS FATHER.

Boy Feared That His Mother's Life Was in Danger.

Woonsocket, R. I., Sept. 23. — Because he desired to protect his mother from violent treatment at the hands of her husband and fearing also that his own life was in danger, William C. Bonin, aged twenty, shot and killed his father, John C. Bonin, yesterday. The tragedy occurred at the factory boarding house, where his father was proprietor, at Slatersville, North Smithfield. There were present at the time also five small children of the family. After the shooting young Bonin went to his room, put on his best clothes and waited for the officer, who had been called by his mother.

Boxers Not Subdued.

London, Sept. 23. — In a dispatch from Shanghai the correspondent of the Standard declares that Boxerism in the province of Szo Chuen has not been subdued. The Boxers are now threatening three cities.

The Crimson Blind

By Fred M. White

CHAPTER XLVI. (Continued.)

"I am sorry if I have done so," Chris said, "but I should not have done so unless I had been taken by surprise. It was so hot that I had taken off my glasses and put my hair up. Then Frank came up and surprised me."

"You have grown an exceedingly pretty girl, Chris," Littimer said critically. Of course, I recognize you now. You are nicer looking than Miss Lee."

Chris put her glasses on and rolled her hair down resolutely.

"You will be good enough to understand that I am going to continue Miss Lee for the present, she said. "My task is a long way from being finished yet. Lord Littimer, you are not going to send Frank away?"

Littimer looked undecided.

"I didn't know," he said. "Frank, I have heard a great deal to-day to cause me to think that I might have done a great injustice. And yet I am not sure ...In any case, it would be bad policy for you to remain here. If the news came to the ears of Reginald Henson it might upset Miss Machiavelli's plans."

"That had not occurred to me for the moment," Chris exclaimed. On the whole, Frank had better not stay. But I should early like to see you two shake hands."

Frank Littimer made an involuntary gesture, and then he drew back.

"I'd—I'd rather not," he said. "At least, not until my character is fully vindicated. Heaven knows I have suffered enough for a boyish indiscretion."

"And you have youth on your side," Littimer said, gravely. Whereas I—"

"I know, I know. It has been terrible all round. I took those letters of poor Claire's away because they were sacred property, and for no eye but mine——"

"No eye but yours saw them. I was going to send them back again. I wish I had."

"Aye, so do I. I took them and destroyed them but I take Heaven to witness that I touched nothing else besides. If it was the last word I ever uttered——what is that fellow doing here in that garb? It is one of Henson's most disreputable tools."

Merritt was coming across the terrace. He paused suspiciously as he caught sight of Frank, but Chris, with a friendly wave of her hand, encouraged him to come on.

"It's all a part of the game," she said. "I sent for our friend, Merritt, but when I did so I had no idea that Frank would be present. Since you are here you might just as well stay and hear a little more of the strange doings of Reginald Henson. The time has come to let Merritt know that I am not the clever lady burglar he takes me for."

Merritt came up, doggedly. Evidently the presence of Frank Littimer disturbed him. Chris motioned him to a seat quite gaily.

"You are very punctual," she said. "I told you I wanted you to give Lord Littimer and myself a little advice and assistance. In the first place, we want to know where that gun-metal, diamond-mounted cigar-case, at present for sale in Rutter's window, came from. We want to know how it got there and who sold it to Rutter's people. Also, we want to know why Van Sneck purchased a similar cigar-case from Walen's of Brighton."

Merritt's heavy jaw dropped, his face turned a dull yellow. He looked around helplessly for some means of escape, and then relinquished the idea with a sigh.

"Done!" he said. "Clear done. And by a woman, too! A smart woman, I admit, but a woman, all the same. And yet, why didn't you—"

Merritt paused, lost in the contemplation of a problem beyond his intellectual strength.

"You have nothing to fear," Chris said, with a smile. "Tell us all you know, and conceal nothing, and you will be free when we have done with you."

Merritt wiped his dry lips with the back of his hand.

"I come peaceably," he said, hoarsely. "And I'm going to tell you all about it."

CHAPTER XLVII.

The Track Broadens.

There was an uneasy grin on Merritt's face, a suggestion that he did not altogether trust those around him. Hard experience in the ways of the wicked had taught him the folly of putting his confidence in anyone. Just for the moment the impulse to shuffle was upon him.

"If I say nothing, then, I can't do any harm," he remarked, sapiently. "Best, on the whole, for me to keep my tongue between my teeth."

"Mr. Henson is a dangerous man to cross," Chris suggested.

"He is, that," Merritt agreed. "You don't know him as I do."

Chris conceded the point, though she had her own views on the matter. Littimer had seated himself on the broad stone bench along the terrace, where he was watching the scene with the greatest zest and interest.

"You imagine Mr. Henson to be a friend of yours?" Chris asked.

Merritt nodded and grinned. So long as he was useful to Henson he was fairly safe.

"Mr. Merritt," Chris asked, suddenly, "have you ever heard of Reuben Taylor?"

The effect of the question was electrical. Merritt's square jaw dropped with a click, there was fear in the furtive eyes that he cast around him.

"I read all about Reuben Taylor in one of our very smart papers lately," Chris went on. "It appears that Mr. Taylor is a person whom nobody seems to have seen, but who, from time to time, does a vast service to the community at large. He is not exactly a philanthropist, for he is well rewarded for his labors both by the police and his clients. Suppose Mr. Merritt here, had done some wrong?"

"A great effort of imagination," Littimer murmured, gently.

"Had done something wrong, and an enemy or quondam friend wants to 'put him away.' I believe that is the correct expression. In that case, he does not go to the police himself, because he is usually of a modest and retiring disposition. No; he usually puts down a few particulars in the way of a letter, and sends it to Reuben Taylor, under cover, to a certain address. Is not that quite correct, Mr. Merritt?"

"Right," Merritt said, hoarsely. 'Some day we shall find out who Taylor is, and—"

"Never mind that. Do you know that the night before your friend, Mr. Henson, left the castle he placed in the postbag a letter addressed to Reuben Taylor? In view of what I have read recently in the paper alluded to, the name struck me as strange. Now, Mr. Merritt, is it possible that letter has anything to do with you?"

Merritt did not appear to hear the question. His eyes were fixed on space; there was a sanguine clenching of his fists, as if they had been about the throat of a foe.

"If I had him here!" he murmured. "If I only had him here! He's given me away. After all that I have done for him, he's given me away."

His listeners said nothing; they fully appreciated the situation. Merritt's presence at the castle was both dangerous and hazardous for Henson.

"If you went away to-day you might be safe?" Chris suggested.

'Aye, I might," Merritt said, with a cunning grin in his eyes, "if I had a hundred pounds."

Chris glanced significantly at Littimer, who nodded and took up the parable.

"You shall have the money," he said, and you shall go as soon as you have answered Miss Lee's questions."

Merritt proclaimed himself eager to say anything. But Merritt's information proved to be a great deal less than she had anticipated.

"I stole the picture," Merritt confessed. "I was brought down here on purpose. Henson sent to London, and said he had a job for me. It was to get a picture from Dr. Bell. I didn't ask any questions, but set to work at once."

"Did you know what the picture was?" Chris asked.

"Bless you, yes; it was a Rembrandt engraving. Why, it was I who, in the first place, stole the first Rembrandt from his lordship, yonder, in Amsterdam. I got into his lordships's sitting room by climbing down a spout, and I took the picture."

"But the other belonged to Van Sneck," said Chris.

"It did; and Van Sneck had to leave Amsterdam hurriedly, being wanted by the police. Henson told me that Van Sneck had a second copy of the 'Crimson Blind,' and I had to burgle that, as well; and I had to get into Dr. Bell's room and put the second copy in his portmanteau. Why? Ask somebody wiser than me. It was all some deep game of Henson's, only you may be pretty sure he didn't tell me what the game was. I got my money and returned to London, and, till pretty recently, I saw no more of Henson."

"But you came into the game again," said Littimer.

"Quite lately, you lordship. I went down to Brighton. I was told as Bell had got hold of the second Rembrandt, owing to Henson's carelessness, and that he was pretty certain to bring it here. He did bring it here, and I tried to stop him on the way, and he half-killed me."

"These half-measures are so unsatisfactory," Littimer smiled.

Merritt grinned. He fully appreciated the humor of the remark.

"That attack and the way it was brought about were suggested by Henson," he went on. "If it failed, I was to come up to the castle here without delay and tell Henson so. I came, and he covered my movements while I pinched the picture. I had been told that the thing was fastened to the wall, but a pair of steel pliers made no odds to that. I took the picture home, and two days later it vanished. And that's all I know about it."

"Lame and impotent conclusion," said Littimer.

"Wait a moment," Chris cried. "You found the diamond star, which you pawned—"

"At your request, miss. Don't go for to say as you've forgotten that."

"I have forgotten nothing," Chris said, with a smile. "I want to know about the cigar-case."

Merritt looked blankly at the speaker. Evidently this was strange ground to him.

"I don't know anything about that," he said. 'What sort of a cigar-case?"

"Gun-metal set with diamonds. The same case, or a similar one, to that purchased by Van Sneck from Walen's in Brighton. Come, rack your brains a bit. Did you ever see anything of Van Sneck about the time of the accident? You know where he is?"

"Yes. He's in the county hospital at Brighton. He was found in Mr. Steel's house, nearly dead. It's coming back to me now. A gun-metal cigar case set in diamonds. That would be a dull thing with sparkling stones all over it. Of course! Why, I saw it in Van Sneck's hands the day he was assaulted. I recollect asking him where he got it from, and he said that it was a present from Henson. He was going off to meet Henson then by the corner of Brunswick Square."

"Did you see Van Sneck again that day?"

"Later on, in the afternoon. We went into the Continental together. Van Sneck had been drinking."

"You did not see the cigar-case again?"

"No. Van Sneck gave me a cigar, which he took from a common sort of case that they give away with seven cigars for a shilling. I asked him if he had seen Henson, and he said that he had. He seemed pretty full up against Henson, and said something about the latter having played him a scurvy trick, and he didn't like it, and that he'd be even yet. I didn't take any notice of that, because it wasn't any new thing for Henson to play it low down on his pals."

"Did anything else happen at that interview?" Chris asked, anxiously. "Think.! The most trivial thing to you would, perhaps, be of the greatest importance to us."

Merritt knitted his brows, thoughtfully.

"We had a rambling kind of talk," he said. "It was mostly Van Sneck who talked. I left him at last because he got sulky over my refusal to take a letter for him to Kemp Town."

'Indeed! Do you recollect where that letter was addressed to?"

Well, of course I've forgotten the address; but it was to some writing man—Stone, or Flint, or—"

"Steel, perhaps?"

"That's the name! David Steel, Esq. Van Sneck wanted me to take that letter, saying as it would put a spoke in Reginald Henson's wheel; but I didn't see it. A boy took the letter at last."

"Did you see an answer come back?"

"Yes, some hour or so later. Van Sneck seemed to be greatly pleased with it. He said he was going to make an evening call late that night that would cook Henson's goose. And he was what you call gassy about it; said he had told Henson, plump and plain, what he was going to do, and that he was not afraid of Henson or any man breathing."

Chris asked no further questions for the moment. The track was getting clearer. She had, of course, heard by this time, of the letter presumably written by David Steel to the injured man, Van Sneck, which had been discovered in his pocket by Dr. Cross. The latter had been written, most assuredly, in reply to the note Merritt had just alluded to, but certainly not written by David Steel. Who, then, seeing that it was Steel's private note paper? The more Chris thought over this, the more she was puzzled. Henson could have told her, of course, but nobody else.

Doubtless, Henson had started on his present campaign with a dozen different schemes. Probably one of them called for a supply of Steel's note paper. Somebody unknown had procured the paper, as David Steel had testimony in the form of his last quarter's account. The lad engaged by Van Sneck to carry the letter from the Continental to 15 Downsend Terrace, must have been intercepted by Henson, or somebody in Henson's pay, and given the forged reply, a reply that actually brought Van Sneck to Steel's house on the night of the great adventure. Henson had been warned by the somewhat intoxicated Van Sneck what he was going to do, and he had prepared accordingly.

A sudden light came to Chris. Henson had found out part of their scheme. He knew that David Steel would be probably away from home on the night in question. In that case, having made certain of this, and having gained a pretty good knowledge of Steel's household habits, what easier than to enter Steel's house in his absence, wait for Van Sneck, and murder him then and there?

It was not a pretty thought, and Chris recoiled from it.

"How could Van Sneck have got into Steel's house?" she asked. 'For I know, for a fact, that Mr. Steel was not at home, and that he closed the door carefully behind him when he left the house that night."

Merritt grinned at the simplicity of the question. It was not worthy of the brilliant lady who had so far got the better of him.

"Latch-keys are very much alike," he said. 'Give me three latch-keys, and I will open ninety doors out of a hundred. Give me six latch-keys, of various patterns, and I will guarantee to open the other ten."

"I had not thought of that," Chris admitted. "Did Van Sneck happen, by any chance, to tell you what he and Henson had been quarreling about?"

"He was too excited to tell anything properly. He was jabbering something about a ring all the time."

"What sort of a ring?"

"That I can't tell you, miss. I fancy it was a ring that Van Sneck had made."

"Made! Is Van Sneck a working jeweler, or anything of that kind?"

"He's one of the cleverest fellows with his fingers that you ever saw. Give him a bit of old gold and a few stones, and he'll make you a bracelet that will pass for antique. Half the so-called antiques picked up on the Continent have been faked by Van Sneck. There was that ring, for instance, that Henson had, supposed to be the property of some swell he called Prince Rupert. Why, Van Sneck copied it for him in a couple of days, till you couldn't tell t'other from which."

Chris choked the cry that rose to her lips. She glanced at Littimer, who had dropped his glass, and was regarding Merritt with a kind of frozen, pallid curiosity. Chris signalled Littimer to speak. She had no words of her own for the present.

"How long ago was that?" Littimer asked, hoarsely.

"About seven years, speaking from memory. There were two copies made—one from description. The other much more faithful. Perhaps there were three copies, but I forget now. Van Sneck raved over the ring; it might have been a mine of gold for the fuss he made over it."

Littimer asked no further questions. But, from the glance he first gave to Chris and then to his son, the girl could see that he was satisfied. He knew, at last, that he had done his son a grave injustice—he knew the truth. It seemed to Chris that years had slipped suddenly from his shoulders. His face was still grave and set; his eyes were hard, and the gleam in them was for the man who had done him this terrible injury.

"I fancy we are wandering from the subject," Chris said, with commendable steadiness. "We will leave the matter of the ring out of the question, Mr. Merritt, I don't propose to tell you too much, but you can help me a little farther on the way. That cigar-case you saw in Van Sneck's possession passed to Mr. Henson. By him, or by somebody in his employ, it was substituted for a precisely similar case, intended for a present to Mr. Steel. The substitution has caused Mr. Steel a great deal of trouble."

"Seeing as Van Sneck was found, half-dead, in Mr. Steel's house, and seeing as he claimed the cigar-case, what could be proved to be Van Sneck's, I'm not surprised," Merritt grinned.

"Then you know all about it?"

"Don't know anything about it," he growled, doggedly. "I guessed that. When you said as the one case had been substituted for the other, it don't want a regiment of schoolmasters to see where the pea lies. What you've got to do now is to find Mr. Steel's case."

"I have already found it, as I hinted to you. It is at Rutter's in Moreton Wells. It was sold to them by the gentleman who had given up smoking. I want you to go into Moreton Wells with me to-day and see if you can get at the gentleman's identity."

Mr. Merritt demurred. It was all very well for Chris, he pointed out in his picturesque language. She had her little lot of fish to fry, but, at the same time, he had to draw his money and be away before the police were down upon him. If Miss Lee liked to start at once—"

"I am ready at any moment," Chris said. "In any case, you will have to go to Moreton Wells, and I can give you a little more information on the way."

"You had better go along, Frank," Littimer suggested, under his breath. "I fervently hope now that the day is not far distant when you can return together; but for the present your presence is dangerous. We must give that rascal, Henson, no cause for suspicion."

"You are quite right," Frank replied. "And I'd like to shake hands now, dad."

Littimer put out his hand without a word. The cool, cynical man of the world would have found it difficult to utter a syllable just then. When he looked up he was smiling.

"Go along," he said. "You're a lucky fellow. That girl's one in a million."

The dog-cart, driven by Chris, brought herself and her companion into Moreton Wells in an hour. Frank had struck off across country in the direction of the nearest station. The appearance of himself in Moreton Wells on the front of a dog-cart from the castle would have caused a nine-days' wonder.

"Now, what I want to impress upon you is this," said Chris. "Mr. Steel's cigar-case was stolen, and one belonging to Van Sneck substituted for it. The stolen one was returned to the shop from which it was purchased almost immediately, so soon, indeed, that the transaction was never even entered on the books. We are pretty certain that Reginald Henson did that, and we know that he is at the bottom of the mystery. But, to prevent anything happening, and to prevent our getting the case back again, Henson had to go farther. The case must be beyond our reach. Therefore, I decline to believe that it was a mere coincidence that took a stranger into Lockhart's directly after Henson had been there to look at some gun-metal cigar-cases set in diamonds. The stranger purchased the case, and asked for it to be sent to the Metropole to 'John Smith.' With the hundreds of letters and visitors there, it would be almost impossible to trace the case or the man."

"Lockhart's might help you."

"They have, as far as they can. The cigar-case was sold to a tall American. Beyond that it is impossible to go."

A meaning smile dawned on Merritt's face.

"They might have taken more notice of the gentleman at Rutter's," he said, "being a smaller shop. I'm going to admire that case and pretend it belonged to a friend of mine."

"I want you to try and buy it for me," Chris said, quietly.

Rutter's was reached at length, and, after some preliminaries, the cigar-case was approached. Merritt took it up, with a well-feigned air of astonishment.

"Why, this must have belonged to my old friend, B——," he exclaimed. "It's not now?"

"No, sir," the assistant explained. "We purchased it from a gentleman who stayed for a day or two here at the Lion, a friend of Mr. Reginald Henson."

"A tall man?" said Merritt, tentatively. "Long, thin beard and slightly marked with smallpox? Gave the name of Rawlins?"

"That's the gentleman, sir. Perhaps you may like to purchase the case?"

The purchase was made in due course, and together Chris and her queer companion left the shop.

"Rawlins is an American swindler of the smartest type," said Merritt. "If you get him in a corner ask him what he and Henson were doing in America, some two years ago. Rawlins is in this little game for certain. But you ought to trace him by means of the Lion people. Oh, lor'!"

Merritt slipped back into an entry as a little, clean-shaven man passed along the street. His eyes had a dark look of fear in them.

"They're after me!" he said, huskily. "That was one of them. Excuse me, miss."

Merrit darted away and flung himself into a passing cab. His face was dark with passion; the big veins stood out on his forehead like cords.

"The cur," he snarled—"the mean cur! I'll be even with him yet. If I can only catch the 4:48 at the Junction I'll be in London before them. And I'll go down to Brighton, if I have to foot it all the way, and once I get there, look to yourself, Reginald Henson! A hundred pounds is a good sum to go on with. I'll kill that cur—I'll choke the life out of him. Cabby, if you get to the Junction at a quarter to five I'll give you a quid."

"The quid's as good as mine, sir," Cabby said, cheerfully. "Get along, lass."

Meanwhile, Chris had returned, thoughtfully, to the dog-cart, musing over the last discovery. She felt quite satisfied with her afternoon's work. Then a new idea struck her. She crossed over to the postoffice and dictated a long telegram, thus:

"To David Steel, 15, Downend Terrace, Brighton:

"Go to Walen's and ascertain full description of the tentative customer who suggested the firm should procure gun-metal cigar-case for him to look at. Ask if he was a tall man, with a thin beard and a face slightly pockmarked. Then telephone result to me here. Quite safe, as Henson is away. Great discoveries to tell you.

—Christobel Lee."

Chris paid for her telegram and then drove thoughtfully homeward.

ONE FAMOUS MAN'S WIFE.

Madame Talleyrand Thought Denon Was Robinson Crusoe—Husband's Excuse for Marrying Her.

Apropos of a recent sale in London of a first copy of "Robinson Crusoe" and a second edition of "The Farther Adventures," dated 1719, for the sum of $1,225, the Literary World revives an enjoyable story of Mme. Talleyrand's appreciation of "Robinson Crusoe:"

"Talleyrand used to excuse his marriage with a woman so lacking in tact and sense, on the ground that clever women might compromise their husbands, whereas, stupid women only compromised themselves. One day Denon, the famous Egyptologist, dined with the Talleyrands. M. Talleyrand instructed his wife to read Denon's books. She, dutifully, went to the library, but on the way forgot the name. She could only remember she wanted the book of a famous traveler, whose name ended in "on." The librarian gave her "Robinson Crusoe." Mme. Talleyrand read the book, marveling that a great traveler could write such an interesting work. At dinner she astonished her guest by suddenly exclaiming: 'Mon Dieu, monsieur, great joy you must have felt on your island when you found Friday!'"

Paper Shirt Fronts in Use.

A paper shirt front is one of the latest articles or apparel worn by waiters who are expected to appear in full dress while on duty. The observer was a visitor recently at one of the popular suburban resorts, where the waiters all displayed a wealth of immaculate white bosom, on each of which were a couple of neat studs. It looked as though they had received a supply of fresh linen from the laundry, until one of them carelessly allowed his low vest to become unbuttoned, and the secret was out, with the shirt front, the latter of which was drawn up in such a way as to expose a cheap and dirty negligee shirt, that was not at all in keeping with the conditions otherwise presented. Paper collars have been worn for several years. Paper shirt fronts are of more recent origin. They are, presumably, much cheaper than linen, considering the cost of doing up a starched shirt, and the fact that a clean shirt would have to be donned almost daily.—Brooklyn Times.

A Slip.

He was telling the story of the engaged young man who stopped at the home of his sweetheart on his way to business one morning, just to hold her hand for a moment.

"The young man rang the bell," said the story-teller, "and asked the maid to announce him. Pretty soon the girl poked her head out of the bath room door and cried: 'Hello, Jack, dear!' 'Hello!' Jack called back. 'Come on down.' 'I can't, Jack, I'm in my bath.' 'But I won't keep you a moment.' 'I haven't er—got—er—er—anything on, Jack,' was the hesitating reply. 'Well,' said Jack, 'slip on something and come down.'—

"So," concluded the story-teller, "she slipped on the top step and came down."

Everybody laughed but one man. He looked as though in deep thought for a second, and then cried: "You don't get me to bite on that gag."—New York Evening Sun.

DON'T GIVE UP.

Don't be discouraged by past efforts to find relief and cure from the myriads of ills that come from sick kidneys. You may pass nights of sleepless tossing, annoyed by frequent urination. Your back may ache like a toothache or sudden twitches and twinges of backache pain make life a misery. Perhaps you have nervous spells, are weak, tired-out, depressed. There is a cure for all of this and for every trouble of the bladder and kidneys. Read this case and note it tells how well the cure was tested:

Charles Lindgren, sealer of freight cars on the L. S. & M. S. R. R., La Porte, Ind., says: "I have greater faith in Doan's Kidney Pills to-day than I had in the fall of 1897 when I began taking them and made a public statement of the result. At that time I had suffered with lameness and soreness of the back, which was so excruciating that I could scarcely turn in bed, and Doan's Kidney Pills completely cured this trouble. I am always ready to endorse Doan's Kidney Pills personally to anyone requiring a kidney remedy. After a lapse of three years I make this statement which shows my undoubted faith in the preparation."

A FREE TRIAL of this great kidney medicine, which cured Mr. Lindgren, will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. For sale by all druggists, 50 cents per box.

NERVOUS PROSTRATION IS SYSTEMIC CATARRH.

[Pe-ru-na is the only Systemic Catarrh Remedy known to the Medical Profession]

MRS. IDA L. GREGORY

A LEADING CLUBWOMAN OF DENVER, Colo.

Mrs. Ida L. Gregory, President of the Poets and Authors Club of Colorado, President of Colorado Art Club, Director of School of Industry and Design, Vice President of Sherman Art League, Is One of the Leading Club Women of Colorado.

In a recent letter from 2 Grant avenue, Denver, Colo., this prominent lady says:

"Some years ago my husband suffered from nervous prostration and advising with a friendly druggist he brought home a bottle of Peruna. His health was restored from its use, his appetite was increased and restful sleep came to him. I therefore heartily endorse Peruna, as an honest remedy worthy the good things which are said of it."—Ida L. Gregory.

Nervous prostration is so frequently associated with systemic catarrh that some doctors do not distinguish between the two. In systemic catarrh the disease has pervaded the whole system and there is a constant loss of vital fluids from the mucous membranes.

A great many people are doctoring for nervous prostration who would be immediately cured by a course of Peruna. Peruna makes clean, healthy mucous membranes. By this preservation of the fluids the weakening drain of their discharge is prevented.

The medical profession is just beginning to awaken to the fact that chronic catarrh, especially systemic catarrh, will soon produce a condition so nearly resembling nervous prostration that it is very difficult to tell one from the other.

Peruna cures these cases without fail.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case, and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Close Competition.

"We are living in a rapid age," I say to my friend, as we note the fall announcement of changing styles.

"Yes," he agrees.

"We are making history rapidly," I further remark.

"True," he mutters; "but not so fast as we are making historical novels."—Judge.

Explained.

Thomas—Why, don't you recollect that girl? That's the girl you used to rave over last summer—you called her a "poem" and all that kind of thing.

Edward—By Jove! so it is! But, you know, I never could commit a poem to memory."

One Way.

"But how, pray, can a man be his own worst enemy?"

"Well, I should think it might rather easily come about through his trying to raise flowers and keep hens, too," observed the suburbanite, after a moment's reflection.—Tit-Bits.

Had Crazy Spells.

West Pembroke, Me., Sept. 22.—The thirteen-year-old daughter of Mrs. A. L. Smith suffered with a peculiar affliction, which her mother describes as follows:

"It is two years now since she was first taken with crazy spells.

"They kept on coming at intervals, and I could get nothing to do her any good.

"The doctors gave me no encouragement. They all said they could not help her.

"The crazy spell would last about nine days, then she would be well about nine days, but would eat very little and was very yellow. Even the whites of her eyes were yellow.

"I heard that Dodd's Kidney Pills were a great remedy for young girls, and decided to try them.

"After taking one box she was completely restored, and she has not had one bad spell since. Of course we continue to use the pills, and she used altogether five boxes last fall.

"In March I thought I saw symptoms of the spells again, and I got six boxes, of which she has taken four, and is in splendid health.

"Her case was certainly a remarkable one, and we are very thankful to Dodd's Kidney Pills for the great good they have done my daughter."

The Feminine View.

Wederly—Remarkable thing about the disappearance of $27,000 from a safety-deposit vault belonging to a bookmaker.

Mrs. Wederly—Yes; and the most remarkable thing about it is that he had it to lose.

Wederly—Why so?

Mrs. Wederly—Oh, most writers complain that literature don't pay.—Chicago News.

Man of Expedients.

"Mixom, the chemist, has made his fortune at last," says the friend.

"But I thought he couldn't find any sale at all for his cough mixture," answered the other friend.

"He couldn't; so he labeled it 'genuine maple syrup,' and sold every drop of it the first cool day we had. Now he is rushed with orders for it."—Judge.

EDITORS OF TO-DAY

EVOLUTION OF THE RESPONSIBLE NEWSPAPER MAN.

Position is Little More Than a Century Old—Francis Jeffrey, of the Edinburgh Review, the First of a Now Numerous Class.

The editor as he is now best known—the responsible conductor of a newspaper or periodical—is a comparatively recent production of civilization. He is, indeed, but little more than a century old. The word is much older, for it has been in use for nearly 300 years; but it originally meant, like the French "editeur"—publisher. And an editor of that kind was sometimes even called an "editioner"—a particularly ugly word. This use of the term, however, soon became obsolete, and from the beginning of the eighteenth century the world of readers has been familiar with the editor of the second kind—that is, one who prepares or revises and annotates and arranges the work of another, or of others, for publication.

A learned editor of the modern variety has lately laid it down that "a good writer will be a bad editor, and a good editor a bad stylist"; and his own use of the odious word "stylist" may be held to go some way to prove the truth of his diction. But the statement is too sweeping to be accepted as it stands. It contains, of course, a measure of truth, for the qualities required for effective textual criticism, for the patient collation of texts and authorities, and for the various other kinds of detailed work regarded by modern scholarship as editorially important, are very different from those needed for original composition.

Then there is the third kind of editor—the responsible conductor of journal or periodical—who is hardly traceable much beyond the beginning of the nineteenth century. It is curious to recall now the primitive nature of the editorial arrangements which were made when the Edinburgh Review was started. The small band of northern scholars who cultivated literature on a little oatmeal seem to have thought that a review could be satisfactorily conducted by a committee of nearly a dozen. But this was soon found to be an impracticable arrangement, and the responsible authority was lodged in the Review's first real editor, Francis Jeffrey. Somewhat similar attempts have been made occasionally in later days to place the editorial authority more or less in commission, so to speak, though not with such a naive ignoring of possibilities as characterized the start of the Edinburgh Review, but such experiments have not usually been very successful.

Francis Jeffrey, in charge of the Edinburg Review, was the real father of all who have since occupied the editorial chair of paper or periodical. It may be objected that magazine editors existed before Jeffrey's day, but it would be hard to show that any so-called editor exercised functions really corresponding to those of his present day successor.

Goldsmith was for a while the chief writer in the review, the Monthly. He did hack work of every kind—work which in later and more prosperous days he never cared to claim as his own, for it was written under hard and degrading conditions; but the real conductor of the Monthly was its proprietor, Griffiths, the bookseller, whom Smollett dubbed "illiterate," and whose power was shared by his wife. Goldsmith complained that all he wrote was tampered with by these worthies, who jointly filled the editorial chair. Cave, the bookseller, again, who founded the Gentleman's Magazine, was also its responsible conductor.

And in those cases where a magazine or other periodical publication was identified, not with a bookseller or publisher, but with a well-known writer's name, the writer was not an editor in the modern sense, for his business was to write, for the most part, his own paper, not to accept or reject, sift and arrange and correct the contributions of others. It was in this way that Defoe conducted his Review, Steele and Addison the Tatler, Spectator and Guardian, Fielding the Convent Garden Journal and Johnson the Rambler and Idler. Occasional numbers of one or other of these papers, or of the many other periodical publications—the Connoisseur, World, Adventurer and the like—might be written by a casual contributor, but in the main they were written, in each case, by the one or two men who started, and if the expression may be allowed, "ran" them.

Johnson did much to abolish the days and traditions of Grub street and to enhance the dignity of the profession of letters. Francis Jeffrey first invested the editorial chair with an authority which commanded respect.

New Railway in Asiatic Russia.

United States Consul Smith at Moscow has informed the state department that a private company, representing Moscow and foreign capital, has been organized to build a railroad to connect the central Asian with the Siberian roads by a line from Andishan or Tashkent, along the western frontier of China, through the basins of the Irtish and Ob rivers. The project is to have it pass not only through the Akmolinsk district, but also through the southern districts of the government of Tomsk. This line would afford a short and convenient route for shipping central Asian products to eastern Siberia, Mongolia and Manchuria, and also for bringing Chinese goods, especially tea, into the transcaspian provinces and even into northern Persia.

Not Up to His Own Estimate.

"There!" said one old crony to another, to whom he was showing the lions of the Scottish town, "that's the statue of Bailie Watson."

"Is it no a gude bit larger than life-size, though?" queried his friend.

"Oh, aye, it's a' that; but it's no' a bit bigger than the Bailie thocht he was himself."—Tit-Bits.

Pa Knew.

"Pa, what does 'absent-minded' mean?"

"My boy, that's easy. Did you ever stop to think?"

"Yes."

"And your thoughts ran on?"

"Yes."

"Well, that's it."—Indianapolis News.

Mexican Mustang Liniment

Over-pleasure is as hard on the muscles and joints as over-work. The best thing to do to get the body right after a long bicycle ride is to rub the sore, stiff parts well with Mexican Mustang Liniment. No better remedy made for bruises, cuts and chafing.

EVERY CHILD BORN INTO THE WORLD with an inherited tendency to distressing, disfiguring humours of the skin, scalp, and blood, becomes an object of the most tender solicitude, not only because of its suffering but because of the dreadful fear that the disfiguration is to be lifelong and mar its future happiness and prosperity. Hence it becomes the duty of mothers of such afflicted children to acquaint themselves with the best, the purest, and most effective treatment available, viz., THE CUTICURA TREATMENT.

Warm baths with CUTICURA SOAP, to cleanse the skin of crusts and scales and soften the thickened cuticle, gentle anointings with CUTICURA OINTMENT, to instantly allay itching, irritation, and inflammation, and soothe and heal, are all that can be desired for the alleviation of the suffering of skin-tortured infants and children and the comfort of worn-out, worried mothers. A single set is often sufficient to cure when the best physicians fail.

THE NEWS,

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED—EVERY—THURSDAY.

Halvor Steenerson was not the choice of the Thief River Falls Republicans for the nomination for congressman, but he will have their hearty support from now on.

At the primary election last Tuesday the Republican party cast more votes than both the Democrats and Populists. That is just an indication of what will happen in November.

E. J. Swedback is the candidate of the Republicans in this district for state senator. He will vote for the re-election of Moses E. Clapp for state senator and that alone should give him the vote of all Thief River Falls citizens. A vote for Swedback is a vote for Clapp.

St. Hilaire has but one candidate for a county office—O. H. Peters Mr. Peters is the Republican nominee for county auditor and is thoroughly competent to fill the position. The people of Thief River Falls should stand by him, and thus give St. Hilaire one of the county offices,

Early in the campaign the Red Lake Falls Courier announced that it would support the man best qualified to fill the office for which he aspired, regardless of political affiliations. Will the Courier kindly inform us which candidate it is supporting for superintendent of schools, Wilson or Jeffers?

The Primary election law will probably be repealed by the next session of the state legislature. While in spirit it is an ideal law, it makes it altogether too expensive for the candidate seeking the nomination, and thus many competent men will refuse to run for county officers. It also engenders a great deal of strife and bitterness within the party.

A prominent Populist of the town of Rocksbury—and who is still a believer in Populist principals—informed the News the first of the week that he was going to vote the straight Republican county ticket. He said that all good Populists were ashamed of the way the Populist office holders had conducted things in this county during the past six years and that it was time for a change.

C. L. Dobner, chairman of the Republican county committee, has called a meeting of the committee to be held in this city Saturday afternoon. The Republicans propose to thoroughly organize the county this year, and make a determined fight for election of their ticket. They have nominated a good clean county ticket, and there is no reason why they should not be successful.

The primary elections are over. With some of us our favorite candidates have won; with others they have lost. But whether we have won or lost, it is the people's verdict. They have made the choice and it is final. All the candidates had their strong points, all had their ardent friends, but all could not win. It is time now that the first skirmish is over to forget our disappointments and to remember that it was a contest in the family. We are all Republicans and we settle our own differences for ourselves, in fact we have settled them. We as Republicans have named our candidates and now the thing to do is to elect them. This was a contest among ourselves, the next is with the Democrats, our political enemies. Our differences with them are those of policy and principle, and we will present to them from now on a solid united and harmonious battle array that will mean an old-time, rousing Republicans majority for Gov. Van Sant and for every man on the ticket.

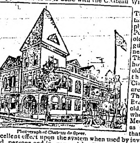
Chateau de Speer Wines

of Passaic, N. J. Vineyards.

These Wines Rival the World in Excellence.

Old, rich and mellow by age and years of care and frequent racking in fumigated cellars as is done with the Chateau Wines in France.



Photograph of Chateau de Speer.

The Chateau contains a limited supply of Private Stock Port nineteen years old, besides Burgundy and Claret of nearly the same age. The Speer Port, however, nine years old, as well as the Burgundy, Claret and Sherry, are high class wines. The ★★★ Climax Brandy is 18 years old. All are preferred where known by the Medical profession as superior to any that can be had, for their excellent effect upon the system when used by invalids, the weakly and aged persons and in general family use. Northern New Jersey climate, and soil abounding in iron is just adapted for this grape for Port wine. It is the same kind of soil as in Portugal. Speer's winery and vineyards are the only Port grape vineyards in the United States; only vineyards that cultivate the real Port wine grape of Portugal; while other wines or mixtures called port are made without a single Oporto grape in them. Mr. Speer is the first and only one who imported the vines and acclimated the real Port wine grape vines of Portugal. He spent thousands of dollars as a hobby to see what he could do toward acclimating these Portugal vines here. It took eight years for them to become acclimated before Mr. Speer got a single grape; during those years all died except about eight hundred vines, when those began to grow vigorous and bear fruit; from these, layers were made for new vines. The vineyards now cover fifty six acres. It has proven a success. The grapes are allowed to hang on the vines until they begin to raisin, when they have parted with some of the water and are rich in sugar; and the wine made from Port wine grapes is the only real genuine Port wine made in America. It is by far THE wine for weakly persons, the aged and for evening entertainments.

Sold by Druggists and Grocers.

The work of repairing the dam has not progressed as fast as expected and it be over a month before the electric light plant will be in operation.

Minneapolis Journal: Marcus Johnson comes up smiling and says that instead of being $2,000 behind on the Seventh District contest, he and his partner are $1,000 to the good. Instead of betting on Young against Dowling and losing, he bet on the field against Dowling $2,000 to $1,000. He wins the $1,000 on Volstead. His partner in the investment is a man prominent in church circles.

Notice of a suit for breach of promise of marriage has been filed upon Rev. Dr. Dodds, of Crookston, well known in this city, and damages alleged in the sum of $1,000, the plaintiff being Mrs. Luella Smith, of Minneapolis. The doctor was at one time engaged to be married to this lady, but claims that they had later had thorough understanding that their marriage was an impossibility on account of incompatibilities of disposition and religious belief.

At a meeting of the board of county commissioners held the first of the week Matt Skala offered the use of the opera house on the north side in Red Lake Falls to the county free for a period of three years providing it was used as a court house. Two of the commissioners voted in favor of accepting the offer and two voted against it. Commissioner Herbert was not present and it depends upon what he does whether or not the proposition is accepted. It would be a saving to the county of about $800 a year and it would seem foolish for the commissioners to refuse to accept so generous an offer.

The 20,000 Armenians in the United States, through their president, have written Secretary Hay, asking his good offices in behalf of their countrymen in Turkey.

The arrival of Gen. Joseph Wheeler as the guest of the widow of George W. Childs at Richfield Springs, N. Y., causes a renewal of the rumor of their engagement.

Lulu R. Davis, colored, of Chicago, a factory girl twelve years old, bought a $10 lot in the Cripple Creek district. Gold ore has been found on it, which will make the girl very rich.

The International Union of Commercial Telegraphers, is a new organization formed at Chicago by delegates from forty cities. Their next session will be held in Minneapolis, the third Saturday in September, 1903.

Chancellor McCracken, of the New York university, has a letter from the trustees of the estate of Samuel F. B. Morse, the inventor of the telegraph, announcing that Prof. Morse, who died thirty years ago, had bequeathed $1,000 to the university.

It has been found that, for the total acreage of 345,242 acres of Rice in Louisiana, the expected product is 2,063,238 bags. On the total acreage of 173,737 acres in Texas, the expected production will be 1,036,956 bags, making a grand total for the entire production of the two states of 3,100,019 bags.

TWO MURDER TRIALS.

Bemidji Interested in Two Cases of Peculiar Interest.

Bemidji, Minn., Sept. 28.—There are several important cases to be tried during the present term of court in Beltrami county, chiefly among them being the murder case of George La Due and Joe Seguin, charged with the murder on April 5 of Eugene McLaughlan, with fishberry poison. The next in importance is the case of one Bazil Thunder, charged with the murder of a woman named O-bah-bah-Mushako, in a freight train with a club outside of the Red Lake Indian reservation. The LaDue and Seguin case is set for trial Sept. 29, and Thunder's case will follow immediately after. Ed Hawkins pleaded guilty to forgery in the second degree and was sent to Stillwater for four years.

A MOTHER KILLS HER BABE.

Gave It Carbolic Acid and Placed It in a Satchel to Carry Away.

Dubuque, Iowa, Sept. 28.—A woman giving her name as Mrs. Della Liddy of Elkader, is in jail here for murdering her babe by means of carbolic acid while in the lavatory of the Milwaukee station. She applied the poison, then put the babe in a small satchel and boarded the train for the north. The odor of carbolic acid was detected by the station master, who also noticed that the woman no longer carried the babe. The police were notified and she was arrested. At the police station the satchel was opened and a ghastly sight met the gaze of the officers. Wrapped in cotton and clothes were the terribly disfigured remains of the infant. The face and portions of the body were frightfully burned.

GOOD ROADS TRAIN RECALLED.

Because of Lack of Interest Shown in Work the Action Is Taken.

Grand Forks, N. D., Sept. 28. — Col. R. W. Richardson yesterday morning received a telegram from F. I. Whitney of the Great Northern stating that it had been decided not to send the complete good road construction train to the coast. The train will return to St. Paul to-night. This action is taken because of the small interest shown in the cities already visited. Col. Richardson, Director Dodge, Secretary Taggart and Commissioner Abbott will continue to the coast, holding conventions in Portland and Seattle, and returning East about Nov. 1.

MRS. C. A. PILLSBURY DEAD.

Has Been in Poor Health Since Her Husband's Death.

Minneapolis, Sept. 28.—Mrs. C. A. Pillsbury died yesterday morning at 2 o'clock at her residence, Twenty-second street and Stevens avenue, aged sixty-one years. She had been ill for four days with pneumonia. Her death came very suddenly and she was conscious up to within a few moments of the end. Since the death of her husband she has not been in very good health. She was born in New Hampshire and married Charles A. Pillsbury in 1866. They came to Minneapolis in 1869.

DIVORCED AND MARRIED.

New York Woman, Freed From Count, Marries at Once.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Sept. 28. — Mrs Bertha M. Koehsel of New York has been granted a divorce from Count Conrad von Rhoden Koehsl on the ground of non-support. After receiving her decree she married Oscar B. Stillman of New York. Soon after the ceremony the couple departed for New York, en route to the West Indies, where Stillman is the owner of extensive sugar plantations.

PUPILS FURNISH FUEL.

Milwaukee Scholars Are Required to Bring Wood Each Day.

Milwaukee, Sept. 28.—In the schools of the Ninth ward the coal famine is being felt to such an extent that the children have been compelled to furnish their own fuel. Wood boxes have been placed in the barracks and the teachers have asked each pupil to bring two sticks of wood each day so that the barracks may be heated.

MINER SUFFOCATED.

Charles Sanderson Perished While Trying to Save Employer's Property.

Butte, Mont., Sept. 28.—Fumes from burning wood suffocated Charles A. Sanderson, a well known mining man, late yesterday afternoon in a shaft. The stove used in the bottom of the shaft to create circulation of air ignited the timbers and Sanderson perished while trying to quench the fire.

Verdict for One Dollar.

Hudson, Wis., Sept. 28.—The jury in the suit for libel brought by Otto Christianson, clerk of Sawyer county, against W. E. Schel, editor of the Hayward Enterprise, returned a verdict for $1. The attorney for plaintiff moved for new trial on the ground that the verdict was not in accordance with the evidence. Judge Helms has taken the matter under advisement.

City Wins Over County.

Eau Claire, Wis., Sept. 28. — The supreme court decisions in the two tax commission cases, which were carried to the supreme court by the rural districts of Eau Claire county, constitute a victory for the city of Eau Claire against the rest of the county, the motions for rehearing made on behalf of the rural districts being denied.

Socialist Leader Dead.

Helena, Mont., Sept. 28. — John Heldt, well known resident of this city, and treasurer of the socialist party, dropped dead on Main street last evening. He leaves a wife.

Gathering Sugar Beets.

Dassel, Minn., Sept. 28.—The sugar beet harvest has begun and the yield is averaging twelve tons to the acre. Farmers get $4.50 per ton. About 300 acres were planted in sugar beets in this vicinity this year.

Thousands of Brands.

Pierre, S. D., Sept. 28. — The state brand commission completed its session, passing upon 135 new brands. This makes the total number filed since the organization of commission 4,464.

The State Day by Day.

News of Interest.

CLIMATE AN DCROPS.

Bulletin for Last Week—Corn Injured by Frost—Plowing Backward.

Minnesota's climate and crop bulletin summarized follows:

There were light and scattered showers on the 16th and much heavier and more general rains on the 19th, 20th and 21st. The mornings of the 18th and 19th were cool, with heavy frosts in many places. Threshing has been going on as rapidly as possible during the dry parts of the week, and the grain left in shock is nearly all threshed; threshing from the stack is begun. High winds on one or two days made threshing difficult. In some of the low lands of the Red river valley small areas of very late oats, barley and flax were still uncut at the time of the killing frost on the 13th, and these are now hardly worth cutting. The corn crop has been very seriously injured by the frost and the stalks stand dried and bleached; some of this corn has been cut and shocked, but a great deal of it will be left standing in the field. Fall plowing is backward because of the delay in getting the crops off the fields. The second crop of clover has very little seed in it. Winter wheat is being seeded in small areas in some southern counties. Early seeded rye is coming up nicely

IN FREEBORN COUNTY.

Harvest Is in Progress — Corn Crop Was Injured by Frost.

The growth of crops in Freeborn county for 1902 is now completed and the harvest is in progress, or rather threshing of small grains is going on, and the cutting of corn, late hay, and the digging of potatoes is going ahead. Threshing of unstacked grain is about finished, and the yield varies greatly. The poor land has produced the best crops of grain this year.

Corn was greatly injured by frost and the crop will be a poor one, except in instances where it was planted very early. In a great majority of fields "soft" corn will predominate, and the crop will be such that it must be fed out early or it will mold and spoil. The fodder is also very much reduced in value by the heavy frosts, while late grass was more or less injured by the freeze. Potatoes are being dug and are a heavy crop, but not as good as was expected earlier in the season, the excessive rains being of great injury.

The apple crop is about gathered, and in some instances was heavy, but many orchards had little fruit. The Wealthy varieties were especially prolific this year, and one tree was reported in the county that had three barrels and a bushel, or about ten bushels of apples. Many apples have been shipped outside the county by dealers here.

BOTH LEAP TO SAFETY.

Engine Completely Wrecked but Men Are Safe.

New Ulm, Minn., Sept. 25. — The north-bound freight train on the Minneapolis & St. Louis road, coming into the city, collided with an empty freight car and the engine was thrown from the track. The fireman and engineer both jumped and saved their lives. At the point where the accident occurred the embankment is forty feet high and the two men rolled to the bottom. The cause of the accident was the result of a flying switch that was being attempted and the car went beyond the fork. The engine is almost completely wrecked.

EXCURSION TRAIN HIT.

Narrow Escape of St. Paul Pleasure Seekers at Cass Lake.

Cass Lake, Minn., Sept. 25.—An excursion train from St. Paul, returning from Bemidji, was partially wrecked Sunday night half a mile west of Cass Lake. The train of seven coaches was just clearing a Y on the line south to St. Paul when it was struck by a freight train coming from the West. The large engine on the freight hit the rear coach of the excursion train, smashing the end, derailing the car. Another coach was damaged. The balance of the train was cut off. No one was killed. Several were shaken up but not otherwise injured.

BACK FROM LONG WAGON TRIP.

Park Rapids Couple Spend a Year in a Camping Trip.

Park Rapids, Minn., Sept. 25.—Mr and Mrs. Thomas Loraine have just arrived from the West. They left here a year ago and have traveled something over 5,000 miles, through North Dakota, Montana, Idaho and Wyoming, traveling in a wagon and camping out. They have a very beautiful collection of specimens of rocks, minerals, petrifactions, etc., and can give much information regarding the section visited.

LIFT IN ACREAGE VALUES.

An Average Raise of 25 Per Cent Throughout the State.

The real estate committee of the state board of equalization concluded its work on schedules of acre property submitted by the county boards.

The result of the committee's investigation will be an advance on the returns made by county boards, averaging 25 per cent per acre over the entire state. It is probable that the recommendations of the committee will be accepted by the board as a whole.

The counties of Beltrami, Hennepin, Ramsey and St. Louis were passed as returned by the county boards.

The other counties of the state were divided into seven classes and grouped according to the valuation placed upon the land.

The assessment is uniformly 33 1-3 per cent of the valuation fixed, and the counties are grouped as follows:

Class No. 1. Valuation per acre, $39. Assessed, $13. Blue Earth, Brown, Carver, Dakota, Dodge, Faribault, Fillmore, Freeborn, Goodhue, Jackson, Le Sueur, McLeod, Martin, Mower, Nicollet, Nobles, Olmsted, Redwood, Renville, Rice, Rock, Sibley, Steele, Waseca, Washington, Watonwan.

Class No. 2. Valuation, $36. Assessed, $12. Lyon, Meeker, Murray, Scott, Wabasha, Winona, Wright, Yellow Medicine.

Class No. 3. Valuation, $30. Assessed, $10. Chippewa, Houston, Kandiyohi, Lac qui Parle, Lincoln, Pipestone.

Class No. 4. Valuation, $24. Assessed, $8. Becker, Big Stone, Clay, Douglas, Grant, Otter Tail, Pope, Stevens, Stearns, Swift, Traverse, Wilkin.

Class No. 5. Valuation, $18. Assessed, $6. Anoka, Benton, Chisago, Isanti, Kittson, Morrison, Norman, Polk, Sherburne, Todd, Wadena.

Class No. 6. Valuation, $15. Assessed, $5. Crow Wing, Hubbard, Lake, Mille Lacs, Pine.

Class No. 7. Valuation, $9. Assessed, $3. Aitkin, Carlton, Cass, Red Lake, Roseau.

Acreage outside the cities this year was returned by the county boards at $330,000,000 in round numbers, as against $256,000,000 two years ago, an increase of $74,000,000. If the state board makes a further increase of 25 per cent, the total valuation of farm acreage for this year will be $412,500,000, in round numbers.

Grain elevators will be taken up by the full board to-day. The Ramsey county assessment was up to last year, and was passed. St. Louis county returned a valuation of $232,000 this year, as against $194,000 last year, an increase of $38,000, and the returns were accepted.

Hennepin county, on the other hand, made a return of only $198,000, as against $283,000 last year, a decrease of $85,000. The members of the board thought an increase of 75 per cent on the returns would be proper, but held it in abeyance until Emerson Cole, the member from Hennepin could explain the falling off in elevator values.

TELLS HOW TO KILL BUGS.

State Entomologist Describes Methods of Exterminating Vermin.

F. L. Washburn, state entomologist, has been swamped with letters from housewives anxious to ascertain an effective remedy for destroying carpet beetles and buffalo bugs.

Mr. Washburn suggests a house-cleaning of infested houses.

He advises that, where carpets are used, they should be thoroughly beaten and sprayed outdoors with benzine.

Rooms should be well swept and the floors washed. In aggravated cases, tar paper should be laid on the floors.

If this remedy is not effective, a damp cloth should be laid over the infected places and a hot iron used, thus creating steam that will pass through the carpet and kill the bugs.

In protecting furs from the ravages of the pest they should be stored in tight chests containing a supply of camphor.

EXPECT MANY FIRES.

Gen. Andrews Notifies Wardens That Forest Fires May Be Expected.

Chief Fire Warden Andrews has received the first report of a forest or prairie fire made to his office this fall. The chairman of the town of Barnesville, Clay county, reports that Aug. 13, a prairie fire was started in the northern part of the township by sparks from a locomotive. The weather was dry and windy, and about $1,000 damage was done.

The wet season has resulted in unusually heavy vegetation, and Warden Andrews fears that frost and dry weather will result in many fires unless extraordinary precautions are taken. He has sent letters to the fire wardens urging them to exert every effort to extinguish fires when they are first reported.

MAKES RULING ON NOTES.

Public Examiner Johnson Calls for a Slight Reform.

Public Examiner Johnson has sent letters to bankers, urging that when a note signed by two or more parties is not paid when it is due, it should not be allowed to run, but should be renewed.

Mr. Johnson states that this would be better for the indorsers and the holders.

It will remove all doubt as to the liability of the indorsers and prevent the embarrassment of the holder by being suddenly called on for payment.

TRIES TO END LIFE.

Convict at Stillwater Jumps From the Fifth Floor.

Stillwater, Sept. 24. — A convict by the name Schwartz attempted suicide at the prison yesterday afternoon by jumping from the fifth gallery of the prison to the ground below. The attempt may prove successful, inasmuch as the man's left thigh is fractured and he is unconscious. Schwartz had been moody much of the time since being received at the prison, but was able to work, and was employed in one of the shoe shops.

LOVE'S AMBUSH

By Kate Masterson

He wondered, boy-like, through his youth,
How love would come to him some day
Rose-crowned, star-eyed and fair in truth:
How hand in hand, along the way
He'd lead her to the purple rim
Across the golden afternoon
Where she should smile alone for him
And life their lullaby would croon!

And so he dreamed! And though he talked
With other girls upon the stairs,
With one he danced; with one he walked;
But never blundered in love's snare,
Nor thought he'd strayed into the net
That bound his life's unspoken wish
One lucky day when first he met
A girl who owned a chafing dish!

She was a serious maid who had
Ambitions fine—ideals grand,
Her eyes upon the stars; her fad
To live for Art alone! She planned
A great career—the goal in sight;
And afternoons to call he came
While she put on an apron white
And dallied with the chafer's flame!

She frizzled eggs and oysters creamed
And placed the cups of china blue
With touch artistic while they dreamed
Of all their noble aims come true;
They never talked of love—but things
Adjust themselves in these affairs;
One day she deviled turkey wings
And so—love found them unawares!

How Thompson's Watch Cost Him a Wife.

BY WILLIAM BLOSS.

(Copyright, 1902, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

"Gentlemen of the leisure class don't carry watches nowadays," said our host, Thompson, dogmatically, pausing to light a second cigarette. "James, since Captain Barry wishes to be exact, you may look at the library clock and tell him what time it is."

"It is striking eight o'clock, sir," replied James, respectfully, as he quietly filled the Captain's glass.

There was a snug party of six lounging over their wine and tobacco after dining regally at Thompson's bachelor board. Barry had to catch a train for St. Paul at 9 p. m. He wanted to stay just as long as possible before summoning a cab to take him to the depot, and upon consulting his watch for the hour had been seized by forebodings as to the accuracy of the hands. His inquiry as to the "right" time had led to the host's remark.

Barry flushed a little as it fell. The assertion seemed to his mind supercilious and barbarously un-American. Barry himself was a man of the people, and was proud of it. So, too, was Thompson, or had been, once.

"What do you mean by 'gentlemen of the leisure class,' you gray-haired fraud," he demanded, in half anger. "Do you mean to say I am no gentleman because I carry a watch and like to know what time it is when I have a train to make?"

"Certainly not," replied Thompson, with placidity. "Of course not. You are a gentleman because you are a man of education, intelligence, good-breeding and some ancestry——"

"Huh!" grunted the mollified Barry, "What then?"

"But you are not," continued the host, "a gentleman of the leisure class, because you busy yourself with your commercial affairs and even at your age continue——"

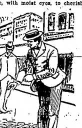
"At my age! I'm full five years younger than you are."

Thompson waved the interruption aside as irrelevant. "I was going to say that if you quit business and became a loafer——"

"As you have."

"Yes, as I have, then you might account yourself a gentleman of the leisure class."

"When I was a young person," continued Thompson, "just beginning life on the Board of Trade, after leaving Ann Arbor, my Uncle Jackson Thompson, who had sent me to school and had in fact reared me from boyhood as his own son, with much ceremony one day presented me with a timepiece known as the family clock, and told me, with moist eyes, to cherish it as the apple of my eye; always to be as exact and reliable, as true to duty, as honest, as industrious, as it was itself.

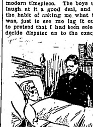


The watch • • plunged into the Chicago river.

"'Tom,' said he, 'You know how much we Thompsons think of this watch. It belonged to your great grandfather. He bought it in Liverpool before the revolution, and it has been in the family—and running, too—most of the time, ever since. Take it, my boy, and remember to live up to its principles.'

"I was much affected, naturally, for I knew Uncle Jackson regarded that watch as his chiefest treasure. I made all sorts of protestations of good behavior and careful solicitude for the ancient horologue. Uncle Jackson went back to his Michigan farm—and I went to work among the bears and bulls here in Chicago, on the old board.

"The watch, as you remembered, Carroll, was an enormous 'bull's eye,' and weighed half a pound, easy. But I wore it, and laid aside my own more modern timepiece. The boys used to laugh at it a good deal, and got in the habit of asking me what time it was, just to see me lug it out, and to pretend that I had been selected to decide disputes as to the exact hour and second, and all that sort of nuisance, you know. But I didn't much care. Uncle Jackson could have any old thing he wanted from me then. He was getting old—and he had a bushel of deeds to good Michigan land.



"Have you brought the watch?" he gasped sternly.

"One Saturday afternoon, hurrying on to the boat, going over to visit Uncle Jackson, I took out my watch to see if I had time to run back upon some trifling errand I had forgotten. The ancient chain parted a link, the watch rolled from my hand, fell upon the gangplank, quivered there an instant, and then plunged with a malicious plunk and gurgle into the Chicago river.

"I came near to diving after it, as it went down, so great was my consternation, but finally was content to hire two river roustabouts to try to recover it, with the promise of a big reward. Then the boat cast off her lines, and I started for the lion's mouth, wondering what kind of a lie would go down with Uncle Jackson. He always wanted to see the old watch, about the first thing, when I went over to visit him on Sunday.

"After deep thought I concluded to say it was in a jeweler's hands for repairs, trusting that my amateur divers would recover it for me by the time I returned. Perhaps I faltered a little in detail when I told him this tale. He was very inquisitive about it, and it seemed to me unduly suspicious. Nevertheless, he affected to believe me, and at last I breathed freely; then he confounded me again by announcing a desire to return with me on Monday morning to Chicago.

"As the boat landed my divers met me gleefully at the wharf, watch in hand, claiming their reward. They had recovered the old turnip at the first effort, I learned afterwards, but they prated much of their desperate search in the dirty river, and insisted upon receiving the promised $50. I was caught red-handed, so to speak. Uncle Jackson took in the situation at a single look. He was very grave.

"'I could have excused your heedlessness, Tom,' he said, 'but I hate to have you lie to me. Don't do it again, my son. Remember the old watch. It never told a lie in all its life.'

"He went home that very afternoon, wearing a severe countenance. I was full of gloom. All my worldly prospects hung upon Uncle Jackson's good will. That night, out of the pure perversity which makes a man do the wrong thing when he should be pursuing only the right one, I began a wild spree, the first and last one of my life. It lasted a whole week. When it was over my watch had disappeared and I had no knowledge of its whereabouts.

"At my lodgings, when I returned, I found a telegram, two days old, from Uncle Jackson, summoning me to Michigan. It was brief, but sufficiently pointed:

"'Am taken with pneumonia. Come at once. Bring the watch.'

"Now wouldn't that have given you a chill? There was another communication as well. It was from Ethel. Ethel was the girl I was going to marry. She said she had become acquainted with my reckless conduct, that she perceived my indifference, and that our engagement, sir, was at an end forever. You can imagine I was sufficiently dispirited, as I hurried with my aching head and wretched, debile body to take a Michigan Central train for the other side of the lake.

"I found Uncle Jackson with the fingers of death at his throat, but his mind was clear enough. 'Have you brought the watch?' he gasped, sternly, as I bent to embrace him.

"I was about to murmur some maudlin excuses, but he checked me sharply. His lawyer was present. They were awaiting me, it seemed. My uncle called for his will. Under it was a clause leaving me $50,000 of his modest fortune. He grimly directed the cutting down of this neat sum by the excision of a cipher. The will then gave me $5,000 instead of $50,000. The $45,000 bite thus taken from my plum was given to Ethel, on condition that she marry my cousin Charlie, whom I hated with true cousinly rancor. Uncle Jackson calmly signed the altered will; then he turned his face to the wall and quietly departed for a better world."

The story-teller ceased, and once more raised his half-filled glass with a gesture of invitation.

"What in the world do you suppose became of the old watch, anyway?" demanded Cusack, who possessed an inquisitive mind.

"Huh!" answered Thompson. "When I got home again a saloon-keeper sent me word he had my watch in his safe, waiting for me. He had taken it away from me one night in fear I would lose it while on that costly spree. He knew its story and wanted to protect me."

"And then?"

"Then? As soon as I got my hands on it again I walked deliberately to the Wells street bridge, and a second time consigned it to the Chicago river. It's there yet, I hope.

WHAT HE MIGHT EAT.

Suggestions Made in Good Faith Did Not Improve Matters.

Heard a good story on an eastern minister. He is a vegetarian of the strictest order, and in the course of his pastoral career he was invited out to a Sunday dinner by one of the sisters of his flock, whose name for the nonce shall be Brown. Old man Brown didn't go to church that morning. His wife told him to expect her to bring home company to dine, and he, with the aid of the cook, laid the foundation for a superb repast. Mrs. Brown came home, but all the company she brought was the minister. They were seated at the table when this sort of conversation ensued:

"Mr. Jones," meaning the minister, "what part of the chicken do you like best?"

"Really, Mr. Brown, I don't care about any chicken."

"Well, here is some extra fine roast beef—try some of this."

"Excuse me, Mr. Brown, I will forego the beef."

"I have some tender lamb down here, how will that suit?"

"I never eat lamb."

"Well, now, I know you can't refuse this boiled ham."

"Pardon me, but ham I never touch."

During all this time Brown's father, an old gray-haired sinner, had been seated near him, watching operations and, standing it as long as he could, squeaked out in a piping voice:

"John, maybe the damn fool will suck a raw egg."

The enjoyment of that dinner was spoiled.

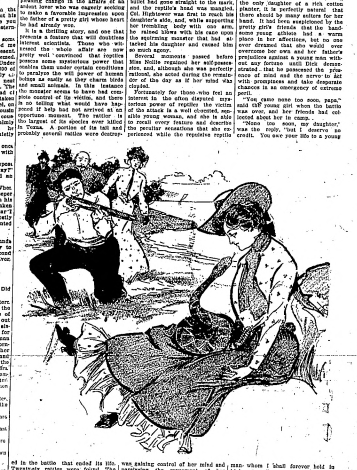
Kansas Identified.

"I crossed the United States in July," said the returned partisan. "Did you go through Kansas?" asked the bystander. "I didn't hear the place mentioned," said the tourist. "Well," said the bystander, "you passed through a place where there were leagues upon leagues of corn, didn't you?" "Yes, was that Kansas?" "It might have been, and it might have been Indiana. Did you go through a state with miles and miles of prairie?" "Yes, I remember it well; so that was Kansas?" "It might have been and it might have been Iowa. What other state of corn and prairie did you see?" "Well," said the tourist, "one state we passed through had lots of prairie and lots of corn, and on that July day it was very hot, and in the evening ever so far we could see a house, out of the rear chimney of which oozed a little column of smoke, which went up straight as an arrow for ten miles and a half." "That," said the bystander, with a satisfied air, "was Kansas."—Wichita Eagle.

An Expressive Tribute.

John Saul, a veteran of the civil war, lives near Bridgewater, Me., and has been married three times. Each of his wives is dead. The latest Mrs. Saul having crossed the dark river six years ago. Ever since then the widower has been considering what sort of an inscription he would place on the headstone at her grave. He finally decided on this, which has been engraved on the stone by a local marble worker: "To the memory of Mary Ann Saul. Born Dec. 22, 1848, died Aug. 5, 1896. Erected by her loving husband. She was the best wife I ever had."

Young Texas Girl Saved From Rattlesnake's Fangs



Was the strange disguise of a rattlesnake assumed by Cupid? Maybe it wasn't Cupid himself, and let's hope it wasn't for the rattlesnake was killed. So it's more likely Cupid, in search of novel means of accomplishing his purposes, merely made the rattlesnake an end towards the union of two hearts.

It is certain that the killing of a monster rattlesnake a few days ago in Burlison county, Tex., wrought a pleasing change in the affairs of an ardent lover who was eagerly seeking to make a favorable impression upon the father of a pretty girl whose heart he had already won.

It is a thrilling story, and one that presents a feature that will doubtless interest scientists. Those who witnessed the whole affair are now pretty well convinced that reptiles possess some mysterious power that enables them under certain conditions to paralyze the will power of human beings as easily as they charm birds and small animals. In this instance the monster seems to have had complete control of its victim, and there is no telling what would have happened if help had not arrived at an opportune moment. The rattler is the largest of its species ever killed in Texas. A portion of its tail and probably several rattles were destroyed in the battle that ended its life. Twenty-six rattles were found. The headless body was longer than a man who stands full six feet. It was shot by Richard Tarne, under circumstances well calculated to have unnerved the arm of a veteran woodsman.

When first discovered the monster reptile was coiled upon Miss Nellie Hightower's lap. The young girl sat as if she was paralyzed or charmed by the swaying head of the horrible rattler that was darting its forked tongue within a few inches of her face.

Col. Hightower was first to discover his daughter's peril. When the old gentleman saw the horrible reptile, apparently in the act of burying its fangs in the face of his only daughter, he sank to his knees in voiceless terror.

The young girl was half reclining on a ledge of rock at the water's edge, about ten steps from her father. Her arms were hanging limp by her side, and she appeared to be unconscious, though her wide open eyes were riveted upon the head of the snake. One of the girls called her name softly, but she did not turn her head. They were afraid to make any noise, for it looked as if the infuriated monster was just in the act of driving its poisonous fangs into its victim's flesh.

Men and women sank upon the ground in hopeless fright. The agonized father of the poor girl was about to rush forward, with no weapon but his cane, when Dick Tarne caught his arm.

"If you disturb the thing it will bite your daughter before you can strike it," he said.

"Then what is to be done?" whispered the trembling father. "Must I sit here and see my daughter bitten to death by that hideous monster?"

Dick thought that he could shoot the snake's head off. Would the old gentleman be willing for him to risk a bullet so close to his daughter's face? He was more than willing. "Be quick," he said, "and aim well. Save my child's life, Dick. For heaven's sake shoot quick, boy, if you love her!"

Fortunately, Dick Tarne is an accomplished athlete, and one of the champion rifle shots of the state. Before the father had ceased speaking the young man had thrown his rifle to his face and touched the trigger. The crack of the gun was followed by a scream which caused the anxious observers to fear that the overconfident lover had wounded his sweetheart.

Through the smoke they could see the girl throwing her arms about wildly as she sprang to her feet. The bullet had gone straight to the mark, and the reptile's head was mangled. Col. Hightower was first to reach his daughter's side, and, while supporting her trembling body with one arm, he rained blows with his cane upon the squirming monster that had attacked his daughter and caused him so much agony.

Several moments passed before Miss Nellie regained her self-possession, and, although she was perfectly rational, she acted during the remainder of the day as if her mind was clouded.

Fortunately for those who feel an interest in the often disputed mysterious power of reptiles the victim of the attack is a well educated, sensible young woman, and she is able to recall every feature and describe the peculiar sensations that she experienced while the repulsive reptile was gaining control of her mind and paralyzing the movement of her limbs.

"I have certainly been charmed or hypnotized by a snake," says Miss Hightower, "and although I was surely in a semi-conscious state of mind during at least a portion of the horrible ordeal, I could not move hand or foot, or command my voice. I could plainly see the hideous monster, and feel the rays from its glittering black eyes, burning into my brain, and I knew it was drawing nearer and nearer my face every movement, but I sat as one under the spell of some horrible nightmare. I could hear my heart beat and feel the hot blood running through my veins, and often I tried with all my power to scream, but my voice died in my throat."

According to this young girl's story, she must have endured one of the most horrible tortures that any mortal ever survived. She says that she had lingered behind a small party of boys and girls with whom she had strayed from camp, and that, finding a shady nook near a pretty pool, she sat down on a ledge of rock for the purpose of trying to catch a trout. She remembers that she noticed two little eyes peeping from under a great bowlder only a short distance away. Supposing that they belonged to some harmless little animal, she gave the matter only a passing thought. She afterwards recalled that she was strangely fascinated by the steady gaze of the glittering little orbs. Though the angling was interesting, she found herself constantly turning her head to look at the little eyes. A restful, soothing feeling seemed to possess her when she looked into those two little living beads. Again and again she turned her head away and drew her hands across her eyes to break the hypnotic spell.

The fatal moment came when she looked once too often and lingered a moment too long. She was powerless to break the charm of those glittering black eyes. Slowly the monster reptile began to crawl toward its victim, gliding over the rocks as noiselessly as if it were moving across velvet.

"I was both asleep and awake," says Miss Nellie. "I was inclined to repose and yet shuddering with horror. All I could do was to sit and die by inches and pray for my friends to come to my rescue. I heard them coming, but I could neither move nor shout. A mountain of horror was upon me, and the tongue and breath of Satan were in my face. The crack of that rifle was the sweetest music that ever fell upon my ears."

Miss Nellie is one of the reigning belles of the lower Brazos, and, being the only daughter of a rich cotton planter, it is perfectly natural that there should be many suitors for her hand. It had been suspicioned by the pretty girl's friends that the handsome young athlete had a warm place in her affections, but no one ever dreamed that she would ever overcome her own and her father's prejudices against a young man without any fortune until Dick demonstrated that he possessed the presence of mind and the nerve to act with promptness and take desperate chances in an emergency of extreme peril.

"You came none too soon, papa," said the young girl when the battle was over, and her friends had collected about her in camp.

"None too soon, my daughter," was the reply, "but I deserve no credit. You owe your life to a young man whom I shall forever hold in high esteem."

Influence of Early Training.

In a suit relating to brewery property an eminent and very dignified counsellor was one day reading to the court some manuscript affidavits which were not over-legible, and by mistake read the word "mash" as "wash." Counsel on the other side, who was small of stature and polite in manner, but keen in intellect and frequently sarcastic, was immediately on his feet, and with a somewhat irritating deference of manner, begging his opponent's pardon, etc., asked liberty to suggest that the word which the eminent counsellor read "wash" was really "mash." Somewhat nettled, the counsellor thus corrected thanked him for the information, and added that he was not himself very familiar with terms used in the brewery business, as he had never spent much of his time in a place of that kind. "Are we to understand, then," said his opponent in his suavest manner, "that the eminent counsellor wishes us to infer that his early days were spent in a laundry?"

How Water Freezes.

It used to puzzle all thinking people why ponds and rivers do not freeze beyond a certain depth. This depends on a most curious fact, namely, that water is at its heaviest when it reaches 40 degrees Fahrenheit, that is, eight degrees above freezing point. On a frosty night, as each top layer of water falls to 40 degrees it sinks to the bottom; therefore, the whole pond has to drop to 40 degrees before any of it can freeze.

At last, it is all cooled to this point and then ice begins to form. But ice is a very bad conductor of heat. Therefore, it shuts off the freezing air from the big body of comparatively warm water underneath. The thicker it gets the more perfectly does it act as a great coat, and that is why even the Arctic ocean never freezes beyond a few feet in thickness.—Marine Journal.

BURNED AT STAKE

NEGRO SUFFERS AWFUL PUNISHMENT FOR A HEINOUS CRIME.

WHITE WOMAN WAS HIS VICTIM

ASSAULTED AND MURDERED—ALMOST DECAPITATED WITH RAZOR.

SAYS HE DESERVED THE FATE

QUARREL WITH HIS WIFE LEADS SUSPICION TO THE NEGRO.

Corinth, Miss., Sept. 30.—Writhing in the flames of burning fagots piled high by hundreds of citizens, Tom Clark, alias Will Gibson, a young negro, was burned at the stake here early yesterday, after having confessed to one of the most atrocious crimes in the history of Northern Mississippi, the assault on and murder of Mrs. Carrie Whitfield, on Aug. 19 last. Before the torch was applied Clark stated that he deserved his fate. Last August Mrs. Whitfield, the wife of a well-known citizen, was found dead in her home. Investigation showed that the woman had been assaulted, and her head was practically severed from her body, a razor having been used in the bloody work. Both Whitfield and his wife were related to several of the most prominent families of the South, and the indignation of the populace knew no bounds. Corinth and the surrounding country was scoured in an effort to apprehend the murderer, but diligent search failed to Disclose His Identity.

A committee of twelve citizens was named to continue the search for the murderer, and these men have been very active in their work. On Monday last it became known that Tom Clark, a negro living near here, had had trouble with his wife, and the latter threatened to disclose the secret of a crime. Officers apprehended the woman, and she told the officers of her belief that Clark had murdered Mrs. Whitfield. Clark was arrested and brought before the committee of twelve in Corinth. The negro finally confessed to the murder and to a number of other crimes that he had committed. He said that several years ago he killed two men on an excursion train in Mississippi. He told of an outrage perpetrated by himself upon a negro woman, and also of the theft of $1,500 from a physician at French Camp, Miss. After hearing the confession the committee decided that the negro should be hanged from a telegraph pole in the street. Clark

Said He Deserved Death,

but asked that the execution be delayed so that he could have a farewell interview with his mother and brother, who live in Memphis. The request was granted and the two relatives were telegraphed for, but it was learned that they were in Mississippi. Meanwhile the news of the negro's arrest and confession spread rapidly over the surrounding country, and yesterday's incoming trains brought hundreds of people into the city to witness the execution. The crowds became so great that at midday the main street of the town was ordered cleared and the announcement was made that it had been decided to burn Clark at 3:30 o'clock in the afternoon.

At 3 o'clock the prisoner, heavily manacled, was taken from the jail by a police officer, and, followed by a large and excited crowd of men and boys, was led to the east gate of the negro cemetery, which is situated in the western part of the city. Fagots and wood had been piled high and the negro was securely fastened to the iron rod. Clark was asked if he cared to make a statement. He again said that he deserved the fate proposed for him, and asked that a letter be delivered to his mother and brother. He appealed to his brother to care for his children properly, and admonished them to beware of evil company. Finally all was in readiness and the word was given to fire the funeral pile. The husband and brother of Clark's victim stepped forward and applied the torch, and in a moment the flames leaped upward, enveloping the trembling negro in smoke and fire. The clothing of the doomed man was soon ignited, and as the flames grew hotter the skin began to parch. The negro moaned piteously at this juncture, and the agonizing look upon his face told of the awful torture he was undergoing. Finally his head fell forward upon his breast, and in a few seconds all was over. The flames were fed by the crowd until the body was burned to a crisp. The nthe gathering in an orderly manner dispersed, and the town soon assumed its normal appearance.

Around the Stake

POTATO CHOKES AND KILLS HIM.

While Eating in a Restaurant a Tuber Sticks in His Throat.

Helena, Mont., Sept. 30.—George Gilmore, a laborer who came down from Yellowstone Park, where he had been employed during the summer, choked to death while eating supper at the Union restaurant at Livingston. A piece of potato stuck in his throat and he was dead before assistance could be summoned.

CHICAGO MAY BURN PEAT.

Swamps Near South Chicago May Furnish City With Fuel.

Chicago, Sept. 30.—Peat cut from the swamps near South Chicago and dried until fit for fuel may be put on the market as a rival of high-priced coal, if experiments now being made are successful.

Residents of that district have noticed the beds of burning peat, which were ignited in the summer, often burned long after winter began, and have been known to continue through the year.

YAQUIS ON WARPATH.

Vigorous Opposition to Having Their Lands Confiscated.

Fort Worth, Tex., Sept. 30.—A report reaches here from Mexico that the Yaqui Indians still refuse to have their lands confiscated by the Mexican government, and in consequence are on the warpath.

Farms are being laid waste by the Mexican troops, and women and children scattered over the republic. The Yaquis refused to accept the decree of the government, which means that the lands of the Indians will be thrown open to settlement. The lands are the best in the republic for agricultural purposes.

The report which reaches Fort Worth indicates that there are still about 1,000 well armed Yaqui Indians on the warpath, who fight at every opportunity with the desperation of the Boers. These warriors are divided into small bands, who harass the Mexican troops at every opportunity and make frequent raids into the valleys to burn, pillage and kill.

APACHES ARE UGLY.

They Persist in Leaving Reservation and Going to a Festival.

Santa Fe, N. M., Sept. 30.—One hundred Apache Indians from the Jicarilla reservation in Northern Rio Arriba county are camped in the Picuris mountains ready to go to the San Geronimo festival at Taos Pueblo next Tuesday and Wednesday, despite the positive orders of the agent. Another band of Apaches is trespassing on the land of the Santa Clara and other Pueblos, and bad blood exists on that account. United States Attorney Abbot has orders from Washington to send a posse to take the Apaches back to the reservation.

SHOTS ARE EXCHANGED.

Violent Demonstrations Against Hudson Valley Railway.

Saratoga, N. Y., Sept. 30.—Violent demonstrations against the Hudson Valley Railway company have caused shots to be exchanged, and there were two men locked up in the county jail yesterday charged with being implicated in the attack upon the company's property. The trouble developed Saturday night, when attempts were made to burn the bridges between this place and Ballston Spa. Obstacles were also placed on the tracks.

TWENTY-SIX DIE IN WRECK.

French Express Train Leaves the Rails and Many Are Injured.

Paris, Sept. 30.—Twenty-six people have been killed and a score of people have been injured as the result of an accident to an express train running from Lille to Paris. The train left the rails while crossing the switch at Arleux, where it did not stop, and while going at great speed.

Killed by Rowdies.

Centralia, Mo., Sept. 30.—Ed Chapman, nineteen years old, ticket agent at Brown's Station, five miles from here, was shot and killed yesterday by rowdies. He had told some men who were intoxicated to leave the premises. Later as he sat at his telegraph key a shot crashed through the window, striking him in the forehead, and he fell back dead.

Ask President to Interfere.

New York, Sept. 30.—Petitions are being circulated throughout the country by members of the various organizations comprising the American Federation of Catholic Societies asking President Roosevelt to use his good offices to end the coal strike. The members of the societies making up the federation number at least half a million persons.

Bulgarians Lose Heavily.

Constantinople, Sept. 30. — Official telegrams received here say that 300 Bulgarian revolutionists, who were surrounded by Turkish troops at Vodena, in the vilayet of Salonica, and who succeeded in forcing the cordon after a sanguinary fight, lost 52 men killed and 112 men wounded. The Turks also suffered severe losses. The pursuit of the Bulgarians continues.

Mysteriously Murdered.

Mobile, Ala., Sept. 30.—William Godeau, a cotton handler, was shot and killed by some unknown persons. Godeau went into his back yard to investigate some disturbance there, taking a shotgun with him. Shortly afterward two reports of a gun were heard, and neighbors who rushed to the scene found Godeau dead with two bullet holes in his head.

Attempted Murder and Suicide.

Memphis, Tenn., Sept. 30.—Joseph Emerson of Vicksburg yesterday shot and seriously wounded Miss Rosa Borowski, and, turning the weapon upon himself, inflicted a probably fatal wound. It is presumed that the young woman did not look with favor upon Emerson.

Defaulter's Body Found.

Vienna, Sept. 30.—The body of Edmund Jellinek, the defaulting official of the cashier's department of the Vienna Laender bank, has been found in the Danube at Altenwoerth, near Kremz. He disappeared from Vienna Sept. 18. His embezzlements amounted to $1,150,000.

Losses by Prairie Fire.

Aberdeen, S. D., Sept. 30.—Prairie fires burned over a large tract of country between Putney and Houghton. Large quantities of hay were destroyed, and at least one barn. The town of Houghton was in danger and had a narrow escape from a big scorching.

Korean Emperor Well.

Berlin, Sept. 30.—An official telegram to the Korean legation here says the emperor of Korea is alive and in the best of health.

The Seoul (Korea) correspondent of the Paris Figaro said in a dispatch published Sept. 26 that the emperor of Korea was reported dead.

Logrollers Are Matched.

Grantsburg, Wis., Sept. 30.—Thomas E. Fleming of Minneapolis and John Pike of this county have been matched for a logrolling contest here Oct. 11, to decide championship of the state.

USE KNIFE AGAIN

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT SUBMITS TO ANOTHER OPERATION ON HIS LEG.

FIND THE BONE IS AFFECTED

PHYSICIANS SAY THE OPERATION WILL HASTEN HIS RECOVERY.

NOT LEAST CAUSE FOR ALARM

GIVE EVERY ASSURANCE THAT THE PRESIDENT WILL SOON RECOVER.

Washington, Sept. 30.—Another operation was performed yesterday on the abscess on the left leg of President Roosevelt. In the former operation a simple needle was used to relieve the trouble, but yesterday the surgeons with a knife made an incision into the small cavity, exposing the bone, which was found to be slightly affected. The president's case has been progressing satisfactorily, but it is believed by the physicians that the further operation will hasten his complete recovery. While none of the doctors is willing to be quoted, they give the most positive assurances that there is not the least cause for alarm, an day that on the contrary there is every indication of a speedy recovery; that the

is very slight and will not result in any impairment of the president's limb, and that there is no evidence whatever o fany matter that would produce blood poisoning. They confidently expect that the president will be on his feet within a resonable time, and with his robust constitution to assist recovery soon will be himself again.

Dr. Newton M. Shaffer of New York, who long has been acquainted with the Roosevelt family and has attended the president's children at various times, and who also is a well known bone specialist, joined the president's physicians in their mornin gconsultation at 10 o'clock. It was noticed that there has been a slight rise in the president's temperature and an increase in local symptoms, and the conclusion was reached that would be hastened by making an incision of the wound for the purpose of relieving the slight tension or swelling which was present, and also to drain the wound. The operation was performed between 2 and 3 o'clock in the afternoon. An application of cocaine was used t oallay the pain. The president stood the operation very well, and subsequently expressed his satisfaction at the successful result. Dr. Rixey, the surgeon general of the navy, performed the operation, assisted by Dr. Lung, the president's regular physician. Dr. O'Reilly, who was also present with the other physicians, is the surgeon general of the army, and heretofore has been consulted regarding the case. Dr. Edward R. Stitt, another of those present, is in charge of the naval museum of hygiene and medical school.

The Patient's Recovery

Take a Roseate View.

The physicians last night took a roseate view of the president's prospects for getting out again. He has become somewhat restive because of his close confinement and the physicians are considering the advisability of permitting him to take a ride in a few days. The physicians say the question is now simply one of the healing of the wound, and reiterate that this will be hastened by the operation made yesterday.

Late in the evening Dr. Shafer authorized in the most positive manner the statement that there need not be the least cause for alarm regarding the president's condition, but, on the contrary, he said, he could give every assurance of the belief that the president would soon recover.

INDICTED FOR BRIBERY.

Cleveland Doctor Is Accused by the Grand Jury.

Cleveland, Sept. 30.—The grand jury returned an indictment against Dr. F. W. Daykin "for offering a bribe to a city official."

Dr. Daykin was arrested some time ago on the charge of having paid $2,000 to Councilman Charles Kohl to vote against the granting of a franchise to a natural gas company. Kohl made the matter public and turned the money over to Mayor Johnson.

THEIR BOAT CAPSIZED.

Two Wisconsin Boys Are Drowned While Chasing Ducks.

Oshkosh, Wis., Sept. 30.—Anton Heigl, aged twelve years, and Jesse Cobbs, eleven years, were drowned in the lagoon at North Park. They had gone out in a skiff and were chasing ducks, when they capsized.

Buffalo Bill's Horse Burned.

Duluth, Minn., Sept. 30.—Among the eight horses destroyed in a barn which burned at Proctorknott yesterday was "Smoky," formerly Buffalo Bill's favorite horse. He was a superb animal in his day, and when he got old Col. Cody gave him to his sister, Helen Cody Wetmore of this city. Frederic Remington's masterpiece is said to be a picture of Buffalo Bill mounted on Smoky.

Killed While at Play.

Hastings, Minn., Sept. 30.—The remains of Joseph, the thirteen-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Lautner of this city, who was accidentally shot by a companion while playing at La Crosse Saturday, arrived here last night. Tommy Lautner and his mother went from here last week to attend the La Crosse fair.

Farmer Loses His Home.

Stillwater, Sept. 30.—Fire early yesterday morning destroyed the residence on Nels Hanson's farm near this city. Loss $500; insurance $250.

SAYS CHIEF AMES GOT MONEY.

Minneapolis Woman Testifies That She Paid Tribute by Direction of the Police Official.

Minneapolis, Minn., Sept. 30.—In the trial of Former Superintendent of Police Fred W. Ames for extortion Saturday May McIntosh gave the first evidence directly connecting the defendant with the collection of money from women. She related how he had called on her and notified her to pay no more money to Irwin Gardner, who had been the go-between. He had told her to call at his office and get further instructions.

Soon after Joe Cohen, the new intermediary, called with a detective and notified her to leave the monthly payments in numbered envelopes at his jewelry store.

She then went to Col. Ames and asked if it was all right to pay money to Cohen. She testified that the chief had replied that it was all right, and that she was to pay the same amounts to Cohen that she had previously paid to Gardner. She followed these instructions and was not molested by the police.

She has been ordered by the present administration to pay a monthly fine of $100 in the municipal court.

GIRL IS PARBOILED.

Little Daughter of an Anoka Man Suffers Tragic Death.

Anoka, Minn., Sept. 30.—Alice Bibeau, the seven-year-old daughter of David Bibeau, fell in a steam well just south of Reed & Sherwood's office and was literally parboiled.

Death came before she could be rescued. With her companions she was playing over the well, and in some way the board covering became loosened, letting the little one drop into the eight-foot reservoir, containing a foot and a half of hot water from condensed steam.

Her nine-year-old sister made a wonderfully heroic effort to save her sister, standing in the opening and reaching down through the hot steam. Again and again she tried, and it is believed inhaled some of the hot vapor. She lies in a critical condition at her father's home.

SICILY AGAIN STRICKEN.

Total Number of Deaths Now Placed at 200.

Syracuse, Sicily, Sept. 30.—A fresh storm burst over the district of Santa Maria yesterday and many houses were destroyed. The stormy weather continues generally throughout Sicily. It is now believed that 200 persons perished at Modica during the tornado. In one instance a family of ten persons were drowned in bed. The village of Sortino has been practically destroyed and forty-three persons were drowned. The water rose in the church to a height of twelve feet. Many children lost their lives.

There have been some disgraceful scenes of pillage from the ruins and from bodies, which show the necessity of more troops to keep order.

The total damage as the result of the cyclone is expected to amount to over $2,500,000.

CRIMINAL CAREER CHECKED.

Clever American Thief Caught Trying to Rob London Mail Boxes.

London, Sept. 30.—Henry Conrad, who was caught in a daring attempt to get a wax impression of a key to a mail box in the center of the financial district in London, has been identified by Inspector Forest of Scotland Yard as Charles Fisher, a well-known American forger and thief. Forest arrested him in London five years ago for a forgery committed in Cincinnati, for which he was convicted in Ohio and only released a few months ago. His wife, who is a very clever woman known as "Sheeney Rachael," is also in London. The attempt to get an impression of the mail box key was very cleverly conceived, and but for the exceptional alertness of a postman it would have succeeded.

RECEIVERS ARE ASKED.

Plan to End the Coal Shortage Is Proposed.

Boston, Sept. 30.—A committee of citizens, headed by the publishers of a Boston newspaper, has sought relief in the courts from the present coal shortage by asking for a receiver for the coal companies and coal-carrying roads.

The petitioners asked that a receiver be appointed for the benefit of all concerned, on the same terms and manner and with such agents and servants and with such rates of wages and other conditions of employment and at such prices for goods produced and sold as the court shall from time to time adjudge proper.

KILLED AT HIS POST.

Stray Shot Hits Fireman on a Fast Freight.

Iron Mountain, Mich., Sept. 30.—Joe Koucha, the fireman on train 65 of the Milwaukee road, was shot and instantly killed while the train was running about thirty-five miles an hour yesterday.

The accident occurred as the train was passing Bocher lake just south of Pembine.

The fireman was sitting in his accustomed place in the cab, and it is supposed that the shot was a stray one from some hunter.

Heinze's New Party.

Butte, Mont., Sept. 30.—F. Augustus Heinze last night organized the new political party, to be known as the Anti-Trust Democracy. The primaries are called for Monday, Sept. 29, and the convention for the following day.

Big Fire at Stockton, Cal.

Stockton, Cal., Sept. 30.—One of the biggest fires i nthe history of Stockton started last night in the agricultural pavilion. That structure, together with all its contents and most of two residence blocks were burned to the ground. The approximate loss is $500,000, less than half insured.

Marines Still on Guard.

Colon, Sept. 30.—The situation on the isthmus remains unchanged. Free transit between Colon and Panama obtains, and American marines and bluejackets are still traveling on all trains.

MORE TROOPS OUT

GOV. STONE SENDS SHERIDAN TROOP OF CAVALRY TO STRIKE REGION.

SHERIFF SAYS IT IS FORGERY

DID NOT SIGN THE CALL SENT TO GOV. STONE FOR ADDITIONAL TROOPS.

THE SOLDIERS USE THEIR GUNS

FIRE AT SUPPOSED STRIKERS WHO THREW STONES AT THEM.

Harrisburg, Pa., Sept. 30.—Gov. Stone yesterday ordered the Sheridan troop of Tyrone to report to Gen. Gobin for duty in the anthracite strike territory. The troop left Tyrone last night by special train under orders to reinforce the Thirteenth regiment at Olyphant. Camp equipage was shipped from the state arsenal in this city in a special car which was attached to the troopers' train at Tyrone. The Governor's troop of Harrisburg and the Second Philadelphia City troop will remain on duty at Shenandoah. This cavalry was asked for yesterday by Col. Watres, who is in command of the troops stationed at Lackawanna.

The colonel says the ordering out of the troops is not the result of any fresh outbreaks. He says the collieries at which trouble has been taking place are far apart and that the cavalrymen get over the ground more readily than infantry.

Calls It a Forgery.

Sheriff Knorr of Columbia county says he did not sign or authorize his name to be signed to the telegram which was sent to Gov. Stone asking that troops be sent to Centralia.

The following telegram was sent to the governor last night:

"Shenandoah, Pa., Sept. 28.—William A. Stone: Sheriff Knorr says the call for troops for Columbia county is a forgery. Gen. Gobin says he will send troops to Centralia to make arrests. Action certain to cause complications and injustice. We guarantee peaceful surrender of all accused persons to civil authorities. Telegrams to sheriff and the general will show truth of these statements.

Soldiers Open Fire.

Scranton, Pa., Sept. 30.—Late last night shots were fired at strikers or supposed strikers for the first time since the troops went afield. At Grassy Island colliery, half a mile from the Thirteenth's camp, two soldiers from Company A were stationed in a patch of underbrush as a part of the outpost of the camp. A volley of stones descended all about them, and one of them hit one of the soldiers and felled him to the ground. The two soldiers shot at fleeting figures and a relief detail, attracted by the shooting, scoured the country for two hours in a fruitless search for the stone throwers.

At 12:30 o'clock yesterday morning a shot was heard on a hillside near the camp and the searchlight was turned in the direction whence the shots came. The man with a gun was descried running to the cover of the woods. The rays of the searchlight were kept upon him and after a short chase a couple of soldiers from the outpost on the hill ran him down. He proved to be Michael Gaughan, the high constable of Olyphant borough. The only explanation he vouchsafed to Col. Watres was: "I wanted to try out your soldiers and see if they were to be depended upon."

Ready to Begin Work.

Shamokin, Pa., Sept. 30.—It is widely rumored here that a determined attempt will be made in this vicinity this week to resume operations at some of the local collieries. During the past few weeks many men have applied for work, it is alleged, and their names have been taken, with the understanding that they will return to their work when an effort is made to resume. At some of the collieries quite a large number of men are now employed.

Answered by Mitchell.

Philadelphia, Sept. 30.—President Mitchell yesterday issued a long address replying to recent utterances made by President Baer, Mr. Hewitt and others. Mr. Mitchell goes into the miners' side of the controversy at some length and gives a clear explanation of the claims made by the United Mine Workers.

Takes Guests to London.

London, Sept. 30.—James Henry Smith of Chicago has brought to London most of the house party he has been entertaining at Kingussie, Perthshire, including Suffern Tailer. He secured several suites of rooms for his guests at Claridges. They had splendid shooting in Scotland, and all of the party enjoyed themselves thoroughly.

Burned-out Firm Buys Store.

Marshall, Minn., Sept. 30.—Baldwin & Loveridge, whose big department store was destroyed by fire early Thursday morning, have bought Langland's department stock at a lump figure, at once assuming possession.

Mrs. Mackay Still Ailing.

London, Sept. 30.—Mrs. Mackay is still undergoing treatment for a heart weakness at Mannheim, but she leaves there next week to visit her daughter at Zurich. Later on she goes to Paris, whence she sails for the United States with her husband's remains early in November.

Fought Over Clay Pipe.

Paris, Sept. 30.—A fatal duel occurred near Paris this week between two law students of Polish birth. The quarrel arose over a clay pipe which one of them had broken.

NEWS IN BRIEF.

Overflow From the Wires in a Condensed Form.

The trustees of the People's Church of Chicago have extended a call to Rev. John Merritt Driver of Red Wing, Minn., and the call has been accepted. The People's church pulpit was until recently occupied by Rev. Dr. H. W. Thomas.

Right Rev. Joseph Glennon, bishop of Kansas City, Mo., has been appointed national chaplain of the Ancient Order of Hibernians in America by National President James E. Dolan.

A west-bound passenger train on the Wabash railway collided near La Porte, Ind., with an east-bound freight train. The crews of both locomotives jumped and escaped with minor injuries. The combination baggage and smoking car was telescoped, but none of the passengers was injured.

Upward of thirty pieces of furniture, some curtains and portiers and several heavy plate mirrors, all belonging to the White House, were destroyed by fire of unknown origin in the upholstering establishment of A. E. Kennedy in Connecticut avenue, Washington. The loss is estimated by the fire department at $5,000.

A life-sized statue of the Hungarian patriot, Louis Kossuth, was unveiled in Cleveland, in the presence of 50,000 persons. The statue stands on a pedestal and is about twenty feet high. The figur eof Kossuth is the work of a Hungarian sculptor, Andrew Tothe of Debreczain, Hungary.

The British ship Claverdon, which arrived at San Francisco from Hamburg, reports having passed through a hurricane with a loss of five of her crew. The storm was encountered Aug. 27. Everything movable was washed overboard. All the sails with the exception of the lower mainsail were carried away.

SUBMARINE VOYAGES FOR ALL.

Swiss Entertainers Will Provide Them on Lake Geneva.

Paris, Sept. 30.—It is now known that the Goubet submarine boat, recently sold here at auction, was purchased by a Swiss amusement company, which intends to give submarine excursions in Lake Geneva. The prospectus says the tickets will be $25, and the distance traveled will be twenty-five miles under water and a mile and a half on the surface. In order to demonstrate the safety of the boat each passenger will be presented with a free life insurance policy for $2,500.

RIFLE FALLS AND KILLS HIM.

Baby Boy Dies Instantly From Accidental Discharge.

Osceola, Wis., Sept. 30.—Norman Anderson, three years old, son of M. F. Anderson, residing near Spur Three, was killed by a rifle which was left standing against a wall by an elder brother. It fell down and discharged, shooting the boy through the head, killing him instantly.

FLOOD IN IOWA.

Five and a Half Inches of Rain in a Few Hours.

New Hampton, Iowa, Sept. 30.—Five and one-half inches of rain fell here, causing the worst flood of the season. Probably $160,000 worth of damage has been done to the railroad and country bridges within the county.

WILL HAVE A BIG DRY DOCK.

Lake Vessels in Distress Can Put in to Manitowoc.

Manitowoc, Wis., Sept. 30.—Manitowoc is to have one of the largest dry docks on Lake Michigan, to which vessels suffering damage in the region around the straits of Mackinaw may be sent, instead of making the long journey to Chicago. The new dry dock will be 415 feet long, 64 feet wide, and with 15 1-2 feet of water over the sills. The present dock is 340 feet long, 44 feet wide, and with 13 1-2 feet of water over its sills.

CRISIS IS AT HAND

NEWS OF A GRAVE NATURE RECEIVED FROM ISTHMIAN COUNTRY.

WARSHIPS WILL GO AT ONCE

SQUADRON FROM NORTH ATLANTIC FLEET ORDERED TO MAKE READY.

AMPLE FOR ANY EMERGENCY

LIVES AND PROPERTY OF AMERICANS ARE TO BE PROTECTED.

New York, Sept. 27. — Following closely upon the announcement of Gov. Salazar that he will hold Commander McLean of the United States cruiser Cincinnati responsible for whatever may happen as the result of landing marines at Panama, the navy department yesterday ordered the immediate preparation of a squadron from the North Atlantic fleet to be dispatched to the Caribbean sea. The vessels will be under the immediate command of Rear Admiral Casey, who is now on his way to Panama aboard the Wisconsin.

Gov. Salazar, in a communication to Commander McLean, has endeavored to persuade him that the Colombian government has at Panama a force sufficient to protect the lives and property of foreigners and asks that a single instance be pointed out where either have been menaced. He stated that the landing of 250 American marines could only be construed as a disposition to usurp the sovereignty of the Colombian government. Notwithstanding this version of the situation by Gov. Salazar, Commander McLean has advised the navy department that the United States forces at Panama cannot safely be withdrawn or diminished.

Although this dispatch from Commander McLean was not made public it is known to contain information of sufficient gravity to being made to send additional forces to the relief of Commander McLean. Immediately after it had been received the Prairie was ordered to leave the Boston navy yard by noon to-day and proceed to League Island, where a party of enlisted men are in waiting. The Prairie will proceed to Norfolk and be prepared to start for Colon at a moment's notice.

Warrant Hasty Preparations

Following this orders were given that the repairs on the big cruiser Olympia, the flagship of Rear Admiral Coghlan, be expedited with all possible speed and that the vessel be ready to sail for the Caribbean early next week. Attached to Admiral Coghlan's squadron will be the protected cruiser Raleigh, the unprotected cruiser Detroit and the gunboat Machias. The cruiser San Francisco is now on her way to the West Indies and the Cincinnati, Marietta, Montgomery and Panther are already on the field.

This array of warships, it is expected, will be ample for any emergency that may arise in the Panama country and will insure ample protection to the lives and property of citizens of the United States who are now residents of Colombia. Commander McLean will hold his ground with the marines he has landed, and if it appears to be necessary, an additional force will be sent ashore.

DEEP MYSTERY SCENTED.

Bloody Clothes and Other Evidences of a Tragedy Discovered.

St. Louis, Sept. 27. — About two weeks ago a package was left at the office of the Trauernicht-Shanks Commission company, and yesterday afternoon Secretary Shanks, out of curiosity, opened it. He was amazed to find that it contained clothing that had been saturated with blood and a two-pound plated scale weight, also bloodstained. There was a shirt marked "B. G.," a collar, baby dress, a woman's shirt waist and a bartender's apron. It is not known just when the bundle was left and who left it. Mr. Shanks at once turned the bundle over to the police, who have begun an investigation.

THOROUGH HARMONY.

Secretary Shaw Denies Again Intention of Resigning.

Washington, Sept. 27. — Regarding the published report that he had resigned, Secretary Shaw said: "I denied this rumor in Chicago. It would seem unnecessary to repudiate a story that has no author and is built upon a false assumption and is enlarged upon simply to fill space. The president and secretary of the treasury are in thorough harmony. Of this there need be no doubt if the speeches made by the president and the secretary will be read and compared instead of the headlines.

Volcano Is Active.

Paris, Sept. 27.—A dispatch to the Figaro from Rome says the volcano on Stromboli island, off the north coast of Sicily, has been active for several days past. A large conical mass has appeared on the edge of one of the craters and a fissure at the base of this crater is pouring out lava and jets of flame to a height of 300 yards.

Foul Play Suspected.

Augusta, Wis., Sept. 27. — The remains of an unknown man were found by a sheep herder about eight miles from the city. The skull was crushed in on one side of the head. There are indications of murder. The district attorney will investigate.

Fatal Train Wreck.

Princeton, Ill., Sept. 27.—Four men were killed and several injured early yesterday morning by a rear-end collision of a Burlington passenger train with a stock train at Malden.

GALE ON LAKE MICHIGAN.

Few Steamers Able to Cope With the Storm.

Chicago, Sept. 26.—One of the heaviest gales of the season prevailed on Lake Michigan yesterday, but so far no fatalities have been reported. The wind rose at times to forty-five miles an hour and ranged all day between that and thirty-eight miles. Few steamers were able to defeat the strength of the storm. The big Lehigh Valley line steamer Saranac was one that tried it, and after eight hours unsuccessful battling with the waves it turned and ran for shelter inside. Passenger steamers ran, but with great trouble and all were late. The steady increase of the sea drove scouting tugs first back from Grosse Point to the lee of the Lakeview crib and then back to the pier at the life saving station and then finally to secure shelter far up the river. At the life saving stations at Evanston and Chicago double watches were stationed in the lookout towers and crews were held close to quarters in expectation of trouble.

PEARY WON'T TRY FOR POLE.

Arctic Explorer Says He Is Out of the Exploring Business.

Portland, Me., Sept. 26—Lieut. Peary yesterday said of his plans and of the possibility of finding the pole:

"On no account shall I make an effort to return to the north. I have done all that could be done with the facilities at my command and shall now resume my duties in the navy department in a few days. In coming back this time I have abandoned further possible endeavors to reach the pole. The pole can be reached. It is a question of money and the explorer's outfit. I have seen nothing to modify my original plan outlined just before my last start for the north, by which I proposed to establish supply stations at intervals and then make a dash, aided by Eskimos and dogs, and if it is ever reached it will be better done by following my plan."

ASKS CANADA TO ACT.

Acting Secretary of State Takes Up Lake Commission Matter.

Washington, Sept. 26.—In execution of the purpose of congress, as set out in the last river and harbor act, Acting Secretary Adee has invited the Canadian government, through the British embassy here, to name commissioners who will co-operate with similar commissioners to be appointed by the government of the United States, to constitute what is to be known as the lake commission, which is to investigate and report upon questions connected with the changes of level of the great lakes. As soon as the Canadian answer is returned, the state department will make public the names of the American commissioners, who will be, for the most part, army men and civil engineers of high reputation in their profession.

CEREMONY OF INVESTURE.

Rt. Rev. Thomas A. Flynn, Vicar General, Is Advanced.

Madison, S. D., Sept. 26.—Investiture of Rt. Rev. Thomas A. Flynn, vicar general of the diocese of Sioux Falls, took place at St. Thomas' church, Bishop O'Gorman presiding and performing the ceremony of investiture. Forty priests from South Dakota and adjoining states and a large attendance witnessed the ceremony. The new title, domestic prelate to the pope, adds no additional powers to his office, put places him next in dignity to a bishop and entitles him to wear the purple and be designated monsignore.

MONTANA DEMOCRATS.

Convention Is Controlled by Senator Clark and Friends.

Helena, Mont., Sept. 26.—The Democratic state convention at Bozeman yesterday afternoon nominated Judge Jere B. Leslie of Great Falls for assistant justice, andd John M. Evans of Missoula for congressman. No other nominations are to be made. United States Senator W. A. Clark and his friends had absolute control of the convention. Senator Clark presided as temporary chairman. Senator Charles W. Hoffman of Bozeman, a well known supporter of Senator Clark was made permanent chairman.

Woman Hangs Herself.

Burlington, Iowa, Sept. 26. — Mrs. George Claflin committed suicide by hanging while her husband, who has been watching her to prevent the deed, was out for a short time.

MILLIONS DROPPED

BIG SPECULATIVE POOLS ARE BADLY NIPPED IN WALL STREET.

MONEY STRINGENCY CAUSES IT

MANY INDIVIDUALS ALSO BADLY HANDLED IN THE SLUMP.

LIMIT IS NOT YET REACHED

GATES CROWD AND VANDERBILT FORCES THE HEAVIEST LOSERS.

New York, Sept. 27.—Speculators in Wall street have lost from $7,000,000 to $10,000,000 in the last three days and the limit of their losses does not appear to be reached.

The bulk of these heavy losses—caused by the enforced liquidation and the money stringency—has been sustained by the big speculative pools, but many individuals have been severely handled in the slump, and in many instances their entire holdings have been swept away.

Thus far the heaviest losers, according to the accredited Wall Street gossips, have been the Gates-Lambert-Harris-Drake contingent, generally known as the "Western crowd," and the Gould-Rockefeller-Vanderbilt syndicate, composed of the younger members of the three families. It is positively asserted that a group of prominent Wall street banks agreed to call a halt on the Gates-Harris crowd. They were said to be carrying a total of loans on high-priced stocks aggregating from $30,000,000 to $40,000,000, and they persisted in booming stocks when Money Was Tight.

Russell Sage, whose knowledge of Wall street in relation to the money question is as extensive as any living authority, explained the present financial stringency in Wall street, and its causes.

"The situation, so far as money is concerned," said Mr. Sage, "is not very serious, although it is acute. It is directly menacing only to those who have outstanding large accounts which are weakly protected. Within the next ten days or two weeks the situation will right itself, but meantime there must be more liquidation.

"The brakes must be put on. The speculative craze must be sharply checked. A halt must be called in indiscriminate speculation by people who have not plenty of resources.

"This is the first step in relief measures. It is being carried out in vigorous fashion. A little more of it and then we may wait for the next relief step which will come in exports of cotton and wheat.

"When these exports are started outward money will begin to come to us from two quarters—the interior, where it is now being used for crop moving purposes, and from Europe, whence it will be drawn to pay for our surplus crop."

PRESIDENT IS COMFORTABLE.

Passes the Day Without Appreciable Change in His Condition.

Washington, Sept. 27. — The president was resting very comfortably when his physicians called to see him last evening. He is complying strictly with their injunctions to give his injured leg complete rest, and the good results are apparent already. In view of the satisfactory improvement in the president's condition no prepared statement was made, Secretary Cortelyou simply saying at 10 o'clock, when he left the temporary White House for the evening, that Mr. Roosevelt was doing nicely. Dr. Lung, the president's regular physician, had left the house an hour earlier. Dr. Lung remained at the White House throughout the day. At 4 o'clock Surgeon General Rixey came over from the navy department, and, after he had seen Mr. Roosevelt, it was announced the president had passed a comfortable day, with no appreciable change in his condition. The slight rise in temperature during the previous night had disappeared. The president, the doctors say, will be confined to his bed a week or ten days, with two weeks as the outside limit.

TERRIBLE EARTHQUAKE.

One Hundred Persons Killed in Eastern Turkestan.

Berlin, Sept. 27. — A dispatch received here from Tashkent, capital of Russian Turkestan, reports a terrible earthquake Aug. 22, the shocks continuing until Sept. 3. One hundred persons were killed at Kashgar, in Eastern Turkestan, 400 in the village of Astyn, twenty at Jangi, while the town of Aksukeitche was completely destroyed.

Connecticut Democrats.

New Haven, Conn., Sept. 27. — The Democratic state convention adjourned at 5:15 o'clock last night after a session lasting all day. A full state ticket was nominated, a platform was adopted and the convention, which had promised to be one of the most bitter in the history of the party in this state closed in harmony. The candidate for governor is Melbert B. Cary of Ridgefield.

Boys' Play Ends Fatally.

Shenandoah, Pa., Sept. 27. — While playing burglar yesterday fifteen-year-old Grover Eskew was shot and instantly killed by his companion, Clyde Vickers. They were using a rifle supposed not to be loaded.

Killed in a Quarrel.

Lexington, Ky., Sept. 27. — Richard Martin last night killed Harry Wood in a fight resulting from a quarrel over a trivial matter in a saloon. Martin escaped. Wood was shot five times through the breast.

MR. CHIN QUIN IS MAD.

Butte's Sensational Abduction Results in Complaint Against Police.

Butte, Mont., Sept. 27. — The Intermountain says that Chin Quin, a local Chinese merchant whose wife and child were kidnapped Monday night, has filed papers against the local police for entering his house without a warrant, and charges that they and Mrs. A. A. Brown, a teacher in a Chinese rescue mission conducted by the Presbyterian church in San Francisco, forcibly entered his home and carried away his wife and child. The police here were told that the woman was mistreated, and upon representations of Mrs. Brown went with her and made the alleged abduction. Now the police are anxious to interview Mrs. Brown again, but no traces either of her or the missing woman and child can be found. Chin Quin declared that a San Francisco man who is in love with his wife instigated the abduction.

BIG FIRE AT MARSHALL.

Loss Will Exceed $125,000 — Firemen Hurt and One Man Seriously Cut.

Marshall, Minn., Sept. 27.—Fire at midnight totally destroyed Baldwin & Leveridge's department store. Loss of stock and building $75,000, with $40,000 insurance. The Masonic and Odd Fellow societies had rooms in the building, also Mayor V. B. Seward. These losses were fully covered by insurance. Blakeslee's meat market, Musch Bros.' blacksmith shop and several small buildings were also totally destroyed. The total loss will exceed $125,000. The Tracy fire department responded promptly and rendered good service. Ole Haug was seriously cut about the head by falling debris. A number of the members of the volunteer fire department were injured, but none seriously.

AGED COUPLE ASK DIVORCE.

Bitter Contest for Separation After Forty Years of Married Life.

Sioux City, Iowa, Sept. 27.—Joachim and Rebecca Reissing, aged sixty-eight and fifty-six years, respectively, who have been married since 1863, are to wage a bitter contest for a divorce in the district court here. Mr. Reissing is a wealthy farmer who until recently lived in Dixon county, Neb. His wife charges him with cruel and inhuman treatment and threatening her life, while he brings counter charges. Both parties demand a decree.

CATTLE SALES BREAK RECORD

MORE THAN 10,000 CHANGE HANDS AT SOUTH ST. PAUL.

Volume of Business During the Present Week the Greatest in History of the Stock Yards—Most of the Cattle Are Bought for Fattening—Good Month for Hog Buyers.

St. Paul, Special, Sept. 27.

Nearly 10,000 cattle changed hands at the St. Paul union stock yards during the first five days of this week. The business is the largest that has ever been done in a week in the history of the stock yards, and is much larger than has been done during some ordinary months. The first three days' sales were phenomenal and, according to the books of the company, more than 6,000 cattle were sold through the yards. Besides these several thousand more have been housed at the yards for one or more nights or days during the week, and were being shipped through to Chicago.

"The business during the past week," said Secretary A. A. McKechnie of the stock yards company, "has been tremendous, and is much greater than the record for many ordinary months. Immense numbers of cattle have come in from Montana and other Western states throughout the month, but the arrivals this week have been of a record breaking kind.

Cattle for Fattening.

"Our chief business is not, as some people think, the sale of beef for killing. We sell a far larger number of young cattle for feeding and most of those sold this week will be taken to the pasture lands and fattened for the market. The feeding business is growing and the demand for stock has been tremendous during the past month.

"Although it may be due to the energy of our agents in the West that we have gained this immense increase in business still I believe that most of it is due to the many improvements which we have made at the yards. The cattle would be up to their knees in mud in rainy weather a few years ago. Now it is all different. We have put in brick and stone floors and roads throughout the yards, and the cattle are always dry.

"This has cost thousands of dollars, but I believe that it has been the cause of our immense increase in business. Owners of cattle like to have their stock well cared for, and they will always take their cattle to yards where they are looked after in a proper manner. There is scarcely a better equipped stock yards in the country than ours.

"Hogs are a little scarce this month. The September supply of hogs always is short, but the month has been an extra good one, although not a record breaker as in the case of cattle."

PHILIPPINE CENSUS.

The Insurrection Having Been Suppressed, It Will Now Be Taken.

Washington, Sept. 27. — President Roosevelt has signed the order providing for the taking of a census of the Philippines in accordance with the terms of the Philippine act passed at the last session of congress, and upon the certificate of the Philippine commission that the insurrection has been suppressed.

TAKES HENDERSON'S PLACE.

Judge Birdsall of Clarion Nominated for Congress.

Hampton, Iowa, Sept. 27.—Judge B. P. Birdsall of Clarion, Iowa, was yesterday nominated for congress by the Third district Republican convention. The nomination was made on the second ballot by a vote of 88 for Birdsall to 26 for C. E. Ransier of Buchanan. The Third district is at present represented by the speaker of the national house, David B. Henderson, who recently declined a renomination. The report of the committee on resolutions was adopted by the convention as follows:

"We, the representatives of the Republicans of the Third congressional district of Iowa, heartily indorse the platform of principles adopted by the late Republican state convention at Des Moines. We deny that the Dingley tariff breeds and shelters trusts. We interpret the tariff plank in the Des Moines platform of 1902 to be nearly a reiteration of and to mean no more than the St. Louis plank of 1896."

The resolutions also express regret at the declaration of Speaker Henderson of the nomination for congress.

PRISONER RECAPTURED.

Robber Who Escaped From Webster, Iowa, Jail, Is Caught.

Fort Dodge, Iowa, Sept. 27.—Ed Gorman, a Webster county prisoner, who broke jail several weeks ago by cutting his way through the wall of the city jail, where he was confined, with a case knife, was rearrested at Sheldon, Iowa, and now is again lodged in the county jail. Gorman was accompanied in his escape by a companion named Lawrence, who has not been heard from. Gorman is under indictment for hold-up, and for robbing a peanut stand. Two of his partners, Thomas Kinnea and Reed Hopkins, are now serving terms in the state penitentiary.

ALMOST 105 YEARS OLD.

Death Near White Bear of Joseph Marcotte, Born Dec. 12, 1797.

Stillwater, Minn., Sept. 27.—Joseph Marcotte, one of the oldest men in the Northwest, died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Charboreaux, near White Bear. He was born in Canada Dec. 12, 1797, and was therefore about 105 years old. He had sixteen children—ten sons and six daughters and many grand and great grandchildren. Up to within a few days of his death he showed much activity and vigor. Only last week he walked from his daughter's place to the White Bear postoffice, a distance of a mile and a half.

HEINZE TO FORM NEW PARTY.

Will Continue Efforts to Overthrow Senator Clark.

Butte, Mont., Sept. 27.—F. Augustus Heinze, whose delegation was turned down in the Democratic convention at Bozeman on Tuesday, has announced at an open air meeting that he intends to form a new political party in Montana. It will be his aim, it is said to fuse the Populists, the Labor party, the Socialists, the Heinze Republicans and what followers he has in the Democratic party in an effort to overthrow Senator Clark. A meeting to bring about this fusion was held in Butte last night.

REDS NEED A SCHOOL.

Additional Day School to Be Established at Nett Lake.

Washington, Sept. 27. — An order was issued by Indian Commissioner Jones yesterday directing the establishment of an additional day school on the Nett Lake reservation, which is embraced in the La Pointe agency. This is caused by the increased demand for school facilities by the Nett Lake Indians. For the present at least an old building formerly used for school purposes, will be utilized. The necessary teachers and employes will be appointed at once.

BULLETS SETTLE QUARREL.

Murder Ends Dispute Begun in Jest—Whisky to Blame.

Helena, Mont., Sept. 27. — John M. Davis was shot and instantly killed by william Norville at Hinsdale. The men had been drinking and from joking arose the fatal quarrel. Both men pulled guns. Norville shot twice, one of the bullets severing the jugular vein. Davis' gun was found cocked and undischarged, it having failed to go off when pulled. Davis leaves a wife and several children. Norville mounted his horse and rode off, but subsequently returned.

DISPLAY COUNTRY PRODUCTS.

First Annual Minnehaha Fair Starts Off Proper at Sioux Falls.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Sept. 27.—With a clear sky and a warm sun, the first annual Minnehaha county fair is under way. The exhibits are limited to Minnehaha county products, and the entries have been many and various. In the dairy, poultry and other departments the exhibits are said to compare most favorably with those of the recent state fair at Yankton.

PUTS CARTRIDGE IN STOVE.

Lake City Four-Year-Old Boy Likely to Lose Both Eyes.

Lake City, Minn., Sept. 27.—While playing with a loaded cartridge on Wednesday afternoon the four-year-old son of Charles Hyde had the sight of one of his eyes destroyed and may lose the other, although the attending physician hopes that he may save it. The accident was caused by the child placing the cartridge in the stove, causing it to explode.

FINED FIFTY DOLLARS.

Charles Giddings Pays for His Assault on Prof. Cook.

Spearfish, S. D., Sept. 27.—A fine of $50 was imposed by Judge Rice in circuit court at Deadwood upon C. M. Giddings for assaulting Prof. F. L. Cook, president of the state normal school here in the latter's office at the school building. The assault occurred last spring. Giddings entered a plea of guilty upon withdrawing the former plea of not guilty. The assault created something of a sensation.

The Crimson Blind

By Fred M. White

CHAPTER XLVIII.

Where Is Rawlins?

Lord Littimer was greatly interested in all that Chris had to say. The whole story was confided to him after dinner. Over his coffee on the terrace he offered many shrewd suggestions.

"There is one thing wherein you have made a mistake," he said. "And that is the idea that Henson changed those cigar-cases after Miss Gates laid your votive offering on Steel's doorstep."

"How else could it be done?" Chris said.

"My dear, the thing is quite obvious. You have already told me that Henson was quite aware what you were going to do—at least that he knew you were going to consult Steel. Also, he knew that you were going to make Steel a present, and by a little judicious eavesdropping he contrived to glean all about the cigar-case. The fellow has already admitted to your sister that he listened. How long was that before you bought the cigar-case?"

"I should say it might have been a week. We had inquiries to make, you know. In the first instance, we never dreamed of offering Mr. Steel money. I blush to think of that folly."

"Well, blush a little later on, when you have more time. Then Henson had a week to work out his little scheme. He knows all about the cigar-case; he knows where it is going to be bought. Then he goes to Lockhart's and purchases some trifle in the shape of a cigar-case; he has it packed up, yellow string and all. This is his dummy. By keeping his eyes open he gets the chance he is waiting for. Ruth Gates hadn't the faintest idea that he knew anything when she left that case, the day she bought it, within reach of Henson. He gets her out of the way for a minute or two; he unties the parcel and places the Van Sneck case in it. No, by Jove, he needn't have purchased anything at Lockhart's at all. I only thought of that to account for the yellow string and the stamped paper that Lockhart's people use. He first takes one case out of the parcel and replaces it with another, and there you are. You may depend upon it that was the way in which it was done."

The more Chris thought over the matter the more certain she felt that such was the case. Like most apparently wonderful things, the explanation was absurdly simple. A conjurer's most marvellous tricks are generally the easiest.

"How foolish of us not to have thought of this before," Chris said, thoughtfully. "At any rate, we know all about it now. And we know who bought the cigar-case so promptly returned to Lockhart's by Henson. I should like to see this Rawlins."

"You have got to find him first," said Littimer.

"I'm going to Moreton Wells to-morrow to make inquiries," said Chris.

But she was saved the trouble. Once more the ever-blessed telephone stood her in good stead. She was just on the point of starting for Moreton Wells when Steel called her up. Chris recognized him with a thrill of eager pleasure.

"You need not be afraid," she said. "You can speak quite freely. How is Van Sneck?"

"Very queer," David responded. "Bell hoped to have operated upon him before this, but such a course has not been deemed quite prudent. The day after to-morrow, it will be, I expect. Henson has found out where Van Sneck is."

"Indeed! Has he been to see you?"

"He has been here more than once, on all kinds of ingenious pretences. But I didn't call you up to tell you this. We have been making inquiries at Walen's, Marley and myself. The time has now come to let Marley behind the scenes a bit."

"Did Walen's people know anything about the tall American?"

"Oh, yes. A tall American with a thin beard and a faint suggestion of small-pox called about a week before the great adventure, and asked to see some gun-metal diamond-mounted cigar-cases—like the one in Lockhart's window."

"Did he really volunteer that remark?"

"He did, saying, also, that Lockhart's was too dear. Walen's hadn't got what he wanted, but they promised to get some cases out of stock, which meant that they would go to the same wholesale house as Lockhart and get some similar cases. As a matter of fact, one of Walen's assistants was sent round to study the case in Lockhart's window. The cases were procured on the chance of a sale, but the American never turned up again. No notice was taken of this, because such things often happen to shopkeepers."

"And this was about a week before the night of the great adventure?"

"Yes. Wait a bit. I have not quite finished yet. Now, once I had ascertained this, an important fact became obvious. The American didn't want a cigar-case at all."

"But he subsequently purchased the one returned to Lockhart's shop."

"That remark does not suggest your usual acumen. The American was preparing the ground for Van Sneck to purchase, with a view to a subsequent exchange. You have not fully grasped the vileness of this plot yet. I went to Lockhart's and succeeded in discovering that the purchaser of the returned case was a tall American, quite of the pattern I expected. Then I managed to get on to the trail at the Metropole here. They recollected, when I could describe the man; they also recollected the largeness of his tips. Then I traced my man to the Lion at Moreton Wells, where he had obviously gone to see Reginald Henson. From the Lion our friend went to the Royal, at Scarsdale Sands, where he is staying at present."

"Under the name of John Smith?"

"I suppose so, seeing that all the inquiries under that name were successful. If you would like me to come up and interview the man for you—"

"I should like you to do nothing of the kind," Chris said. "You are more useful in Brighton, and I am going to interview Mr. John Smith Rawlins myself. Good-bye. Just one moment. For the next few days my address will be the Royal Hotel, Scarsdale Sands."

Chris countermanded the dog-cart she had ordered, and repaired to the library, where Littimer was tying some trout flies behind a cloud of cigarette smoke.

"Thought you had gone to Moreton Wells," he said. "Been at the telephone again? A pretty nice bill I shall have to pay for all those long messages of yours."

"Mr. Steel pays this time," Chris said, gaily. "He has just given me some information that obviates the necessity of going to town. My dear uncle, you want a change. You look tired and languid—"

"Depression of spirits and a disinclination to exercise after food. Also a morbid craving for seven to eight hours' sleep every night. What's the little game?"

"Bracing air," Chris laughed. "Lord Littimer and his secretary, Miss Lee, are going to spend a few days at Scarsdale Sands, Royal Hotel, to recuperate after their literary labors."

"The air here being so poor and enervating," Littimer said, cynically. "In other words, I suppose you have traced Rawlins to Scarsdale Sands?"

"How clever you are," Chris said, admiringly. "Walen's American and Lockhart's American, with the modest pseudonym of John Smith, are what Mrs. Malaprop would call three single gentlemen rolled into one. We are going to make the acquaintance of John Rawlins Smith."

"Oh, indeed, and when do we start, may I ask?"

Chris responded, coolly, that she hoped to get away in the course of the day. With a great show of virtuous resignation, Lord Littimer consented.

"I have always been the jest of fortune," he said, plaintively; "but I never expected to be dragged all over the place at my time of life, by a girl who is anxious to make me acquainted with the choicest blackguardism in the kingdom. I leave my happy home, my cook and my cellar for at least a week of hotel living. Well, one can only die once."

Chris bustled away to make the necessary arrangements. A few hours later Lord Littimer was looking out from his luxurious private sitting room with the assumption of being a martyr. He and Chris were dressed for dinner; they were waiting for the bell to summon them to the dining room. When they got down, at length, they found quite a large number of guests already seated at the many small tables.

"Your man here?" Littimer asked, languidly.

Chris indicated two people seated in a window opposite.

"There!" she whispered. "There he is. And what a pretty girl with him!"

CHAPTER XLIX.

A Chevalier of Fortune.

Littimer put up his glass and gazed, with apparent vacancy, in the direction of the window. He saw a tall man with a gray beard and hair; a man almost immaculately dressed and distinctly distinguished appearance. Littimer was fain to admit that he would have taken him for a gentleman under any circumstances. In manner, style and speech, he left nothing to be desired.

"That chap has a fortune in his face and accent," Littimer said. "'Pon my word, he is a chance acquaintance that one would ask to dinner without the slightest hesitation. And the girl—"

"Is his daughter," Chris said. "The likeness is very strong."

"It is," Littimer admitted. "A singularly pretty, refined girl, with quite a grand air. It is an air that mere education seldom gives; but it seems to have done so in yonder case. And how fond they seem to be of one another! Depend upon it, Chris, whatever that man may be, his daughter knows nothing of it. And yet you tell me the police—"

"Well, never mind the police now. We can get Mr. Steel to tell Marley about 'John Smith,' if we can't contrive to force his hand without. But, with that pretty girl before my eyes, I shouldn't like to do anything harsh. Up till now I have always pictured the typical, educated scoundrel as a man who was utterly devoid of feelings of any kind."

Dinner proceeded quietly enough, Chris having eyes for hardly anything else beyond the couple in the window. She rose presently, with a little gasp, and hastily lifted a tankard of iced water from the table. The girl opposite her turned pale and her dark head had drooped forward.

"I hope it is not serious," said Chris. "Drink a little of this; it is iced."

"And they told me they had no ice in the house," the man Rawlins muttered. "A little of this, Grace. It is one of her old fainting fits. Ah, that is better."

The man Rawlins spoke with the tenderest solicitude. The look of positive relief on his face as his daughter smiled at him told of a deep devotion and affection for the girl. Chris, looking on, was wondering, vaguely whether or not she had made a mistake.

"Lord Littimer obtained our ice," she said. "Pray keep this. Oh, yes, that is Lord Littimer over there. I am his secretary."

Littimer strolled across himself and murmured his condolences. A little later, and the four of them were out on the veranda taking ices together. Rawlins might have been, and no doubt was, a finished scoundrel; but there was no question as to his fascinating manner and his brilliant qualities as a conversationalist. A man of nerve, too, and full of resources. All the same, Littimer was asking himself and wondering who the man really was. By birth, he must have been born a gentleman, Littimer did not doubt for a moment.

But there was one soft spot in the man, and that was his love for his daughter. For her sake he had been traveling all over the world for years; for years he had despaired of seeing her live to womanhood. But she was gradually growing better; indeed, if she had not walked so far to-day nothing would have happened. All the time that Rawlins was talking his eyes were resting tenderly on his daughter. The hard, steely look seemed to have gone out of them altogether.

Altogether a charming and many-sided rascal, Littimer thought. He was fond, as he called it of collecting types of humanity, and here was a new and fascinating specimen. The two men talked together until long after dark, and Rawlins never betrayed himself. He might have been an ambassador or cabinet minister unbending after a long period of heavy labor.

Meanwhile, Chris had drawn Grace Rawlins apart from the others. The girl was quiet and self contained, but evidently a lady. She seemed to have but few enthusiasms, but one of them was her father. He was the most wonderful man in the world, the most kind and considerate. He was very rich; indeed, it was a good thing, or she would never have been able to see so much of the world. He had given up nearly the whole of his life to her, and now she was nearly as strong as other girls. Chris listened in a dazed, confused kind of way. She had not expected anything like this; and when had Rawlins found time for those brilliant predatory schemes that she had heard of?"

"Well, what do you think of them?" Littimer asked, when, at length, he and Chris were alone. "I suppose it isn't possible that you and I have made a mistake?"

"I'm afraid not," Chris said, half-sadly. "But what a strange case altogether."

"Passing strange. I'll go bail that man is born and bred a gentleman; and what is more, he is no more of an American than I am. I kept on forgetting, from time to time, what he was, and taking him for one of our own class. And, finally, I capped my folly by asking him to bring his daughter for a drive to-morrow and a lunch on the Gapstone. What do you think of that?"

"Splendid," Chris said, coolly. "Nothing could be better. You will be good enough to exercise all your powers of fascination upon Miss Rawlins to-morrow, and leave her father to me. I thought of a little plan to-night which I believe will succeed admirably. At first I expected to have to carry matters with a high hand, but now I am going to get Mr. Rawlins through his daughter. I shall know all I want to by to-morrow night."

Littimer smiled at this sanguine expectation.

"I sincerely hope you will," he said, drily. "But I doubt it very much, indeed. You have one of the cleverest men in Europe to deal with. Good-night."

But Chris was in no way cast down. She had carefully planned out her line of action, and the more she thought of it the more sure of success she felt. A few hours more and—but she didn't care to dwell too closely on that.

It was after luncheon that Chris' opportunity came. Lord Littimer and Grace Rawlins had gone off to inspect something especially beautiful in the way of a waterfall, leaving Chris and Rawlins alone. The latter was talking brilliantly over his cigarette.

"Is Lord Littimer any relation of yours?" he asked.

"Well, yes," Chris admitted. "I hope he will be a nearer relation before long."

"Oh, you mean to say—may I venture to congratulate—"

"It isn't quite that," Chris laughed, with a little rising in color. "I am not thinking of Lord Littimer, but his son. Yes; I see you raise your eyebrows—probably because you are aware of the story, as most people are. And you are wondering why I am on such friendly terms with Lord Littimer, under the circumstances. And I am wondering why you should call yourself John Smith."

The listener coolly flicked the ash from his cigarette. His face was like a mask.

"John Smith is a good name," he said. "Can you suggest a better?"

"If you ask me to do so I can. I should call myself John Rawlins."

There was just the ghost of a smile on Rawlin's lips.

"There is a man of that name," he said, slowly, "who attained considerable notoriety in the States. People said he was the dernière cri of refined rascality. He was supposed to be without any kind of feeling; his villainies were the theme of admiration among financial magnates. There were brokers who piously thanked Providence because Rawlins had never thought of going on the stock exchange, where he could have robbed and plundered with impunity. And this Rawlins always baffles the police. If he baffles them a little longer they won't be able to touch him at all. At present, despite his outward show, he has hardly a dollar to call his own. But he is now on a great coup, and, strange to say, an honest one. Do you know the man, Miss Lee?"

Chris met the speaker's eyes firmly.

"I met him last night for the first time," she said.

"In that case you can hardly be said to know him," Rawlins murmured. "If you drive him into a corner, he will do desperate things. If you tried that game on with him you would regret it for the rest of your life. Good heavens, you are like a child playing about a lot of unguarded machinery. Why do you do it?"

"That I will tell you, presently, Mr. Rawlins. You have a daughter."

The hard look died out of the listener's eyes.

"Whom I love better than my life," he said. "There are two John Rawlins—the one you know; and, well, the other one. I should be sorry to show you the other one."

"For the sake of your daughter, I don't want to see the other one."

"Then why do you pit yourself against me like this?"

"I don't think you are displaying your usual lucidity," Chris said, coolly. Her heart was beating fast, but she did not show it. "Just reflect for a moment. I have found you out. I know pretty well what you are. I need not have told you anything of this. I need have done no more than gone to the police and told them where to find you. But I don't want to do that; I hate to do it, after what I saw last night. You have your child, and she loves you. Could I unmask you before her eyes?"

"You would kill her," Rawlins said, a little unsteadily: "and you will kill me, I verily believe. That child is all the world to me. I committed my first theft so that she could have the change the doctors declared to be absolutely necessary. I intended to repay the money—the old story. And I was found out by my enemies and discharged. Thank goodness, my wife was dead. Since then I have preyed on society. . . . But I need not go into that sordid story. You are not going to betray me?"

"I said before that I would do nothing of the kind."

"Then why do you let me know that you have discovered my identity?"

"Because I want you to help me. I fancy you respect my sex, Mr. Rawlins?"

"Call me Smith, please. I have always respected your sex. All the kindness and sympathy of my life have been from women. And I can lay my hand on my heart and declare that I never yet wronged one of them in thought or deed. The man who is cruel to woman is no man."

"And yet, your friend, Reginald Henson, is that sort."

Rawlins smiled again. He began to understand a little of what was passing in Chris' mind.

"Would you mind going a little more into details?" he suggested. "So Henson is that sort. Well, I didn't know, or he had never had my assistance in his little scheme. Oh, of course, I had known him for years as a scoundrel. So he oppresses women?"

"He has done so for a long time; he is blighting my life, and the life of my sister, and another. And it seems to me that I have that rascal under my thumb at last. You cannot save him—you can do no more than place obstacles in my way; but even these I should overcome. And you admit that I am likely to be dangerous to you?"

"You can kill my daughter. I am in your power to that extent."

"And if I should," Chris said. "It is only Reginald Henson that I want to strike. I want you to answer a few questions; to tell me why you went to Walens and induced them to procure a certain cigar-case for you, and why you subsequently went to Lockhart's, at Brighton, and bought a precisely similar one."

Rawlins looked in surprise at the speaker. A tinge of admiration was on his face. There was a keenness and audacity after his own heart.

"Go on," he said, slowly. "Tell me everything, openly and freely, and when you have done so I will give you all the information that lies in my power."

CHAPTER L.

Rawlins Is Candid.

"So Reginald Henson bullies women?" Rawlins said, after a long pause. There was a queer smile on his face; he appeared perfectly at his ease. He did not look in the least like a desperate criminal whom Chris could have driven out of the country by one word to the police. In his perfectly-fitting gray suit, he seemed more like a lord of ancient acres than anything else. "It is not a nice thing to bully women."

"Reginal Henson finds it quite congenial occupation," Chris said, bitterly.

Rawlins pulled thoughtfully at his cigarette.

"I am, to a certain extent, in your power," he said. "You have discovered my identity at a time when I could sacrifice thousands for it not to be known that I am in England. How you have discovered me matters as little as how a card player gets the ace of trumps. And I understand that the price of your silence is the betrayal of Henson?"

"That is about what it comes to," said Chris.

"In the parlance of the lower type of rascal, I am to 'round on my pal?'"

"If you like to put it in that way, Mr. Smith."

"I never did such a thing in my life before. And, at the same time, I don't mind admitting I was never so sorely tried. At the present moment I am on the verge of a large fortune, and I am making my grand coupe honestly. Would you deem it exaggeration on my part if I said that I was exceedingly glad of the fact?"

"Mr' Smith," Chris said, earnestly; "I have seen how fond you are of your daughter."

"That is an exceedingly clever remark of yours, young lady," Rawlins smiled. "You know that you have found the soft spot in my nature, and you are going to hammer on it until you reduce me to submission. I am not a religious man, but my one prayer is that Grace shall never find me out. When my coupe comes off I am going to settle in England and become intensely respectable."

"With Reginald Henson for your secretary, I suppose?"

"No. I am going to drop the past. But to return to our subject. Are you asking me to betray Henson to the police?"

"Nothing of the kind!" Chris cried, hastily. "I—would do anything to avoid a family scandal. All I want is a controlling power over the man."

"The man who bullies women?"

The same. For seven years he has wrecked the lives of five of us—three women. He has parted husband and wife; he has driven the man I love into exile. And the poor wife is gradually growing hopelessly mad under his cruelties. And he blackmails us, he extorts large sums of money from us. If you only knew what we have suffered at the hands of this rascal."

Rawlins nodded in sympathy.

"I did not imagine that," he said. "Of course, I have known for years that Henson was pretty bad. You may smile, but I have never had any sympathy with his methods and hypocritical ways, perhaps because I never did anything of the kind myself. No one can say that I ever robbed anybody who was poor, or defenseless or foolish. By heavens, I am a more honest man than hundreds of London and New York capitalists! It is the hard rogues among us who have always been my mark. But to injure and wound women and children!"

"Which means that you are going to help me?" Chris asked, quietly.

"As far as I can, certainly. Especially as you are going to let Henson down easily. Now, please ask me any questions you like."

"This is very good of you," said Chris. "In the first place, did you ever hear Mr. Henson speak of his relations or friends?"

"Nobody beyond Lord Littimer. You see, Henson and I were extremely useful to one another once or twice, but he never trusted me and I never trusted him. I never cared for his methods."

"Did you go to Brighton lately on purpose to help him?"

"Certainly not. I had business in Brighton for some considerable time, and my daughter was with me. When she went to stay with friends for a short time I moved to the Metropole."

"Then why did you go to Walen's, in Brighton and ask them to show you some gun-metal cigar-cases like the one in Lockhart's window?"

"Simply because Henson asked me to. He came to me just before I went to the Metropole and told me he had a big thing on. He didn't give me the least idea what it was, nor did I ask him. He suggested the idea of the cigar-case, and said that I need not go near Walen's again, and I didn't. I assure you I had no curiosity in the matter. In any case, a little thing like that couldn't hurt me. Some days later Henson came to me again and asked me to go to Lockhart's and purchase the cigar-case I had previously seen. He wanted me to get the case so that I could not be traced. Again I agreed. I was leaving the Metropole the next day, so the matter was easy. I called and purchased the cigar-case on approval, I forwarded $1 notes in payment from the Metropole, and the next day I left."

"And you did all that without a single question?"

"I did. It was only a little consideration for an old confederate."

"And suppose that confederate had played you false?"

(To be Continued.)

SWIFT YOUNG MOUNTAIN LAMB.

Ernest-Thompson Seton Tried to Give a Wild Animal Catcher a Pointer and Was Rebuked.

Before college closed last spring, Ernest-Thompson Seton went out to Stanford University to deliver a lecture on wild animals to whom he had introduced himself, or some kindred subject. He was entertained at dinner before the lecture, and about the board were several Western zoologists of prominence. One strenuous young Westerner, whose occupation lies in catching wild animals alive, spoke of a commission he had received to capture some Rocky Mountain sheep.

"How will you go about it?" questioned Mr. Thompson.

"I'll try to get them when very young lambs," said the young man, "before they are able to move about rapidly."

"You'll never be able to do it," said the author-lecturer "Don't you know that an hour after birth a mountain goat can move about the rocks faster than you can run?"

"Did you ever see one do it?" asked the young man, quietly.

"No," said Mr. Thompson, "but an old mountaineer told me they could."

"Well, Mr. Thompson, you know that old mountaineer, and we don't."

A Tragedy.

"So this is the end?" he cried. "I had thought—Ah, but I might have known. You are all alike. You lead a man to hope, and then, when your fickle fancy turns, you leave him for another." He laughed aloud in his frenzy; then, of a sudden, his mood changed. "But you shall not rob my life of all it holds. I shall blot you out—forget you. I shall find another, by and by, to fill your place—one who can make flannel cakes that are fit to eat and who will not burn the roast"

GREAT YEAR FOR FINDS.

Recent Discovery of Coins in Wales Reveals Other Treasures.

The recent discovery in North Wales of several valuable silver urns, gold rings, armlets and spoons, dating from about the year 1600, recalls to mind, says an English writer, some interesting facts concerning the recovery of treasure trove.

The year 1882 appears to have been the most prolific in these unexpected finds. In January of that year, while repairs were being carried out in a house at Broughton, the workmen unearthed a large leather bag containing 30 crowns and several shillings of the reign of Charles II., James II. and Queen Anne.

In the following month a discovery of great antiquarian interest was made at Vufarfre, Sweden, when a number of antique silver bowls were brought to light. They proved to be excellent examples of 12th and 13th century work, and were covered with quaint inscriptions.

Some months later a clay vessel full of Roman coins was found near Yeovil, Somersbire, and, at about the same time, 250 coins of Queene Anne's reign were found at Watford.

The greatest discovery of the 19th century took place in December of the same year in an old house in the Rue Vieille de Temple, Paris. Upon its demolition a copper jar was found in one of the walls. It contained 7,382 gold coins, worth nearly $30,000 as bullion, but to the collector their value was untold, for they belonged, numismatically, to the rarest reigns of France.

In other parts of the house were found 1010 coins of Jean le Bon, 6109 of Charles V and over 500 pieces of other mints, the latter being alone valued at $150,000.

BUNDLES IN THE CAPITAL.

You May Take Them Into the Treasury Building, but Not Out of It.

Among all the departments in Washington the most strict is the treasury. A citizen may carry anything he likes into the treasury building, but when he undertakes to carry anything bulky out of the building he is apt to get into trouble if he does not explain with readiness.

A visitor to Washington the other day carried a fairly large package into the building. Nobody said a word to him about it when he was going in, but when he started out with the package he was held up, made to open it, and to explain all about himself and his business.

The good sense of the rule is apparent. At the capitol it is against the rules to carry any sort of a bundle into the building. The fear is that somebody will carry in a bomb. The rule was never enforced until the senate took up the Sherman repeal bill. At that time the public mind became so influenced against the delay in the senate that violence was feared, and the rule was put into active operation and continued for some years.

Then it dropped out of sight until the Spanish war excitement came on, when it was again enforced, and it is still enforced rather strongly, although during the last session of congress a few cameras were allowed in the building.—New York Mail and Express.

MIXED THE ORGANS UP.

Two Blind Musicians and Their Little Mistake.

Visitors to Blackpool recently were much puzzled by an old woman who was playing a barrel organ.

At one end of the instrument she had pasted this notice: "Help the blind." Beneath this appeared a second appeal—"I am the father of seven motherless children."

The old woman wore a pair of blue spectacles, behind which her eyes were completely hidden.

A few streets farther on the mystery of the inscription was cleared up, for there sat an old man turning music out of another organ, as dilapidated as the one whose faint strains could almost be heard from up the street.

He, too, wore glasses, and his organ bore this legend: "Help the blind." And under it, "I am the mother of seven fatherless children."

A man stepped up to him and said: "Look here, my friend, next time you go out you had better get the right label on your organ."

The grinder must have guessed what the error was, for, pushing the glasses back from his eyes, he peered quickly up and down the street, as if looking for a policeman. Seeing none, he leaned over and read the sign.

"That's the old woman, all over," he muttered, replacing the glasses and turning his instruments to leave; "she's mixed them blooming organs up again."—Stray Stories.

The Cost of Living.

It seems to cost a great deal to live nowadays. Most persons notice it, especially persons who are hard put to it to find the money to pay their bills. The statisticians report that commodities in general use cost, on an average, about 10 per cent more than they did last year. The rise in the price of meat contributes a good deal to this advance, though breadstuffs have been high, too. Articles of luxury, like good clothes and country houses, have grown dearer in proportion than most articles of necessity, because the huge influx of money that the country has sustained has made a brisk market for luxuries. Rents are higher, houses cost more, servants get higher wages, board is higher at summer hotels, says the Pittsburg Dispatch.

Painting a Portrait of the Dead.

David Col, the famous genre painter, one day was asked by a peasant to paint a portrait of his father. The young artist said he would be delighted, and inquired when the father would be able to give him a sitting. The peasant replied, "Oh, he is dead!"

"How would you have me paint his portrait?" replied the artist.

"Look here," said the peasant, "this picture on the easel—whom does it represent?"

"St. Anthony."

"You are sure it is St. Anthony?"

"Yes."

"Did he come here to sit?"

"Of course not."

"Of course not."

"Then, you see, you are quite able to make a dead man's portrait."

"Col yielded, and after making inquiries concerning the old man, set about painting the portrait. The peasant, seeing it for the first time, fell on his knees and cried bitterly.

"Why do you cry?" asked the painter.

"Because my father has grown so ugly."—Brooklyn Eagle.

Proof Positive.

Cross—Do you think that dyeing the hair is as dangerous as the doctors make out?

Crabbe—Certainly; you may take my word for it. Only last year a rich uncle of mine took to dyeing his hair, and in three weeks he was married to a widow with four children.—Glasgow Evening Times.

SHE CRIED WHEN SHE PUT HER CLOTHES ON.

This is what Miss Jessie Stephenson of 30 Hartington Road, Aberdeen, says when writing to the Proprietors of St. Jacobs Oil, the remedy which cured her:

"I was very bad with rheumatism I could not put my clothes on without crying out. I always had to have assistance to dress myself. I obtained a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil, and after its contents were used I was much better. I used the contents of two more bottles, and now I am able to do my work as usual. I would recommend anyone troubled with rheumatism to use St. Jacobs Oil."

Miss Stephenson's present condition is a very great contrast to what it was before she used St. Jacobs Oil; then she was practically helpless, suffered the greatest agony—but now she is free from pain, and able to do her work. Surely such evidence as this is most convincing that St. Jacobs Oil "Conquers Pain."

The Game of Love.

Ted—Is that girl who married the old fellow satisfied with the match she made?

Ned—Yes. He wasn't worth as much as he claimed, but, as he turned out to be ten years older than he owned up to, she considered it about a stand-off.—New York Sun.

Queer Rite of Jews

How Dwellers in American Cities Preserve Symbol of Desert Wanderings.

The oddest industry in the metropolis is that of a succoth carpenter, who finds employment one week of the year in the Ghetto among the orthodox Jews. His work is done in the fortnight which precedes the Feast of the Tabernacles and consists in building odd little booths known as succoths in the back yards of the tenement houses. The feast of the tabernacle is supposed to commemorate the time during which the children of Israel wandered in the wilderness, and probably also their sojourn in the land of Egypt. During this period they lived more or less in the open, which fact is symbolized by the booth having no roof, or else a covering of evergreens and bulrushes. According to another school, the booths represent the time when the Israelites came in such numbers that they were unable to get into the temple, and so built temporary shelters around the sacred edifice.

The succoth should be boxlike in shape, not less than six feet in height, six feet long, and four feet wide. It should be made of the cheapest and flimsiest building material to indicate what it represents. Some of the builders take pride in making the structures as ramshackle as possible. Others use the poorest materials, but saw and fit them with so much skill that the finished succoth is neat and attractive. There is but little commercial element in the industry. The employer supplies the wood or the builder sells it to him at cost, while for the work of setting it up his price is nearly always fifty cents. Charitable Hebrews will often employ two or three builders and pay each the same as the rest.

Here during the festival week the family takes its meals and assembles every day for prayer. It is not at all unpleasant in fair weather, but when, as often happens, it rains, the situation is decidedly uncomfortable. On a rainy day symbolism vanishes, as rain is practically unknown in the stony desert where the Israelites wandered ages ago.

Still more suggestive is the way in which the prayers are said. Instead of kneeling or of clasping the hands, the one who prays holds a fruit, usually a pomegranate, in one hand and a bulrush or water reed in the other. At the end of the prayer each of these is shaken twice and then handed over to the next member of the family. The water reeds are supposed to commemorate the finding of Moses in the bulrushes, and the fruit the promise of the Lord to give them a land flowing with milk and honey. —New York Evening Post.

Half-Lion, Half-Tiger

Hagenbeck's Experiments in Breeding Have Produced a Strange Monster.

Although the possibility of breeding lion and tiger hybrids in captivity has long been known, the results of the experiments have not been very successful, the animals rarely reaching to their full size and development. More recently Mr. Hagenbeck has obtained some extraordinary results, and has supplied me with particulars. One is that of a mature animal which was born on May 11, 1897, and it is now rather more than five years old. It is a male. Its height across the withers as it stands erect is 45 inches, English measurement: Its length from the nose to the tip of the tail is 10 feet 2 inches, a length which exceeds that of a full grown lion. In May during the present year it weighed 220 kilograms, equal to 467 English pounds. It is an exceedingly fine, well-grown animal, showing slightly the stripes of the tiger, but it is not furnished with a mane like a lion, and as this appendage usually appears in the lion when three years old, it may be presumed that no mane will ever be present in the hybrid. Mr. Hagenbeck has not yet succeeded in rearing any offspring from it. This animal is described by him as larger in size than any lion or tiger. He speaks of it as a monster, and says that the two young ones, which are now only thirteen months old, are larger than any pure-bred lion or tiger of the same age, and he thinks if they progress satisfactorily they will grow to a greater size than the large male.

The two younger ones, which were a year old on the 28th of last April, are both males, and show the tiger markings rather more distinctly than the older animal. In addition to photographs of these Mr. Hagenbeck has sent me another of two young lion and tiger hybrids, male and female, born April 20 in the present year, twelve months after the others. It shows the two little ones lying across a small terrier, which has furnished them with a small supply of milk; the remainder being given to them by a bottle. The same terrier was the nurse for the two larger ones. These animals, thus bred in what may be termed domestication, become exceedingly tame and docile.—W. B. Tegetemeier, in the Field.

The "False Faces"

Society That Was at One Time Very Popular Among the Indians.

The fondness of the American Indian for masks or false faces is held by a student of Indian lore to prove that secret societies exist among the red men as among the whites. According to Iroquois belief, certain spirits, whose entity is comprehended in ugly visages, have the power to inflict bodily ailments and to cause diseases to afflict their people. To counteract their evil designs, the "Society of the False Faces" is maintained among the pagan Iroquois, in order to appease the evil spirits from whom they take their name, as well as to effect a charm against disease and to cure others. When a candidate is initiated into this strange society, the chief "False Face" thus addresses him: "Brothers, listen! Now you must know that we did not make this custom. The beginning is from Niyoh, our creator, who is above the false faces. A member of the False Faces must go about among the people in the spring and fall to keep them from sickness, and must visit sick people at all times when called upon. This is all I have to say."

In a report made to the New York university in 1852 Lewis H. Morgan thus describes the workings of this curious order: "When any one was sick with a complaint within the range of their healing powers, and dreamed that he saw a 'false face,' this signified that he would be cured. A feast was then prepared, the 'false faces' appeared and marched in Indian file, each one wearing a mask, and carrying a turtle shell rattle in the hand. On entering the house of the invalid they first stirred the ashes upon the hearth and then sprinkled hot ashes over the patient until his head and hair were covered, ending with the sick person marching around the room with his queer visitors. The mysterious callers were then presented with food, which they took away and ate in secret, as they never unmasked themselves before the people.

FIND MANY BOGUS PENNIES.

New York's Subtreasury Discovered 117,000 of Them in 1901.

In the minor coin division of the United States subtreasury in New York of 42,000,000 pennies received there in 1901 over 117,000 were counterfeit; of the $2,026,000 received in minor coins—nickels, 3-cent pieces and pennies—$1,331 were in counterfeit pieces. Although the Baltimore subtreasury has no record of the amounts of coins detected here, because of the fact that the United States secret service men collect all of these coins from this city and take them to Washington for experimental purposes and for the purpose of detecting whether or not any new counterfeits are being circulated, it is known that but comparatively few spurious coins find their way into the local office of the treasury.

About 15,050,000 pennies are handled by the local subtreasury each year, and of these a remarkably small percentage have been found to be of no value. It was stated at the subtreasury yesterday that the principal trouble, as far as counterfeits are concerned, has been with nickels. Not more than about 500 of these are received in a year, and receipts of pennies have been proportionately less.

The man accustomed to the work spots a bad penny in the fraction of a second. Counting at a speed almost too fast for the untrained eye to follow, he seldom, if ever, misses one that is off color or that lacks the sharpness of outline in the modeling of a genuine one.

The expert, however, is seldom able to tell you what are the things that mark for him a particular coin as spurious. His senses are so highly trained to the work that he differentiates and chooses almost instinctively. It is merely a matter of unremitting vigilance and long experience.—Baltimore American.

Vast Extent of Manitoba.

Less than 10 per cent of Manitoba's land has been taken up; the neighboring vicinity of Assiniboia has nearly 60,000,000 acres, mostly suitable for wheat cultivation; Alberta, near the Rockies, is 500 by 300 miles in extent, and Saskatchewan is another empire in area.

A HARD STRUGGLE.

When you have a bad back, a back that's lame, weak or aching it's a hard struggle sometimes to find relief and cure, but it's a harder struggle when the dangers beset you of urinary disorders, too frequent urination retention of the urine with all the subsequent pains, annoyances and suffering. There are many medicines that relieve these conditions, but you want a remedy—a cure. Read this statement; it tells of a cure that lasted:

Veteran Josiah Heller, place of residence 706 South Walnut St., Urbana, Ill., says: "In the fall of 1889 I procured Doan's Kidney Pills at Cunningham's drug store in Champaign, and after taking the remedy conscientiously I made a public statement of the results. I told how Doan's Kidney Pills relieved me of kidney trouble, disposed of my lame back and the pains across my loins, beneath the shoulder blades, etc. During the interval which has elapsed I have had occasion at times to resort to Doan's Kidney Pills when I noticed warnings of another attack, and on each and every occasion the result obtained was just as satisfactory as when the pills were first brought to my notice. At this time I just as emphatically indorse the preparation as I did several years ago."

A FREE TRIAL of this great Kidney medicine which cured Mr. Heller will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. For sale by all druggists, price 50 cents per box.

TRADES UNION DISCIPLINE.

British Workmen Fined for Allowing Apprentices to Help, Even When Fingers Were Being Mashed.

The story of the Spanish princess being allowed to burn to death in the presence of her attendants, because for them to have touched her would have been a breach of etiquette, is generally regarded as the example, par excellence, of old-time idiocy, but a recent example of trade union methods would appear to run it close. A workman, engaged in guiding a cable into a conduit, got his fingers caught between the cable and the conduit. The men at the other end continued to pull, being unaware of the mishap, but an apprentice, seeing the serious situation of affairs, rushed up and pulled back the cable. A delegate of the union, having witnessed the affair, reported the workman for having broken the rules of the order. The injured man had to go before the executive to explain his conduct, and although his damaged hand was a strong witness in his defense, he was fined "for allowing an apprentice to do helper's work—to-wit, assisting a journeyman drawing wire into a conduit." Discipline is all very well in its way, but with such master minds at work one need not wonder that we suffer so much from intelligent competition.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A Catch in the Back.

Grand View, Iowa, Sept. 29th.—Mrs. Lydia Parker of this place, says:

"I was troubled with backache all the time for years. When I would stoop over a catch would take me in the back, and I could not straighten up for some time.

"I tried everything I could think of, but got no relief till I sent and got Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"I used one box and part of another before the trouble all left me, but now I am well and strong, and I have not been troubled with my back for some months.

"I believe my cure is a permanent one, and I am very grateful, indeed, to Dodd's Kidney Pills for what they have done for me.

"I would most heartily recommend them to anyone suffering with lame back, for I believe they will cure any case of this kind."

In Hate Evil Hall's Home.

Mrs. Sabrina Watts Hall of Jonesboro, Me., celebrated her ninety-eighth birthday on Sept. 8, and during the evening some fifty or sixty of her neigbors and friends gathered at her home and passed the evening with her. Several useful presents were left. Although Mrs. Hall has nearly reached the century mark, she is still bright and active, retaining her faculties to a remarkable degree. She resides with her daughter, Miss Laura, in a house that was built 105 years ago by Hate Evil Hall, father of her late husband, Horace C. Hall. Her father, Samuel Watts, Sr., assisted the citizens of Machias in the capture of the British war vessel, Margaretta on June 12, 1775, in the first naval battle of the Revolutionary war. Maine can boast of but few such remarkable women as Mrs. Hall. —Bangor (Me.) Commercial.

THE NEWS,

By John W. Eastman.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

Thomas Crompe, the Republican candidate for register of deeds, is a thoroughly competent man for the office, and where he is best known will receive a large vote. This is one of the best indorsements a man could ask.

The Minneapolis Journal is of the opinion that Judge Moen, of of Ada, is Halvor Steenerson's strongest competitor in the congressional fight, and that Alex McKinnon will be third in the race. This is undoubtedly true. The Populist party is a great deal stronger in this district than the Democratic party. Mr. Moen will also have the support of the Prohibitionists in this district.

James McIntyre, the Republican candidate for Judge of Probate, is receiving a great deal encouragement from all over the county in his candidacy, and indications are that he will be elected by a large majority. Mr. McIntyre is looked upon as the most competent man to fill this important position, and if he is elected the tax payers can rest assured that he will earn his salary.

Red Lake Lands.

A special from Washington to the St. Paul Dispatch says:

Efforts will be renewed at the coming session of congress to have the Red Lake lands opened up for entry. This will add a quarter of a million acres to the agricultural tracts in Northern Minnesota. The bill for securing these lands from the Indians under provisions of a treaty negotiated last winter by Maj. Mclaughlin passed the senate last session.

Congressman Cannon objected to it in the house, because it carried an appropriation of about a million dollars to pay the Indians for the lands. But this money is all re-imbursable to the government. Mayor Frank Kratka, of Thief River Falls, is expected in Washington early this fall to continue the work. It is understood that secretary Hitchcock, in his annual report to congress, will recommend the passage of the Red Lake bill.

Political Meetings.

Prof. James Wilson, candidate for superintendent of schools and James McIntyre, candidate for Judge of Probate, will hold a political meeting Friday evening Oct. 3rd, in the Copp school house in the town of North, and Saturday evening, Oct. 4th, at Valhall, in the town of Rocksbury. All farmers residing in the vicinity are cordially invited to be present, and bring their families.

For Sale.

House, barn and three lots also 80 acres two miles west of town. Rooms to rent; also barn room for horses cattle or storage. Opposite the turn table.

Emma C. Purdy.

Looking Over

The entire field of science, nowhere has there been such progress as in the Science of Optics and the Fitting of Glasses. Our success in this line is due in a measure, to the fact that we embrace every meritous idea. We constantly seek to originate new methods of excellence that will in any way aid us in the practice of fitting glasses.

GOOD WORK.

Being Done by the Builders of the the Holt, Ditch.

R. B. Vining was up to Holt Sunday and saw the steam ditcher which is to build the Holt ditch commence operations. Mr. Vining says that he was greatly surprised at the amount of dirt it would remove in a short time and he does not think that men and teams could compete with this machine. There was a large number of farmers present to witness the starting and they were much pleased with the work. The owners of the machine expect to keep it running night and day all winter, but Mr. Vining is of the opinion that when it gets good and cold they will be obliged to stop work. They have a 50,000 contract and as soon as it is completed they expect to build other ditches in this section.

BIG GUNS.

To Be Here at Opening of County Fair.

Mayor Kratka has received word from Senator Clapp to the effect that if possible he will be here at the opening of the county fair to be held in this city next Thursday, Oct. 9th. It is also thought that Gov. Van Sant will be here as well as Ray W. Jones, Republican candidate for lieutenant governor. Mr. Jones was identified with the early history of Thief River Falls, and if he comes he will no doubt see many changes here.

ARE PROSPEROUS.

Farmers Have Had Good Average Yields.

Threshing is about two-thirds completed in this section and all of the farmers are greatly pleased with the results. Their wheat has averaged from 18 to 26 bushels per acre and flax has been between 12 and 24. The hay crop has been an unusually good one and take it all in all the farmers of this section are in a very prosperous condition. Those who owe money to the banks and merchants will all be able to pay their indebtedness and have money left besides.

The First Gun.

Gov. Van Sant, Secretary of State Peter E. Hanson, S. G. Iverson, Republican nominee for state auditor, and Halvor Steenerson, Republican nominee for congressman, opened the Republican campaign for Red Lake county at Red Lake Falls last evening. A number of Republicans from this city and St. Hilaire were down to meet the gentlemen.

MARVELOUS RESULTS OF DR. REA.

The Cures he has made Speak for Themselves.

A reporter who called at the office of Dr. Rea found his rooms crowded with patients waiting to see him. The news of the astounding success of his special form of treating diseases brings daily to his offices gatherings truly remarkable in size and character. The number of visitors do not lessen, showing thereby that the cures made by him are creating impressions far and near. He seems to be busy all the time treating, prescribing and advising to those who are in need of treatment that cannot be dispensed by physicians of ordinary ability.

In conversation with one of his patients she told the reporter the following. "Yes, I am doctoring with Dr. Rea. He has been treating me for three months. I had doctered with all other doctors in my neighborhood, had sent to New York for treatment and had spent lots of money on other medicine. Had tried osteopathy and was even thinking of trying Christian Science before I went to him. His medicine seemed to work wonders on one. What it is I do not know but I have never taken anything like it before. He is not giving me any great quantity of medicine but it seems to strike the spot. This is not only my experience but it is the experience of most all others I have talked with and I can say for certain that I know of many remarkable cures he has made. I know of one case in particular, in fact they are neighbors of mine. They had a daughter who had had epilepsy for years. They were anxious to try Dr. Rea's treatment but for some reason or other the family was discouraged by some people who seemed to have an opinion that Dr. Rea's treatment could not do her any good and that there was nothing in it. Despite the fact, however, her parents decided to doctor her and take the chances. This was about four months ago. Her spells stopped on her after Dr. Rea had been treating her for two weeks. She has not had a spell since."

The reporter went away believing, as do all others who come in contact with him, in the remarkable ability of Dr. Rea.

We take the liberty to publish a list of some of his most recent cures that we know to have been made.

Mrs. C. F. Nordstrom, Two Harbors, Minn. Cured of consumption and chronic bronchial catarrh. Cured after other doctors had failed.

Stephen F. Mitchell. Forest City Minn. Cured of nervousness and general debility.

Peter Olson, Litchfield, Minn. Cured of piles. Cured in one treatment without pain and without the loss of a drop of blood.

John Larson, Avalanche Wis. Cured of consumption.

Wm. Theur, Arcadia, Wis. Cured of catarrhal and chronic bronchial troubles.

Miss Alice Cady, Emardo, N. Dakota. Cured of female troubles and consumption. Friends had given her up to die. She was quickly cured by Dr. Rea's treatment.

Daughter of Peter Johannas, Plainfield, Wis. Cured of a bad case of skin trouble in two months.

Mary Packer, Plainfield, Wis. Cured of stomache trouble and anemia of the blood, in other words, turning of the blood into water.

L. Lindbeck, Morris, Minn. Cured in three months of a bad case of stomach trouble.

Jacob Dach, Viroqua, Wis. Cured of catarrah and large polypus removed from the nose. Dr. Rea cured him permanently.

Edna Brandt, Necedah, Wis. Cured in two months of a bad case of catarrh.

Louis Clementson, Donnelly, Minn. Cured permanently of deafness.

Mrs. E. Kribbs Galesville, Wis. Cured of stomach and catarrh trouble of long standing.

Albert Freemark, Gatesburg, Wis. He was cured of long standing case of eczema on the face.

C. H. Severson, a prominent traveling man of Beloit, Wis. Cured of a long standing case of hard hearing Permanently relieved in one treatment; says now he can hear as well as he ever did.

Miss Marion Harrison, Red Wing, Minn. Cured of Goiter.

Mrs. Louis Sauers, Galesville, Wis. Cured of blood disease of long standing due to improper vaccination by a careless physician.

Peter Bevan, Verndale, Minn. Cured of a bad case of heart disease.

Mrs. Fred Gender, Unalaska, Wis. Cured of loss of hearing of many years standing.

Albert Feuling, Arcadia, Wis. Cured of stomach troubles and chronic constipation.

Capt. "Bill" Kratka and Gov. "Sam" Van Sant used to be cronies when they were both steamboating on the Mississippi years ago and naturally their meeting in Red Lake Falls last week recalled many reminiscenses of early life on the father of waters.

The month of September was an exceedingly quiet one with the municipal court in this city. Not a person was fined and there was not a criminal case before the court, the last one being the shooting affair which occurred across the track about the first of August.

Capt. McDonald is unable to secure a crew of men to work on the government improvement boat and the work will probably have to be stopped for this season. The pay is $30 per month and board and men work but eight hours a day.

The wages of swampers for the woods have reached an unheard of figure at $35 per month and board and now the wages of cooks for the logging camps have been raised. The latter are very scarce and one camp has offered $75 a month for one. Even in the large camps, $60 is usually considered very fair wages for a cook. Men for all grades of work in the woods are hard to get and from present appearances there will be a shortage in the lumber camps this winter.—Crookston Times.

The political meetings held at the Copp school house last Friday evening and at Valhall last Saturday evening were quite successfull. At Valhall there was a very large crowd present and speeches were made by Attorney James McIntyre, Republican candidate for judge of probate, James Wilson, Republican candidate for superintendent of schools, W. C. Smiley, Republican candidate for county surveyor, Thomas Germo, Republican candidate for county attorney, and C. L. Dobner, chairman of the Republican county committee.

The estimates of appropriations required for the department of agriculture for the next fiscal year as completed by Secretary Wilson, aggregate almost $5,000,000. The appropriations for the current year amounted to $4,503,960.

The quarterly estimate of the value of foreign coins issued by the director of the mint shows that during the quarter ended Sept. 30, 1902, the market value of silver has increased .0017 per fine ounce. The value of foreign silver coins has increased accordingly.

The order of President Roosevelt directing a census to be taken of the Philippine islands will be cabled to Gov. Taft so that work in the islands may begin at once. Arrangements are being made by the bureau of insular affairs to carry out the president's order.

After a conference with Supt. Wainwright of the Naval academy, the secretary of the navy issued orders for the participation of the naval cadets in the naval veterans' parade which is to occur in Washington as a part of the Grand Army encampment exercises.

The monthly coinage statement issued by the director of the mint shows that during September, 1902, the total coinage executed at the mints of the United States was $6,762,115, as follows: Gold, $3,560,660; silver, $2,831,165; minor coins, $370,090.

The monthly comparative statement of government receipts and expenditures shows that for the month of September, 1902, the total receipts were $48,580,281, an increase of over $4,000,000, as compared with September, 1901. The expenditures for September were $37,554,793, leaving a surplus for the month of $11,000,000.

The present financial condition of Guatemala, due in part to the consequences of the recent earthquakes and also to the low prices for coffee, the principal export, has caused widespread commercial depression in that country, according to a report to the state department from Consul General McNally at Guatemala City, under date of Aug. 29.

The state department has been informed by United States Minister Powell, at Port au Prince, that the blockade decree, issued on Sept. 13 by the provisional government of Hayti does not apply to Port de Paix. It was at this point that the interests of the American Fruit company were endangered. Commander Patch, of the Montgomery, will investigate the reported disturbances.

Accidental Happenings.

George Gilmore choked to death while eating in a cafe at Livingston, Mont. Doctors were called, but they were too late to save his life.

D. Jido, a Black sea shipowner, invited a party of guests on board a new yacht. The vessel was caught in a squall and capsized, drowning twenty.

A severe typhoon swept along the Japanese coast Sunday. A number of Yokohama steamers were driven to shore, and it is feared that there was a great loss of life among the fishermen.

Twenty-six persons were killed and twenty injured in a railroad wreck near Douai, France, due to the carelessness of the switchman. The train was an express running from Lille to Chalons.

A west-bound passenger train on the Wabash railway collided near La Porte, Ind., with an east-bound freight train. The crews of both locomotives jumped and escaped with minor injuries. The combination baggage and smoking car was telescoped, but none of the passengers was injured.

The British ship Claverdon, which arrived at San Francisco from Hamburg, reports having passed through a hurricane with a loss of five of her crew. The storm was encountered Aug. 27. Everything movable was washed overboard. All the sails with the exception of the lower mainsail were carried away.

Sin and Sinners.

TROOPS PREVENT RIOT.

Negro Shoots a Striker and Starts an Uproar.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Oct. 5. — There was an exciting time at the Nottingham mine of the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal company last night. A negro deputy came out of the stockade, when, it is alleged, he was assaulted by some strikers. The deputy shot into the crowd. A bullet struck Joseph Yarkman, a striker, in the abdomen. After firing the shot the negro retreated to the stockade. Soon a large crowd gathered and they threatened to tear down the stockade and take the negro out and hang him. Col. Dougherty of the Ninth regiment dispatched six companies to the scene at once. The troops arrived just in time to prevent a serious riot. The mob was dispersed. The negro deputy who did the shooting will be handed over to the civil authorities to-day. The news from Washington that no agreement was reached at the conference had a depressing effect on all interests here. Some of the local operators who were interviewed think that the miners, now that all hope of arbitration seems to be gone, will gradually return to work. The strike leaders are of the opinion that the struggle will continue and that the cold weather will yet compel the operators to make concessions.

MINISTER ASSAULTED.

Set Upon and Chased by a Gang of Rowdies.

Webster City, Iowa, Oct. 5.—E. M. Knox and a gang of five rowdy companions, beat Rev. Paul Schroeder and chased him up and down the streets of Randall last evening. The rowdies are now under arrest, charged with assault and battery. Their treatment of the minister was caused by the reverend gentleman's interference to break up a street fight which Knox and his companions were participating in. The matter has caused a decided sensation. Rev. Paul Schroeder is pastor of the Norwegian Lutheran church.

ONE KILLED IN WRECK.

Accident to a Great Northern Freight Near Lakota.

Lakota, N. D., Oct. 5. — A Great Northern freight was wrecked here and Brakeman James Evans of Fond du Lac, Wis., was caught between the engine and tender and crushed to death. He was on the platform of the engine and was in the act of jumping. No other person was hurt, though five hoboes were mixed up in the wreck. The engine was derailed by striking a horse which had wandered on the track. Twelve cars of lumber and wood were ditched.

KILLED HIS SON.

Then Attacks His Wife and Is Believed to Have Suicided.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Oct. 5.—Noah Halo, a market gardener living six miles from here, shot and killed his son Frank and badly injured his wife, beating her over the head with the butt of the gun with which he had just killed his son. The murderer then fled to the woods, whither officers and a posse pursued him. About noon a shot was heard from the forest, and it is thought Halo committed suicide. Domestic quarrels led to the tragedy.

BABY BURNED.

Frightful Death of a Two-Year-Old Baby.

Sawyer, N. D., Oct. 5.—The home of Jacob Schwab of this place was burned to the ground and the two-year-old baby was burned to death. It was alone in the house with a three-year-old boy. Mrs. Schwab was over a hill working in a garden and did not see the fire until the house was an entire mass of flames. Mr. Schwab was away. The body was taken out. The head, arms and feet were burned entirely off.

FALL MAY KILL HIM.

Eau Claire Man Tumbles From Second Floor of Hotel.

Eau Claire, Wis., Oct. 5. — At 10 o'clock last night John Dawson of this city, an elderly retired land dealer, fell over the balustrade on the second floor of the Hart hotel to the office floor below. He was taken to the hospital unconscious. Injuries to his head may prove fatal.

FOUND GUILTY OF MURDER.

Man Who Administered Knock-out Drops Is Convicted.

Murder and Suicide.

Springfield, Ill., Oct. 5.—In a fit of jealousy Luther McNeer shot and killed his wife, Essie McNeer, and then committed suicide at his home yesterday by firing three bullets into his own breast.

OF INTEREST TO TAXPAYERS

Constitutional Amendments and Their Importance to the People of Minnesota.

Religion and taxation have been the most fruitful of all sources of war and national trouble. It is fortunate, therefore, for Minnesota that there seems no disposition at the coming election to make taxation a party issue. It is, however, one of the most important subjects upon which the people will have to vote.

When the tax commission was named to formulate a wholly new code for the state and report on it in nine months to an extra session of the legislature which was expected to act upon and pass it in twenty days, many, perhaps most of the people of this great commonwealth thought the tax problem was settled. Students of taxation, however, either smiled or, if wiser, spoke approvingly, hoping that this start on the road might result in much good. The commission's report truly says: "At no time in modern history has the thought of students of economic subjects been as earnestly directed to the subject of taxation as at present."

There is no doubt in any one's mind that the present system of taxation in Minnesota is antiquated. The state has outgrown it. It is crude, works injustice, is unequal and does not meet the present needs of the state. But what the remedy should be, how in so rich a state with such varied industries and sources of wealth property should be reached and taxed is a question on which few would agree. It is therefore impossible to make it a party question and it is wise that neither party has attempted it. There was a day when there was little wealth in Minnesota outside the farm.

The mode of life and property of the people were equally simple and primitive and the taxation question was easy of solution. But now this is one of the richest states in the Union and its interests are among the most complex.

This subject of taxation is before the people of Minnesota as a result of the tax commission report. Naturally hampered as they were by limitations of the constitution, even as able men as composed that commission could not frame a bill that would meet the situation. As was said, tax experts knew from the first this could not be done, but hoped for good results from the agitation of the subject sure to follow the report. Certainly those good results have followed. The extra session with the commissioners' report as a text, was a great school in taxation. Hearing after hearing was had in joint session and in open sessions before the tax committees, at which representatives of the state's varied interests were heard, where the farmer and banker, franchise magnate and tax student, the practical man of business and the theorist gave their views on taxation. From all this mass of testimony the members of the house and senate and, through the newspaper reports, the state at large, secured a great amount of information in regard to the subject of taxation and a surprising interest was aroused in the subject. Anything as to taxation was read carefully and eagerly and still is.

The immediate result of all this process of education was an amendment to the constitution which is to be voted upon by the people Nov. 4. It certainly is creditable to the legislature that this amendment was treated purely as a business measure. At no time in either house or senate was the vote in any sense divided on party lines, and the final passage of the amendment was by a practically unanimous vote in both houses. There was but one vote against it in the senate and three in the house. Such unanimity, considering the subject, is remarkable and is in the strongest kind of testimony as to the excellence of the amendment.

It is of interest to consider this amendment in connection with the tax commission's report, which is one of the most important state documents ever submitted to a Minnesota legislature. In framing the amendment which will be voted upon at this election, a special regard was evidently paid to the suggestions in the report. For instance, the report considers quite exhaustively the subject of taxation of mortgages and says that the present constitution made it impossible to handle the subject as they thought wise.

The amendment makes it possible to cure this evil by a recording fee, or light uniform tax on all mortgages when recorded.

Again the report says: "No marked reform in the taxation of personal property can be effected until the legislature is afforded greater freedom of action in the matter of legislation upon the subject." This is clearly along the line of the modern methods to leave the legislature so far as possible free to fix a system of taxation subject only to public opinion. There is danger in going too far in this direction, and the amendment, as it goes to the people, is considered by the tax student as on the whole a wise compromise in this regard. It does not bind down the legislature too closely, nor limit its powers too narrowly. It rather marks out a course by suggestion than by set limitations. It says rather what may be done than what can't be done, and gives as a rule an alternative in method. The exemptions also, are not wide, being only schools, burial grounds, public hospitals and libraries, colleges, charities and church property when used for religious purposes, and public property. These all, save a very few, will concede should be free from taxation as none are profit-sharing and they are strictly for the public good. Also the limit to which the personal property of each individual may be exempt is increased to $300, but only one member of a family can take advantage of this.

In the matter of an income tax the commission's report says: "Every system of taxation is deficient which does not provide for a reasonable income tax. Minnesota would take a proud step forward by wholly abrogating a tax on credits and adopting a progressive income tax." Later it quite fully discusses the subject, and in conclusion again says: "While it is not permissible to impose an income tax under the present constitution the subject is too important to be disregarded in the deliberations of the commission or omitted from this report. It is due the legislature and the people of the state that they be advised of the views of the commission on the subject." On no branch of the subject of taxation has public opinion changed more here in America than on this. Where it was formerly looked upon as justifiable only as a last resort as a war measure, it is now generally approved. Now, even the wealthy, while naturally opposed in the main to an income tax, admit its justice and that the money product of a man's brain is just as properly subject to taxation as the product of the labor of his hands. The proposed amendment permits an income tax if the people demand it and puts Minnesota in this regard at the front of progressive states in taxation. But it does not make this form of taxation obligatory, but leaves the legislature to say if personal property of any class, credits, stocks, bonds or tangible personalty shall be taxed on the income or on value.

Inheritances is another kind of estate that has never been successfully reached here, though in the states furtherest in advance in taxation matters, estates which come through inheritance are taxed when they pass through probate. Such an estate is one that comes not through our own effort, but by the accident of birth, and as the public is at the expense in each county of maintaining a separate office for the protection of such property and of the rights of heirs, it is but considered just that at least the largest estates should pay a special tax for such protection. This is recommended in the report and provided for in the amendment.

The report is exhaustive in its consideration of the taxation of franchise companies.

It points out that the tangible property of a public franchise company often does not begin to represent the actual value of the company's property. That with street railway, gas, electric lighting, water, telephone and such companies, the greater value may be in the franchise itself.

There are two methods of reaching such companies. At present only their tangible property, such as cars, tracks, poles, wires, plants, machinery, real estate, etc., are taxed, but the amendment permits the reaching of their other property by either of two ways: By getting at the actual value of the franchise, which is the right the law gives such a company to do business, or by a gross earnings tax. The latter is simply an income tax applied to such corporations, and is the same method that is now used in taxing steam railways.

Other advanced stands taken in this amendment are also along lines proposed by the commission. For instance again, the report says: "Public interests would undoubtedly be best guarded under a constitution which divests a legislature of the power of entering into a contract with respect to taxation. Every tax system should rest upon the rules of uniformity and equality and a legislature should not therefore be vested with authority to violate them."

Along these lines the amendment first of all specifically prohibits the surrender suspending or contracting away of the power of legislation. This makes it impossible to fix a form of taxation for corporations, or for any other class of persons, or property, that a future legislature could not change. It provides further that all taxes for "state purposes" shall be uniform throughout the state. The word "state" is used because of the clause which provides that when a special tax levy for state purposes is not necessary that then there shall be "county option" in taxation. In view of the fact that the revenue tax will probably be reduced next year to less than one mill and that the increased tax on railroad gross earnings alone would amount to a half of the total revenue tax raised, it is not at all improbable that in the very near future there may be no direct tax levy for state purposes; that all state taxes will come from the railroads, franchise companies and inheritance taxes, foreign corporation and income taxes. Then each county would be free to assess and tax its own property in its own way, according to its own local interests, to meet its own local expenditures for roads, bridges, schools and general expenses. This is again along the most advanced thought of many tax students and places Minnesota among the states such men are eagerly watching for developments.

So it is that the passage of this proposed tax amendment is being watched with interest by public men in all states. The proposed amendments and there are four of them, will come first on the ballot. This tax amendment will read as follows:

"Amendment to sections one (1), two (2) and three (3) of article nine (9) of the constitution, providing for a tax on real estate mortgages and on the franchises of corporations, and upon the income of corporations and individuals in excess of the sum of one thousand dollars ($1,000) per year."—"Yes."—"No." Each elector voting upon such proposed amendments shall place a cross (X) mark in the space opposite the word "Yes" or "No" as he favors or opposes it. And just here comes in a peculiar consequence of the constitutional provision which requires that no amendment to the state constitution can be carried or adopted unless it receives a majority of all the votes cast at the election. This makes it necessary that to carry this or any amendment over half of all those who vote at the election shall put the cross (X) opposite the "Yes," for those who do not mark the amendment at all are counted with those who mark "No."

For example, if there were 200,000 votes cast in all at the election and on 100,000 of them the voters had voted for the amendment and not one vote was marked against it, yet it would not carry for it would need just one more vote to make a majority of all the votes cast. So the importance of every one voting on the amendment who favors these changes in the methods of taxation can easily be seen. In no other state, we believe, is there any such requirement for passing a constitutional amendment, yet it is not a bad idea to make the people study such a question and actually register their votes upon it, if they wish it adopted.

Oats for Fowls.

We notice that a contemporary says that wheat is undoubtedly the best grain for poultry. We must differ from that opinion. We believe the grain most adapted to the development of chicks is oats. It is indeed true that birds have to be accustomed to eat oats before they will eat them constantly and in large quantities, but once accustomed to them they eat them with great avidity. Naturally fowls prefer corn to oats. But habit reverses this preference. The writer remembers one case where he had kept oats from his hens for some days. They had been accustomed to that grain for months. When oats were again given it was in the form of a mixture of corn and oats. To his surprise the hens picked out the oats in preference to the corn, eating the latter only after the oats had disappeared. One objection raised against oats is that they sometimes puncture with their sharp points the tender membrane in the crops of young birds and even pass through the skin. The writer fed oats for years and never experienced any such mishap with his poultry. It might be possible in case half-starved birds were fed oats and then watered. But oats should be kept before the fowls all the time, and they should be permitted to pick at them at their leisure. They never then eat too many. In addition to the nutriment in the oats there seems to be a stimulant which the scientists call avoine. This is thought to be a valuable part of the oat as a feed.

New Stock and Disease.

Every farmer should realize the risk he takes when he imports into his flock stock from other flocks. Contagious diseases are almost always brought in this way. There are some flocks that are free from lice and mites as well as of disease. When a farmer has secured this condition of things he should go very slow about increasing the number of his fowls through purchase. It is therefore best to increase the flock through raising the birds. This may take longer than to increase it by purchase, but it will give a bigger profit. It is not uncommon to have a whole flock swept away by some malady introduced through careless purchase of new birds. The writer had a poultry house that had been free from lice and mites for years. He regarded it quite wonderful that he had completely exterminated the red mites. But in an unguarded moment he purchased the entire flock of a man about to move away. The result was that the red mites were introduced and caused more loss to the original flock than the whole purchased flock was worth.

Important Points in Poultry Care.

Cleanliness is essential to success with poultry. Young chicks should not be allowed to eat stale or sour foods. The drinking vessels or fountains should be watched closely, and should be always kept full of pure water. Keep them free from bad odors by scalding with hot water occasionally. As the fowls approach maturity food should be given them in such a manner that they will take exercise. Plenty of straw or leaves should be put in their houses, and a little grain of some kind scattered therein several times a day to keep them scratching. Be careful not to overfeed or they will become too fat and will not lay. Avoid feeding too much corn in the warm months of the year. During the winter months it can be fed in the evening, as it supplies more warmth than any other food. For morning feed alternate soft mash with wheat or oats. Give also an occasional feed of vegetables either raw or cooked. They will be beneficial and much relished by the fowls.—J. R. Brabazon.

Poultry Gives Quick Returns.

One of the principal advantages in poultry production is that returns come quickly. With the exception of strawberries there is practically no line of small fruits on which you can begin to realize inside of three years; a milch cow does not approach her full power of production short of three and a half years; apple trees do not begin to bear freely short of seven or eight years; and if you go in for forest reproduction, a realization upon the investment does not come inside the life of half or even a whole generation. How is it with the hen? Three weeks from the setting of the hen you have a batch of chickens; from four to four and a half months from hatching, the cockerels are ready for the market, and in five to five and a half months the pullets will begin to lay.—A. G. Gilbert.

Farm Poultry.

The vigor of farm poultry must be kept up in order to have profitable stock, as weak, inbred stock does not thrive or lay well. There is a mistake made in calling for extremely heavy weights in a breed. Select birds about the standard weight for the chosen breed, and get them thick-fleshed and solid. Avoid a knock-kneed or crooked-back bird, and a low comb is preferable in dressed birds. The active, alert hen is the layer. Select eggs from your best layers for hatching, and use pure breeds by all means, as they dress more uniformly, and will give best all-around satisfaction.—Myron A. Gee in Farmers' Review.

It is uncommon sense that counts.

One Way of Getting Good Butter.

S. E. Oaks: It has been and is now in the majority of gathered creameries the custom to make a poor grade of butter, and it is generally caused by a poor manager and poor board of directors. It does not make any difference how good a buttermaker may be in the creamery, he can not make good butter from poor cream. But if he is backed by the board of directors and they will let him grade the cream, he can then make good butter. In order to grade the cream properly he should have vats enough so he can have one to put the poor cream in and should have a small tank in the wash room for the drivers to put rinsings of their cans in, and also to rinse their floats in. He should not let them rinse them over the cream vats as they do in some factories I visited last summer. You should find out right away where the poor cream is coming from and go and tell the patron how to care for it, and until he does take good care of it and keep it sweet so that it will not be "off flavor," he should be docked from 15 per cent to 20 per cent of the cream. Do not take this off all the patrons by putting all the cream together and making a poor grade of butter and getting a low price for it, but make two grades of butter and get the highest price for the best and get as much for the poorer grade as most of the creameries get for their butter.—Farmers' Review.

War on Milk Preservatives.

Borax and various other chemicals are used in the preservation of meats and some other foods. Generally the argument for their use is that they preserve the foods and do not injure the eaters, as they are used in small quantities. This may or may not be true, but it is true that in milk no preservation should be used. The agent of a borax preservative company once called on the Farmers' Review and protested against the constant attacks on the preservatives by the Farmers' Review. He claimed that he could prove that when used to preserve bacon preservatives of the borax kind were not harmful. He was asked "how about milk?" He said that no preservative should be used in milk and that his company had freely said that milk was not a food article that should be preserved by borax or anything else. Yet borax is being constantly sold for the preservation of milk. Invalids and children are the principal sufferers. This is from two reasons. First, they are weaker than vigorous adults; second, they use far larger quantities of milk. The milkman that uses preservatives in milk does an act that approaches the criminal.—Farmers' Review.

What Do Your Cows Pay You?

A creameryman of the Elgin district made the statement that among his patrons were some who did not now and never had realized more than $35 as an average per year from each of the cows of their herds. He told of one patron who takes the trouble to keep an account of the feed he gives his cows and the receipts from milk and his average is $35. One other patron, who has none but common cows, realized no more than the above sum on his cows until he decided to accept the advice of the creameryman on the care and feed he should give them. He was one of those patrons who, if he wanted to stay in town until 10 o'clock at night he did so, and the feeding of his half dozen cows was done after he got home. He had no particular knowledge about feeding, but when he finally came to believe that he could make money by following the creameryman's advice, he went to work to learn and do his work properly. He succeeded in bringing his common cows up to being $55 instead of $35 cows.—Chicago Dairy Produce.

Look After the Hand Separators.

No good thing is a success unless looked after. It is no argument against hand separators to say that unless they are taken care of they will in a year or so become unserviceable. One man urges against them that he has known people that did not wash their separators more than once a week, and that in the meantime the separators were a point of multiplication for all kinds of ferments and perhaps disease germs that got into them. But no agent of a hand separator would want to sell a hand separator if he supposed the buyer would use so little intelligence in its care and handling. We are in a state of chaos as regards our dairy matters, and it is only slowly that we are working into a condition of order. But we do not believe that the hand separator is at all the cause of disorder.

Another Milking Machine.

From Victoria, Australia, comes a report that a new milking machine is being tried there. In a recent trial it took five minutes to milk a cow, four cows being milked at the same time. The cups that fit over the teats of the cows are made on the pulsation plan, and reproduce the pulsation movement of a calf's tongue in the milking. The force used is steam, and the pressure 40 or 50 pounds. The steam pumps out the air and forms a vacuum in the milking pail. By a momentary admission of air the pulsation is produced. It is claimed that the machines are very easily cleaned.

A LITTLE TOO LATE.

Belated Suggestions for Newport Amusements.

Luckily the Newport season is nearing an end. If it wasn't, if there was yet time, we might expect that in their strenuous efforts to outdo one another the society dames would resort to extreme measures. For instance:

One of them might construct a garden on towers and call it the New Hanging Gardens of the Hesperides, and then give a garden party with captive balloons for elevators.

Some other dame could dig a canal through her domain, with real dykes and wooden shoes and canal boats, and windmills operated by perfumed hot air, and give a reception a la Hollandaise.

Another idea would be to lay out a section of the Garden of Eden, with all the animals from some big menagerie running wild behind a heavy wire partition, and then call it "An Evening at Papa Adam's," with all the guests in Watteau costumes.

A real cute scheme would be to have a duplicate of the ark and give a "Father Noah at Home," with the guests assuming the disguises of the animals. If the ark could be made to roll a little so the guests would feel qualmish, it would add greatly to the amusement. Then at a certain hour there could be a Noachian german on deck with railroad stocks and government bonds for favors.

REFLECTION ON THE JUDGE.

Ultra Pious Lawyer Drew Upon Himself Wrath of Justice Gray.

Justice Gray of the United States supreme court, who has just retired, had a long experience on the bench before going to Washington. Many years ago, when he was a member of the supreme court of Massachusetts, he had an amusing experience with a certain Boston lawyer, an exceedingly pious man with a taste for evangelization, who had his letterheads printed with a verse from scripture in large type following the name and address. On one occasion, having to make an ex-parte preliminary argument before Justice Gray in chambers, in which it would be necessary to disclose certain parts of his client's case which he desired not to make generally known until the trial, he wrote the judge a note asking that he be allowed an opportunity to speak to him in private. He was somewhat chagrined when his note came back to him with a scrawl across the bottom: "Request denied, with a suggestion from the court that counsel base future petitions on a more appropriate citation."

For a moment he could not make out the meaning of this, as he was not aware that he had quoted any law, but glancing up the page he discovered that he had written his page on a letterhead bearing this text:

"Ye are bought with a price."

How New Yorkers Spend Sunday.

How does New York spend Sunday? What does this city of 4,000,000 souls, not more than half a million of whom are in the country, do to pass the hot day of rest in the months when "everybody is out of town?" Nowhere else is there such variety open to the man whose purse is neither deep nor heavy; to the family which has to take account of its coins because it has little of the paper denomination—the large bills of commerce—to trouble itself with. For half a dollar it can sail 100 or 150 miles on the most beautiful river in the world, or as many miles on a charming inland sea, or half as far on the salt Atlantic itself. For 10 cents each way it can go to the seashore, and for half that sum has the choice of 60 splendid trolley rides in as many directions. To all these advantages the New Yorker is alive—at least if the evidence of deserted streets affords any index.—New York Sun.

A Famous Oak Tree.

The oak tree under whose branches Abraham Lincoln and Stephen A. Douglas held a political debate in 1868 is still standing in Bloomington, Ill., in the yard of E. M. Bowen. It appears to be centuries old. In 1858 the tree marked an inclosure then known as Henshaw's pasture, a former public meeting place. George Henshaw, the owner, was a Democrat. He arranged to have the debate there, being an admirer of Douglas. The two candidates for United States senator had engaged in a series of debates and the one held in Bloomington attracted voters from far and near. A platform for the candidates was constructed directly under the boughs of this old oak. Its shade protected the audience as well as the speakers. Only three men are now living in Bloomington who heard the famous orators. They are John Dawson, Adam Guthrie and W. S. Depew.

Tonsorial Art.

Even tonsorial art is long, if we may judge by the detailed report of a recent congress of the masters of this craft. The germless shave was discussed and also the far reaching influence of hair food, and the paradoxical practice of burnishing a red mustache with brilliantine. A scientific paper, explanating the esoteric mysteries of pushing the razor against the grain and of shaving a man two days under the skin, was read amid storms of applause by a master of tonsorial phrase, who also admonished his brothers to consider inviolate any husk of information dropped by the shaver, and above all other things to religiously practice the arts of silence.—Judge.

SOLD HIS SHOOTING BOOTS.

Man Fooled His Wife on the Price, But the Result Was Sad.

Banks knew very well that he could not afford to pay $20 for a pair of shooting boots, but he reasoned with himself, after the sophistical manner of those who know the joys of extravagance, that his twice-a-year trip to his Long Island club for two days of duck shooting was really the only luxury he allowed himself; and his economies in other directions deserved reward.

So Banks bought the boots, and told his wife a nice little story about a friend who had struck a bargain in boots and had let him have a pair "for practically nothing." The boots were not worth much anyhow, he carelessly explained, and congratulated himself on having safely and sagaciously handled a delicate situation.

When Banks came back from his next shooting trip he was tired and sleepy, and threw his new boots, all muddy as they were, into a closet, to be cleaned when he should have more energy.

"And what do you think happened to those boots!" he said two days later to a group of sympathetic friends on 'change. "A junk peddler came around the next day and my wife sold him my $20 boots for fifty cents. She knew they were of no special value, as I had said so, and thought she'd done well to get fifty cents for them."

"And what did you say?" asked one man, betwixt pity and amusement.

"Say? What could I say? I became hysterical."—New York Mail and Express.

What It Was Like.

Dr. Nachtigal, the celebrated African explorer, was the guest of a rich Hamburg merchant. The merchant's son, a young man of a somewhat sentimental temperament, said, among other things, that his dearest wish was to ride across the desert on the back of a camel. He thought such a ride must be very poetical indeed.

"My dear young friend," replied the explorer, "I can tell you how you can get a partial idea of what riding a camel on the deserts of Africa is like. Take an office stool, screw it up as high as possible, and put it into a wagon without any springs; then seat yourself on the stool and have it driven over rocky and uneven ground during the hottest weather of July or August and after you have not had anything to eat or drink for twenty-four hours, and then you will get a faint idea of how delightfully poetic it is to ride on a camel in the wilds of Africa."

RAPID GROWTH OF A PUPPY.

Unbaked Bread Conclusively Proved Unfit for Food.

A few months ago a young man who is employed in one of the railroad offices of this city bought a very small pointer pup, says the Morning Oregonian. The dog grew steadily, but mainly in the head and legs, having no body to speak of. The lady of the household, like many newly married women, was making a thorough test of her husband's digestive powers by baking bread for the family. The pointer pup was now taking on the appearance of a genuine dog, and put in most of his time looking for something to eat. He found just what he was looking for.

Mrs. Newly-Wed had placed a pan containing three loaves in the state of dough under the kitchen stove and had gone upstairs for a few minutes. Like many new bread makers she was generous in the use of yeast, and her bread was usually lighter than a sponge. When she returned the dough had been transferred from the pan to the interior of the pointer, who was already showing signs of distress. The yeast was getting in its deadly work and gradually the dog's body began to swell. The head, which had formerly been the most prominent feature of his makeup, was quite eclipsed beside the bursting body. The legs looked like toothpicks supporting a beer keg. The poor pointer was now writhing in agony, and after several neighbors had proposed various strenuous measures, an application of saleratus water brought relief.

What Root Said.

A man in public life, noted for his brusqueness of speech, was under informal discussion in cabinet circles.

"There's one thing to be said in his favor, however," said Secretary Wilson, "and that is, he never importunes the departments to get promotions or positions for his friends."

"That's readily explained," commented Secretary Root, "he hasn't any."—Saturday Evening Post.

Origin of Briar Pipes.

In one respect Erica arborea is the most remarkable of all the heaths that are hardy in Great Britain, for it attains the dimensions of a small tree. In the Isle of Wight—perhaps elsewhere—it has been known to grow twenty feet high, with a trunk twenty-nine inches in circumference. It occurs wild and in considerable abundance along the Mediterranean coast region between Genoa and Marseilles, the wood being used largely in the manufacture of the so-called "Briar" tobacco pipes—"Briar" in this case being a corruption of the French word "bruyere."

WHEAT LANDS IN EUROPE.

Broad Belt Extends from Hungary Into Siberia.

We are told that the south European wheat lands constitute a broad belt of prairie 600 to 700 miles in average width, beginning in Hungary and extending northeastward to the Ural mountains and then westward into Siberia to unknown boundaries. On the north and west are the "gray forest lands" and on the south and west are salt and alkaline districts and sandy wastes, and finally the Caucasus and the Ural mountains.

By both chemical and mechanical analyses the soil is shown to be remarkably similar to that of our own prairies, also commonly known by the similar term of "black loam." The depth is on an average probably a little greater than that of our prairie soil. From a chemical standpoint the soils of the two regions are similarly characterized (1) by an exceptionally large amount of thoroughly humified organic matter, (2) by the presence of an unusual proportion of phosphoric acid, and (3) by a great amount, comparatively, of lime, potash, and other alkalies. These soils are therefore alkaline, while others, especially of forest regions, are acid.

It is well known, says the Export Implement Age, that the substances thus more abundant in these soils than in others are just those usually needed by the wheat plant.

POKER GAME FOR FAIR ONES.

Indianapolis Women Play Game Skillfully and for Big Stakes.

A coterie of well-to-do women in Indianapolis have become so addicted to the game of poker that they regularly meet for play nearly every afternoon in the week. Their rendezvous is at the Hotel English, and a dollar limit is the smallest one allowed. With the exception that there is no "rake-off" it is a full-fledged professional game with no difference between it and that patronized by the sterner sex. The women, it is reported, handle their cards carefully, paying strict attention to business, and, in addition, the usual poker hands as baptized by Hoyle, "dogs," "cats," "jump-ups" and other intricate hands are played with a skill and a nerve which characterize the women as veterans. The game is not open to the public and it only runs when there is enough to "sit in."

The players, as a rule, are limited to married women, who have telephones in their homes, and who are notified by wire when there is "something doing." There are no pink tea features, the players getting together solely to play cards for money. It is pure, cold-blooded business, without sentiment, and only the best players and those who always cash their losses are let in. None of the cheap players, those willing, for instance, to limit the wager to 25 cents, are invited.

The Kitchener of Morocco.

Last month the editor of the Mexican Herald received a letter from the Kaid, Sir Henry Maclean, commander in chief of the armies of his majesty the sultan of Morocco, requesting his good offices in procuring a rich and handsome specimen of the typical Mexican saddle, known as the silla vaquera, as a gift to the emperor of Morocco. It was stipulated that the saddle should be of the finest Mexican workmanship, with silver trimmings, heavy spurs and all the paraphernalia. Several hundred dollars was expended in securing a caparison fit for a potentate who is a judge of proper horse furnishings. The saddle has been shipped, and should be at Fez, the capital of Morocco, within two months. It must first go to Tangier, where the British minister to Morocco lives, and that diplomat will forward it by camel to Fez. The Kaid Maclean, who destines this gift to the sultan, is a Scotchman, who has effected wonders in the disciplining of the armies of Morocco. He has been to Morocco what Lord Kitchener, as Sirdar, was to the Egyptian army—a great organizer and disciplinarian.

TROOPS ON GUARD

CALLED OUT TO MAINTAIN ORDER IN TOWN OF GLENS FALLS, NEW YORK.

POLICE FORCE WAS POWERLESS

DISTURBANCE CAUSED BY SYMPATHIZERS OF STRIKING STREET CAR MEN.

THROW SCARE INTO THE RIOTERS

SOLDIERS RESPOND TO STONE-THROWING WITH VOLLEYS OF BULLETS.

Glens Falls, N. Y., Oct. 7.—As a result of renewed activity by the striking motormen of the Hudson Valley Electric Railway company soldiers of the national guard are again guarding the peace of this town, and, though yesterday saw no rioting, an uneasy feeling prevailed.

The riotous mob which held possession of Glens Falls for four hours Saturday night was composed of sympathizers with the strikers and the police force was powerless against it. The riot was precipitated by the arrest of a man who made insulting remarks to one of the non-union employes, and each car passing through was the object of a demonstration. At Cool's switch four cars were stalled at one time. They were soon abandoned, the non-union motormen and conductors placing themselves in the hands of the police for protection or deserting to the strikers. The car and a fusilade of bricks and stones hurled at the cars. Conductor Currier of Brooklyn was so badly injured by rough handling and by being hit in the head with missiles that he is in the hospital in a serious condition. The last car from the north, which came into town about 11 o'clock, carried mail sacks, which were removed to the railway offices. About this time Company K, national guard, under Capt. Mott, made its appearance and, marching to the jail, took the motormen and conductors under protection. In marching to the cars demonstrations were made and the militia used the butts of their guns and threatened to shoot several times.

Windows Were Smashed

Under a heavy guard of soldiers the seven stalled cars were run down toward the power house, followed by a mob. In the outskirts of the city riotous demonstrations were made and stone-throwing indulged in, to which the soldiers responded shooting in the air, however. Further on a pole had been sawed in two, and, falling on a car, delayed further progress. Chief of Police Patterson fired at two persons who attempted to prevent him closing a window in the jail and who threatened him with revolvers. He thinks he hit one man. Mud was thrown at cars and passengers in Fort Edward yesterday.

There was no rioting last night as the company did not attempt to move any cars, Capt. Mott being unable to furnish enough men to guard them and the property of the railway. The militia and police compelled everyone to move along. Several unruly persons refused to move, insulted the militiamen and were promptly knocked down by the soldiers. The police then made several arrests.

CASEY'S STRICT ORDERS.

No Troops or Ammunition to Be Carried on Isthmian Railroad.

Colon, Colombia, Oct. 7.—Under recent orders issued by Rear Admiral Casey, who is at Panama on the battleship Wisconsin, no Colombian military officer or troops or ammunition will be allowed to be transported across the isthmus by rail unless by special permission. This order ignores the passes issued by the railroad company.

Exchange at Barranquilla is rising by leaps and bounds. An American dollar is now worth $85 dollars in Colombian paper currency.

MINISTER A PRISONER.

Senor La Forest Is Now in the Hands of the Liberals.

Kingston, Jam., Oct. 7.—The British steamer Para, belonging to the Royal Mail service, arrived here yesterday from Colon. She brings reports of a serious situation at Santa Marta, Colombia, whither the British cruiser Retribution has proceeded for the purpose of affording protection to the railroad there and other British interests. According to the reports brought by the Para, fighting is still going on at Santa Marta between the Colombian revolutionists and the government forces. The Magdalena river is completely cut off from communication. The revolutionists hold Teneriffe, near Santa Marta, and have four quick-firing guns at this point. Last week the force at Teneriffe captured Senor La Forest, Colombian minister of state, who was coming from Bogota.

Killed in Running Fight.

Gering, Neb., Oct. 7.—Clarence Fullerton, a farmer, was shot and killed yesterday by Walter Houstin in a running fight in which Fullerton was the pursuer. Stories circulated by Houstin about Fullerton and his housekeeper, it is said, caused the fight.

Texans Displeased.

Columbus, Tex., Oct. 7—A mob from Eagle Lake took Utt Duncan, a negro, from the county jail here and hanged him. Late at night Duncan, improperly clad, entered the telephone office at Eagle Lake, where Miss Lena Harris, the night operator, was alone.

Prince Cut Up.

Athens, Oct. 7.—Crown Prince Constantin of Greece was painfully injured by the overturning of a motor car in which he was riding near Villa Tator. His head and face were cut.

FUNERAL OF EMILE ZOLA.

French Author Followed to the Grave by Many Thousands.

Paris, Oct. 7.—The remains of Emile Zola were laid at rest yesterday with simple but impressive ceremonies. It was such a funeral as Zola himself would have wished, without pomp, but with the serried ranks of thousands of workingmen, many accompanied by their wives, sorrowfully marching behind his coffin. Municipal guard, mounted and on foot, lined the route, but except for a company of infantry, which rendered military honors to the body as it was carried from the house to the hearse, they were there as guardians of order and not as participants in the ceremony. Former Capt. Dreyfus marched in the funeral cortege, according to the authority of the prefect of police, but he passed completely unnoticed by the crowd. A little distance behind him came Mme. Dreyfus, accompanied by her father. Dreyfus sent a handsome wreath, which was placed beside the coffin. Among the masses of spectators which lined the route there were probably many who were not admirers of Zola, but the deep respect for the dead which is inherent in Frenchmen prevented a discordant note.

MOROS IN UTTER ROUT.

Forty Forts Captured and Enemy Defeated.

Manila, Oct. 7. — Capt. John J. Pershing's column has completely routed the Maciu Moros in the island of Mindanao, killing or wounding a hundred of them and capturing and destroying forty forts. Two Americans were wounded.

Tuesday the Moros retired to their largest and strongest fort on the lake shore, and Wednesday Capt. Pershing attacked them with artillery. The Moros abandoned the fort early Thursday, after fifteen hours' bombardment, and Thursday Capt. Pershing destroyed the rest of the forts and returned to Camp Vicars.

It is believed the moral effect of the defeat of the Moros will be great. Gen. Davis has ordered that hostilities be stayed in orderer to permit the sultan of Bacolod and other hostile sultans to make peace. The sultans of Maciu were confident of their ability to defeat the Americans and vowed before the fight to enter slavery voluntarily if they themselves were defeated.

WILL NOT REVIEW THE PARADE.

President Roosevelt Must Not Again Tax His Strength.

Washington, Oct. 7. — President Roosevelt will not review the parade of the G. A. R., at which it was expected he would occupy the reviewing stand in front of the White House. The official statement issued Saturday night that he would have to exercise extreme care indicated that it would be impossible for him to review the veterans, and the direct statement that he will not do so was made on an official authority yesterday. The president has not yet been able to rest his foot on the floor and his physicians have forbidden him again to overtax his strength as he did the past week.

OFFER OF COAL LANDS.

Kentucky Land Offered to the Government Without Compensation.

New York, Oct. 7.—Another offer of coal lands has been made to President Roosevelt to relieve a possible coal famine. Mrs. Johanna C. Samuels, formerly of Nashville, Tenn., and Washington, D. C., but who has been in New York several months organizing a railroad and other projects, has written to President Roosevelt offering him a tract of mining land in Kentucky, to be mined by the government without compensation to the donor during the continuance of the strike.

MAY AND BRADLEE WED.

Cablegram From Buenos Ayres Bears the News.

New York, Oct. 7.—A cable dispatch was received in this city announcing the marriage at Buenos Ayres of Putnam Bradlee Strong and May Yohe. The dispatch was addressed to Emanuel H. Friend, who acted as their counsel here and was as follows:

"Married Buenos Ayres, second.
—"May Strong."

ONE BRIBER CONVICTED.

Robert McClure Snyder Must Go to Prison.

St. Louis, Oct. 7.—Robert McClure Snyder, banker and promoter, was convicted of bribery in the criminal court and was sentenced to five years' imprisonment in the state penitentiary after the jury had considered for fifty minutes its verdict on the case which had occupied an entire week in presentation.

WINTER IN TEXAS.

Four Inches of Snow Falls in the Panhandle Country.

Austin, Tex., Oct. 7. — A four-inch fall of snow occurred in the extreme north portion of the Texas Panhandle. It covered the ranch of the Texas Capital Syndicate and extended west to New Mexico. It is the earliest snow on record. The cold in the western part of the state down to the Rio Grande is intense.

STEAL FORTUNE IN BONDS.

Prefecture of Police of Paris Cables News of the Crime.

New York, Oct. 7. — Capt. Titus received a lengthy telegram from the prefecture of police of Paris informing him that a big bank robbery had been committed in that city and asking the captain to search for $150,000 in French government bonds.

Chained to the Track.

Cripple Creek, Colo., Oct. 7.—Sheriff Henry Robertson levied on a Pullman car for taxes amounting to $635 which the Pullman company has neglected to pay, and in order to prevent the removal of the car, has chained it to the track.

Suicide Epidemic.

Ottumwa, Iowa, Oct. 7.—There is an epidemic of suicide among the women of Ottumwa. The third in three days took poison Saturday night. Mrs. J. W. Green will die.

NEWS IN BRIEF.

Overflow From the Wires in a Condensed From.

The failure of the great metallurgical works at Kortah, Russia, for $9,000,000 has caused a flutter on the stock markets, and has resulted in making idle 5,000 men.

After a week of tranquility La Souffriere showed signs of disturbance again Sunday. There was an eruption at 3 o'clock. Later the volcano resumed its quiet aspect.

The South Australian government has introduced a bill for the construction of a railroad from Adelaide to Port Darwin on the land grant system. Three months after the bill is passed tenders are to be invited from Europe and America.

Ralph L. Rose of Hellsberg has broken the world's record for putting the shot, held by Dewitt of Princeton, at the semi-annual field day of the academic athletic league at San Francisco. Rose threw the shot 49 feet 5 inches. Dewitt's record was 48 feet 8 inches.

According to the annual report of the paymaster general army expenditures decreased during the past fiscal year $918,919 as compared with the preceding year, partly owing to decrease in the pay of the army and in part owing to a reduction of claims for extra pay by volunteers. The total expenditures made by Paymaster General Bates were $52,523,479.

John Swartzell, a well known business man of Knoxville, Tenn., was killed as the result of a quarrel with some traveling men. One of the crowd, a well dressed stranger, grew angry at a discussion which Swartzell was leading as to the fighting qualities of Iowans, and with the exclamation: "I'm an Iowan, and will show you I'm game," shot Swartzell twice. He then escaped and has not been found.

Cannon From Cavite.

Spearfish, S. D., Oct. 7. — The war department has presented the state normal school here with two cannon that were captured by the American forces at Cavite in 1898. The state has agreed to pay the freight on them from San Francisco, and as soon as they arrive they will be placed on the campus at the normal school. They will be situated on a promontory, overlooking the lower part of Spearfish. The donation was made at the request of the people of Spearfish.

Tailoring Shops Burglarized.

West Superior, Wis., Oct. 7. — The Sterling Tailoring company's shop was burglarized of several hundred dollars' worth of goods Saturday night, making the third burglary here in a few days. The store was almost looted. It is believed the gang is doing systematic work. Tom Burns, William Harris and J. W. Wade have been arrested and will be held until investigation can be made.

Was Not a Murderer.

Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Oct. 7—At Iowa City Mrs. Ella Gallagher, charged with Charles Hallada, with the murder of her husband, James Gallagher, was acquitted after a trial lasting a week.

Long Drouth Is Broken.

Laredo, Tex., Oct. 7.—A special from Cariso, Tex., says the thirty months' drouth seems to be broken at last. Two good rains have fallen in the past six hours. It has done much good to cattle ranches.

Killed by a Train.

Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 7. — Christopher Langon was instantly killed and his wife fatally injured yesterday by a train that struck the buggy in which they were crossing the Toledo & Ohio Central railway within fifty feet of their home.

Held for Ransom.

Salonica, Oct. 7. — Brigands have captured a Turkish land owner named Sheik Bey at Orisar, near Vodena, forty miles from Monastir. He is being held for a ransom of $15,000.

Proposed Amendments

—TO THE—

Constitution of Minnesota

Hon. Peter E. Hanson, Secretary of State—Sir:

Pursuant to Chapter 157 of the General Laws of 1887, I herewith file in your office synopses of Amendments to the Constitution of the State of Minnesota as proposed by the General Laws of the State of Minnesota enacted at the General Session of the Legislature in 1901 and the Extra Session in 1902, as well as a synopsis of Chapter 150 of the General Laws of 1901, being an Act involving the taxation of railroad property, to be submitted to the electors of the State for adoption or rejection at the next General Election.

Yours respectfully,
W. B. DOUGLAS,
Attorney General.

SYNOPSES OF AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE STATE OF MINNESOTA PROPOSED BY THE LEGISLATURE OF THE SAID STATE AT THE GENERAL SESSION IN 1901 AND THE EXTRA SESSION IN 1902, AS WELL AS A SYNOPSIS OF CHAPTER 150 OF THE GENERAL LAWS OF 1901, PROPOSING AN INCREASE OF THE GROSS EARNINGS TAX UPON RAILROAD PROPERTIES.

I.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 33, of Article IV of the State Constitution, the Legislature by Act approved April 6, 1901, known as Chapter 150 of the General Laws of 1901, present to the electors of the State for rejection or approval, the following, to wit:

Section 1. That every railway company owning or operating any line of railway situated within, or partly within, this state shall, during the year 1902, and annually thereafter, pay into the treasury of this state, as taxes upon all property within this state owned or operated for railway purposes by such company, including equipment, appurtenances, appendages and franchises thereof, a sum of money equal to four (4) per cent of the gross earnings derived from the operation of such line of railway within this state; and the payment of such taxes shall be in full and in lieu of all other taxes upon the property and franchises so taxed. The lands acquired by public grant shall be and remain exempt from taxation until sold or contracted to be sold or conveyed as provided in the respective acts whereby such grants were made or recognized.

Sec. 2. The term "the gross earnings derived from the operation of such line of railway within this state," as used in section one (1) of this act, is hereby declared and shall be construed to mean all earnings on business beginning and ending within the state, and a proportion of earnings on all interstate business passing through, into or out of the state as the mileage operated within the state bears to the entire mileage operated by such company.

Sec. 3. All acts and parts of acts not inconsistent herewith regulating the payment, collection, time of payment, enforcement, or reports involving the amount of taxes upon the gross earnings of railroad companies within this state, or providing penalties for the non-payment of such taxes, are hereby made applicable to this act so far as may be; and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Sec. 4. Upon failure to pay the amount of such taxes legally due upon the dates heretofore provided by law for the payment thereof, in addition to existing remedies, collection may be enforced in a civil action brought in the name of the State of Minnesota in the district court of any county.

Sec. 5. This act shall be submitted to the people of this state for their approval or rejection at the next general election for the year 1902. . . . . . .

*(The omitted provision refers to the method of printing the ballot and submitting the act for ratification.)

This act provides for an increase of the amount of taxes collected by the State upon the property of the railroads situated within the State, from three per cent upon the gross earnings derived from the operation of such lines of railway within the State, to a sum of money equal to four per cent upon the gross earnings derived from the operation of such lines of railway therein.

Under the terms of the Constitution above referred to, this Act of the Legislature must be submitted to legal voters of the State, and will become operative if adopted by a majority of such electors voting at the next general election.

II.

By an Act of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, approved February 28, 1901, and known as House File No. 100, it is proposed to amend Article Eight (8), Section Six (6) of the Constitution.

This Section as now existing reads as follows:

Section 6. The permanent school and university fund of this State may be invested in the purchase of bonds of any county, school district, city, town or village of this state, but no such investment shall be made until approved by the board of commissioners designated by law to regulate the investment of the permanent school fund and the permanent university fund of this State; nor shall such loan or investment be made when the issue of which the same is part would make the entire bonded indebtedness exceed seven per cent of the assessed valuation of the taxable real property of the county, school district, city, town or village issuing such bonds; nor shall such loans or indebtedness be made at a lower rate of interest than three per cent per annum nor for a shorter period than five (5) years nor for a longer period than twenty (20) years, and no change of the town, school district, village, city or county lines shall relieve the real property in such town, school district, county, village or city in this state at the time of issuing of such bonds from any liability for taxation to pay such bonds.

It is proposed by said act to amend the same so as to read as follows:

Section 6. The permanent school and university fund of this state may be invested in the bonds of any county, school district, city, town or village of this state, but no such investment shall be made until approved by the board of commissioners designated by law to regulate the investment of the permanent school fund and the permanent university fund of this state; nor shall such loan or investment be made when the bonds to be issued or purchased would make the entire bonded indebtedness exceed fifteen (15) per cent of the assessed valuation of the taxable real property of the county, school district, city, town or village issuing such bonds; nor shall such loans or indebtedness be made at a lower rate of interest than three (3) per cent per annum, nor for a shorter period than five (5) years, nor for a longer period than twenty (20) years, and no change of the town, school district, city, village, or of county lines, shall relieve the real property in such town, school district, county, village or city in this state at the time of the issuing of such bonds from any liability for taxation to pay such bonds.

The effect of the above amendment, if adopted, will be to authorize the investment of the permanent school and university fund of this state for a period of not less than five (5) or more than twenty (20) years, at an interest rate not less than three (3) per cent per annum, in the bonds of any county, school district, city, town, or village of this state, when the bonds to be issued or purchased will not make the entire bonded indebtedness of such municipalities exceed fifteen (15) per cent of the assessed valuation of the taxable real property contained therein.

The substantial change proposed by said amendment is to authorize such investments, when the entire indebtedness, including the loan in question, does not exceed fifteen (15) per cent of the assessed valuation of the taxable real property in such municipalities; whereas, under the existing Constitution loans are permitted only where such total indebtedness does not exceed seven (7) per cent of the assessed valuation.

III.

By An Act of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota Approved April 13, 1901, and known as House File No. 331, it is proposed to Amend Section Sixteen (16) of Article Nine (9) of the Constitution.

The Section as now existing reads as follows:

Section 16. For the purpose of lending aid in the construction and improvement of public highways and bridges there is hereby created a fund to be known as the "state road and bridge fund." Said fund shall include all moneys accruing from the income derived from investments in the internal improvement land fund, or that may hereafter accrue to said fund, and shall also include all funds accruing to any state road and bridge fund, however provided.

The legislature is authorized to add to such fund for the purpose of constructing or improving roads and bridges of this state, by providing, in its discretion, for an annual tax levy upon the property of this state of not to exceed in any year one-twentieth (1-20) of one (1) mill on all the taxable property within the state.

The legislature is also authorized to provide for the appointment by the governor of the state of a board to be known as the "state highway commission," consisting of three (3) members, who shall perform such duties as shall be prescribed by law, without salary or compensation other than personal expenses.

Such commission shall have general superintendence of the construction of state roads and bridges and shall use such fund in the construction thereof and distribute the same in the several counties in the state upon an equitable basis. Provided, further, that no county shall receive in any year more than three (3) per cent or less than one-half (½) of one (1) per cent of the total fund thus provided and expended during such year; and provided, further, that no more than one-third (1-3) of such fund accruing in any year shall be expended for bridges, and in no case shall more than one-third (1-3) of the cost of constructing or improving any road or bridge be paid by the state from such fund.

It is proposed by said Act to amend the same so as to read as follows:

Section 16. For the purpose of lending aid in the construction and improvement of public highways and bridges, there is hereby created a fund to be known as the "State Road and Bridge Fund." Said fund shall include all moneys accruing from the interest derived from the investments in the internal improvement land fund, or that may hereafter accrue to said fund, and shall also include all funds accruing to any state road and bridge fund however provided.

The legislature is authorized to add to such fund for the purpose of constructing or improving roads and bridges of the state, and providing in its discretion for an annual tax levy upon the property of this state, of not to exceed in any one year one-tenth (1-10) of one mill on all the taxable property within the state.

The existing Constitution authorizes legislation providing for a levy of a state tax of 1-20 of one mill for the purpose of building roads and bridges, and provides for its use under the direction of a State Highway Commission in such counties as shall contribute at least double the amount of the State moneys expended by said Commission for such purpose, subject also to certain other limitations.

By the proposed change, a tax of 1-10 of one mill is authorized to be levied for this purpose; the Highway Commission is abolished; and the result, if the proposed amendment is adopted, will be to place the distribution of such funds in the hands of the Legislature, without limitation or restriction.

IV.

By an act of the legislature of the State of Minnesota, known as chapter one (1) of the Laws of the Extra Session of 1902, it is proposed to amend sections one (1), two (2) and three (3) of article nine (9) of the constitution.

The sections as now existing read as follows:

"Section 1. All taxes to be raised in this state shall be as nearly equal as may be, and all property on which taxes are to be levied shall have a cash valuation, and be equalized and uniform throughout the state; provided, that the legislature may, by general law or special act, authorize municipal corporations to levy assessments for local improvements upon the property fronting upon such improvements, or upon the property to be benefited by such improvements, or both, without regard to a cash valuation, and in such manner as the legislature may prescribe; and provided, further, that for the purpose of defraying the expenses of laying water pipes and supplying any city or municipality with water, the legislature may, by general or special law, authorize any such city or municipality, having a population of five thousand or more, to levy an annual tax or assessment upon the lineal foot of all lands fronting on any water main or water pipes laid by such city or municipality within corporate limits of said city, for supplying water to the citizens thereof, without regard to the cash value of such property, and to empower such city to collect any such tax assessments, or fines or penalties for failure to pay the same, or any fine or penalty for any violation of the rules of such city or municipality in regard to the use of water, or for any water rate due for the same.

And provided further, that there may be by law levied and collected a tax upon all inheritances, devises, bequests, legacies and gifts of every kind and description above a fixed and specified sum, of any and all natural persons and corporations. Such tax above such exempted sum may be uniform, or it may be graded or progressive, but shall not exceed a maximum tax of five per cent.

Sec. 2. The legislature shall provide for an annual tax sufficient to defray the estimated (ordinary) expenses of the state for each year; and whenever it shall happen that such ordinary expenses of the state for any year shall exceed the income of the state for such year, the legislature shall provide for levying a tax for the ensuing year sufficient, with other sources of income, to pay the deficiency of the preceding year, together with the estimated expenses of such ensuing year.

Sec. 3. Laws shall be passed taxing all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise; and also all real and personal property, according to its true value in money; but public burying grounds, public schoolhouses, public hospitals, academies, colleges, universities and all seminaries of learning, all churches, church property used for religious purposes, and houses of worship, institutions of purely public charity, public property used exclusively for any public purpose, and personal property to an amount not exceeding in value two hundred dollars for each individual, shall, by general laws, be exempt from taxation.

It is proposed by said chapter to amend the same so as to read as follows:

Section 1. The power of taxation shall never be surrendered, suspended or contracted away. The legislature shall provide for an annual tax sufficient to defray the estimated ordinary expenses of the state for each year, and whenever it shall happen that such ordinary expenses for any year shall exceed the income of the state for such year the legislature shall at its next general session provide for levying a tax sufficient to pay such deficiency. And whenever the income of the state from other sources shall be sufficient to defray all of its ordinary expenses without the levy of any annual state tax, such tax levy shall be omitted. All taxes to be raised in this state shall be as nearly equal as may be and shall be levied and collected for public purposes only; and all property on which taxes are to be levied, except as herein otherwise provided, shall have a cash valuation, and shall be equalized and uniform throughout the state; provided that whenever the levy of a tax for state purposes is omitted as above provided, the taxes levied for local purposes shall be upon a valuation of the property within the several counties and the subdivisions thereof, which shall be equalized and uniform throughout each county. The legislature may by general or special law authorize municipal corporations to levy assessments for local improvements upon the property fronting upon such improvements, or upon property benefited thereby, or both, without regard to a cash valuation, in such manner as the legislature may prescribe. There may be levied and collected an annual tax upon franchises granted by public authority, in addition to the tax on the real property and other personal property of the person or corporation holding such franchise; or in lieu of a tax on such franchise alone, or in lieu of a tax on such franchise and the personal property used in connection with the exercise of the same, there may be imposed such tax upon the gross earnings of the person or corporation holding such franchise as the legislature may determine; and said tax shall be apportioned between the state, counties and municipalities where such franchise is exercised, in the same manner as real estate taxes are apportioned. There may be levied and collected a transfer tax not to exceed 5 per centum upon the estates of decedents, above a fixed and specified sum, which tax may be uniform or graded or progressive. There may be levied and collected a registry tax upon all real estate mortgages which shall be in lieu of all other taxes on the debt secured by such mortgages; and a tax upon the income from all credits owned by persons or corporations, as such credits are now or may be hereafter defined by law, and also on the income arising from all personal property, and also upon the income of all persons or corporations above the sum of $1,000 per annum, not arising from such credits or from such personal property, or from property otherwise taxed in this state. Such income tax shall be uniform throughout the state, and may be graded or progressive or both, and shall be levied at a rate not to exceed 10 per centum upon the income from such credits, and upon the income from personal property, and at a rate not exceeding 4 per centum upon such other income. Laws shall be passed taxing all real and personal property; provided that credits and personal property shall not be subject to other taxation than the income or registry tax herein authorized, while the law imposing such income or registry tax shall be in force; provided, public burying grounds, public schools, public hospitals, public library associations, colleges, universities and all seminaries of learning, all churches and church property used exclusively for religious purposes, and institutions of purely public charity, and public property used exclusively for public purposes, and personal property to an amount not exceeding $300 to each individual shall be exempt from taxation, but such personal exemption shall not be allowed to more than one member of the same family. Provided further, that nothing in this act contained shall be construed to affect, modify or repeal any law providing for the taxation of the gross earnings of railroads.

The effect of the above amendment, if adopted, will be to amend the existing Constitution, as follows:

1st. To prohibit the legislature from surrendering or contracting away the power of taxation.

2nd. To provide that whenever the income of the State derived other than from direct taxation upon real and personal property shall be sufficient to defray all the expenses of the State, and the direct tax levied for such purpose is omitted, taxes for local purposes shall be levied upon the taxable property of the county, which shall be equal and uniform throughout the county as distinguished from being equal and uniform throughout the State.

3rd. To authorize municipal corporations to levy assessments for local improvements under and pursuant to special, as distinguished from general, laws.

4th. The Legislature is authorized to provide for the levy and collection of an annual tax upon franchises granted by public authority, in addition to the tax on real and personal property of the person or corporation holding the same.

5th. The Legislature is authorized to provide a tax upon the gross earnings of any person or corporation holding such a franchise, conditioned that such gross earnings tax may be in lieu of a tax upon the franchise or upon the franchise and personal property as well.

6th. Authority is conferred upon the Legislature to provide for the levy and collection of a registry tax upon all real estate mortgages which shall be in lieu of all other tax on the debt secured by such mortgage.

7th. The Legislature is authorized to provide for a tax upon incomes in excess of $1,000 per annum, not arising from credits or personal property or from property otherwise taxed in this State, and also a tax upon the income derived from credits as well as from personal property. Such tax shall be uniform throughout the State and may be graded, or progressive, or both, and shall be levied at a rate not to exceed ten percentum upon incomes derived from credits and personal property, and at a rate not exceeding four per cent per annum upon such other income. In case of the imposition of the registry tax above referred to, or of an income tax arising from credits or personal property, all credits and personal property owned by the party against whom such registry or income tax is imposed is exempted from all taxation while the law imposing such income or registry tax is in force.

In other words, where an income tax upon salaries or earnings of individuals is provided for, all personal property and credits must still be subjected to taxation, while in case of the imposition of an income tax arising from credits and personal property or of a registry tax such credits and personal property are exempted from taxation.

8th. The Legislature is authorized to exempt personal property of each individual to the extent of $300, provided the same shall not apply or be allowed to more than one member of the same family.

9th. Other provisions of the existing constitution involving the subject of taxation are preserved and continued in force.

Attorney General.

A Costly Cabin.

On Warren's island, off the coast of Maine, is being erected what is properly described as "a palatial log cabin." It is composed of spruce logs, and costs the tidy little sum of $75,000. The entire island on which this summer palace is erected was purchased by the late William H. Folwell of Philadelphia. Mr. Folwell died before the completion of the house. The work is now superintended by his son, William H. Folwell, Jr. Some idea of the size of the "cabin" may be gained from consideration of the fact that there are twenty-two sleeping rooms on the second floor. On the ground floor there is a fireplace of brick and granite, the mantelpieces being of marble, twelve feet in length, three in width and nine inches thick, the whole piece of work weighing some forty tons.—New York Tribune.

A Kansas mule balked the other day, and thereby contributed to the fund of real life romance. How? Well, the long eared quadruped was being driven by an angry father in chase of his eloping daughter, and the mule stopped to think it over long enough to let the anxious couple have the knot tied.

He—How charmingly you sing. She—Do you really think so? He—Oh, yes, indeed. I never listen to you without wishing you were where my folks in Colorado could hear you.—Chicago American.

PLOT AGAINST WIFE

INDIANA MAN SCHEMES TO HAVE BETTER HALF SENT TO PRISON.

BECAUSE OF UNREQUITED LOVE

MAKES AN ATTEMPT TO HAVE HER CONVICTED OF HIS OWN CRIME.

SHE TURNS THE TABLES ON HIM

NOW HE WILL SERVE SENTENCE OF FOURTEEN YEARS FOR ARSON.

La Porte, Ind., Oct. 3.—The case of Suri Fletcher, who is under sentence of imprisonment in the Northern Indiana penitentiary, has brought to light a remarkable case of unrequited love and search for vengeance.

Fletcher sought to send his young wife to prison in order to keep her from the admiring gaze of other men. She turned the tables on him and he will have to serve the sentence that his jealousy would have had her serve. Fletcher was convicted of arson and the trial proved that it was the husband and not his wife that committed crime. The couple had previously been estranged. Fletcher moved from one city to another, but he never lost track of his wife. His love again seemed to be suddenly rekindled after a brief separation, and he wrote her a letter asking for a reconciliation, but she refused. Fletcher then committed the crime of arson, charging his wife with the crime, and she was arrested.

The evidence against her appeared to be strong. The detectives began work on a new clew. Mrs. Fletcher then began throwing a coil around her husband that caused the detectives to turn from her to the man that had informed against her.

Every point of guilt suddenly turned against Fletcher and it was shown that he had compelled his wife to accompany him on the barn-burning expedition. He will serve a sentence of fourteen years.

STRIKERS WRECK A TRAIN.

Troops Come and the Mob Jeers and Hoots, but Gets Out of Gun Range.

Tamaqua, Pa., Oct. 3.—Last night a mob of strikers placed an obstruction on the Central Railroad of New Jersey tracks near Lansford and wrecked a coal train. An engine and several cars were thrown from the tracks. When a number of company employes from a near-by colliery attempted to clear away the wreckage the strikers attacked them and in the encounter several were injured. Word was quickly sent to the camp of troops at Manila Park and a troop of cavalry and a company of infantry were sent to the scene. When the soldiers arrived they were greeted with hoots and jeers. However, the rioters showed commendable haste in getting out of the range of their guns. The wreck blocked the Central's tracks for over two hours.

CRIPPLE THE WASHERY.

Mob of Men and Boys Put It Out of Business.

Wilkesbarre, Oct. 3.—The Sterling washery at Plymouth, which has been in operation for some months past, was compelled to suspend operations yesterday, a crowd of men and boys having cut the belting and plugged the machinery. When the employes of the washery came down from Scranton they were driven away by a mob and forced to return home. Sheriff Jacobs was notified and he requested Col. Dougherty of the ninth regiment to send troops to the scene. Two battalions were sent to Plymouth, but when they arrived they found everything quiet and the crowd gone. The owners of the washery say considerable damage was done to the machinery.

STRIKERS KEEP AWAY.

Colliery Is Started Without Molestation.

Hazleton, Pa., Oct. 3.—Coxe Bros. & Co. started their Drifton colliery yesterday with a small non-union force of men and began preparations for hoisting and getting ready for market about 800 tons of coal. Some of this coal was cut before the strike, the remainder having been mined by bosses since the suspension went into effect. The colliery is guarded by about 200 special officers. Operations were commenced without molestation on the part of the strikers.

STRIKE NEAR ITS END.

Chicago Coal Dealer Sure That the Trouble Will Soon Be Over.

Chicago, Oct. 3. — According to a long distance telephone message received from New York last evening by Henry E. Weaver, the coal strike is likely to be declared off soon. "I understand that the result of this information in New York," said Mr. Weaver, "was that the coal road stocks jumped up several points at once. My informant told me there had been a conference of those interested in the strike that was likely to result in a settlement."

Pitched Over a Cliff.

Shoshone Falls, Idaho, Oct. 3. — A party of Omaha and Shoshone people while driving down a precipitous grade near the Blue lakes was pitched over the cliff, a distance of nearly 100 feet. Three women were seriously injured.

Democrats Win Easily.

Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 3.—The election for governor and state house officials held throughout the state yesterday passed off quietly. The Democratic ticket, headed by Joseph M. Terrell, was elected in full.

NEW YORK DEMOCRATS.

Strenuous Convention Ends in Perfect Harmony.

Saratoga, N. Y., Oct. 3.—A convention so strenuous in its final hours as to bring almost personal conflict, and yet terminating in such perfect harmony as to allow completion of the state ticket with less than a hundred delegates out of 450 in the hall voting, was the result of yesterday's closing of the Democratic state convention.

It began in the early morning with a prepared slate of candidates. The slate was not broken in any particular, Bird S. Coler is the candidate for governor. Naturally a great deal of the interest in the convention centored in the attitude it would take toward the seating of William S. Devery, former head of the police department of New York, who held a regular certificate of election from the Ninth district. It was not an unexpected event that the convention decided to unseat him; and it was not also unexpected that he and his followers were vociferous in their objections.

The platform calls for steadfast fidelity to American principles, for the lack of which it arraigns the Republican party; demands the return to the principles of Thomas Jefferson to stop demoralization of the country; opposes trusts, that injuriously affect consumer and employer and drive out small manufacturers, and especially condemns the so-called beef and coal trusts for "unreasonably depriving the people of necessities of life." Restriction of the amassing of wealth is advocated, and the amendment of the tariff law by placing the necessities of life on the free list is demanded. The Dingley tariff law is condemned as a whole. The president is criticised for dilatory conduct, and is accused of not wanting to offend the trusts.

MEYER MAY NOT RETIRE.

Has Given No Intimation of Contemplating Such a Step.

London, Oct. 3—Ambassador Meyer, who has been making a brief visit to London, will start for the continent to-day on his way to his post in Rome. He has not admitted that he has any intention of resigning his post, and evidently enjoys his diplomatic work. He has made arrangements for remaining at Rome another year.

RAIN SPOILS THINGS.

Corn Belt Exposition Attractions Are Postponed.

Mitchell, S. D., Oct. 3. — The rain yesterday rather dampened the ardor of the Corn Belt exposition crowds, and it was necessary to postpone the free street attractions until evening, which they were given. Concerts were rendered by Debaugh's band in the corn palace during the afternoon and evening. The number of people in the city is increasing every day, and there are six more days of the palace show. To-day the people of Aurora and Brule county will come to Mitchell in great numbers. A game of football will be played between the university eleven and the Indians from the government school at Chamberlain.

DAMAGING EVIDENCE.

Witness Testifies He Was Employed to Burn Store Building.

Houghton, Mich., Oct. 3. — In the preliminary hearing of the arson case before Judge Brand yesterday some damaging testimony against James and John McLaughlin was brought out in the examination of William Werner and Albert Haas. Werner testified that he set fire to a store at Stanwood and that John McLaughlin agreed to pay him $100 for firing the building. He said that McLaughlin was anxious to get $4,000 insurance. Albert Haas testified to arousing the occupants of the apartment over the store and seeing Werner make his escape from the building.

SORE MARKS OF VIOLENCE.

Body of Missing Girl Is Found—Murder Charged

Marinette, Wis., Oct. 3.—The body of Julia Kachincky, ten years old, was found in the rear of the blacksmith shop of Joseph Beck in Menominee, Mich., yesterday. Last Sunday morning the little girl left for church and had not been seen since until the discovery was made yesterday afternoon. Her body bore marks of violence and about her throat were finger marks, showing that she had bee nstrangled to death. Joseph Beck, the blacksmith, was arrested and charged with murder.

BITTEN BY A DOG.

Winona Boy Is Attacked and Seriously Injured.

Winona, Minn., Oct. 3.—The young son of H. M. Neilson was seriously injured yesterday afternoon by being bitten by a dog. The boy was in the street when he was attacked and his hands were severely torn and lacerated. It is not known who is the owner of the dog, and the animal escaped before it could be captured. It is not believed the dog had rabies, although every precaution is being taken with the boy's wounds.

SECTION MAN KILLED.

Crew Run Down by Freight Train in a Cut.

Barronett, Wis., Oct. 3.—Yesterday a freight train on the Omaha run down the section crew on a hand car about three miles south of Barronett, instantly killing Carl Nelson, a section hand, and bruising John Larson on the hip badly. Mr. Nelson was a single man and had just come here from Sweden. The train struck them in a cut, just around a large curve.

Price of Piece of a Thumb.

Luverne, Minn., Oct. 3.—Martin C. Dietrich was awarded $1,100 in the district court yesterday in his suit for $10,000 against Jacob D. Fender, whom he accused of biting off a piece of his thumb in a fight some months ago.

Bertha Schilling Free.

Stillwater, Minn., Oct. 3. — Bertha Schilling, the Minneapolis actress convicted of manslaughter, was yesterday afternoon paroled from the state prison by the board of control, along with five other prisoners.

VAST PROPERTY IS INVOLVED

IMMENSE TRACT IN LYON COUNTY INCLUDED IN THE DONATION.

Marshall, Minn., Oct. 4. — A somewhat unique and very unusual instrument yesterday was filed for record in the office of the register of deeds. It was a deed from John M. Burke to the Winfield Masterman Burke relief fund and conveys to the fund $4,000,000 worth of real and personal property, which Mr. Burke donated to endow a hospital for convalescents some time ago.

The deed recites the object of the donation and also recites that the fund was named for Mr. Burke's mother and limits and describes the use to which the income from this vast property can be used.

This deed is of considerable importance to the people of Lyon county, inasmuch as it covers to the fund some 16,000 acres of land in this county. This land was purchased by Mr. Burke many years ago from the Winona & St. Peter Railroad company and has since been held by him. The land has never been improved and has never been offered for sale.

Many of the owners of adjoining land have been waiting for this opportunity to enlarge their farms. The fund trustees will put the land on the market. Much of it will be taken at once at a high figure.

AN OLD MAN'S TUMBLE.

Winona County Pioneer Goes to Sleep and Drops to the Ground.

Winona, Minn., Oct. 4. — Faltering with age, Duncan McDougall, a Winona county pioneer who has passed his eighty-second milestone, miraculously escaped death at his home near Fremont yesterday afternoon. The old man, who is practically alone in the world, occupies a room at the home of P. C. Baird, chairman of the town board. A door in McDougall's room opens on a high porch. He is fond of sunning himself in an easy chair on the porch, and was so passing the time away yesterday afternoon, when he evidently fell asleep and rolled off the porch, hitting the hard ground below with considerable violence. He was on his feet in an instant and walked into the house as if nothing had happened. Later, however, it was discovered his arm had been bruised, and it is feared that he may have been injured internally. While at present he does not appear to be in a very serious condition, it is feared, owing to his old age, the accident may result fatally.

ALLEGED BURGLAR HELD.

Caught in the Act at Bristol While Entering a Saloon.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Oct. 4. — A man giving his name as Thomas Reed, and who claimed to have been working on the railroad at Bradley, has been arrested at Bristol on the charge of burglarizing a saloon at that place. He was caught in the act by Night Watchman Gus Hanson. Reed, when taken before a justice for his preliminary hearing, waived examination, and in default of bonds for his appearance at the next term of circuit court was lodged in jail at Webster. It develops that he is also wanted at Bradley for the alleged robbery of the store of H. Y. Scarborough a short time ago.

CHARGED WITH MURDER.

Wife of Dead Man and Her Brother Bound Over for Trial.

Aberdeen, S. D., Oct. 4. — The preliminary examination of Mrs. William Lange and her brother, Carnhart Convors, has been finished at Mound City. The state occupied two days in evidence calculated to show that the prisoners murdered William Lange, the woman's husband, near Herreld on May 22. When the state closed, William Wallace of Aberdeen, attorney for the defendants, waived further examination, putting in no evidence whatever. The accused were bound over to the circuit court for trial, and the case will come on at the term to begin on the 7th inst.

HE HAD HIS FLING.

Cashier of Newbro Drug Company a Fugitive From Justice.

Butte, Mont., Oct. 4. — Assistant Cashier Fred H. Warner of the Newbro Drug company, the largest in Butte, whose parents are highly respected people living at Lansing, Mich., is a fugitive from justice with the charge of grand larceny hanging over his head. He is short a sum approximating $2,000 which is said to have been squandered upon one of the demi mondo queens. He was tracked to Great Falls, but there all traces of him were lost.

USE THIEVES TO CATCH THIEVES

Authorities Hold One Hostage While Other Rounds Up Others.

Red Wing, Minn., Oct. 4—The street fair brought about 10,000 people to town yesterday, including six pickpockets. The police picked up two of them and they agreed to round up the rest on promise of immunity. One of them stayed as hostage while his partner brought in the rest, and all six took the train for St. Paul, intending to make Eau Claire the next station.

PANAMA CANAL TITLE IS VALID.

Such Is the Opinion of France's Former Premier.

New York, Oct. 4.—William Nelson Cromwell, general counsel for the new Panama Canal company, who has returned from Paris, says he delivered to Attorney General Knox, in Paris, every conveyance, decree, concession or other document relating to the properties of the new Panama Canal company from its inception in 1878, showing a complete and perfect chain of title in the new Panama Canal company and its unquestionable power to convey the canal, the plant, concessions and other property to the United States, free and clear of all liens or claims of any kind.

"To M. Waldeck-Rosseau, who has just resigned the premiership of France to renew the practice of his profession, I submitted," he said, "all the documents and questions, and have received his elaborate opinions indorsing the same opinion, and, in addition, giving his conclusions that the title to the property is perfect, and that the United States will acquire a complete and valid title thereto, free from any possible complications from creditors of stockholders of the old company."

STARTLING EVIDENCE.

Witnesses Tell of Shady Transactions in St. Louis.

St. Louis, Oct. 4. — In the trial of Robert M. Snyder, the banker and promoter charged with bribery in connection with the passage of the Central Traction bill, the state's case was practically submitted yesterday. Startling testimony was elicited to the effect that large sums of money had been freely distributed in securing votes for the bill. Probably the most startling testimony of the day was from George J. Kobusch, president of the St. Louis Car company. He said he was the man who interested Snyder in the Central Traction bill, that he dealt with councilmen through Edgar A. Mephan, and that he sent money through Mephan and that Mephan was to be paid $25,000 for his services. He has named some of the men who got the money—Carroll, $17,250; Gaus, $10,000; Gast, $10,000, or at the general rate of $10,000 a head.

Frederick G. Uthoff also unbosomed himself with rather a little confusion, yet he named large sums of money with directness, specifying who paid and who was paid.

MAY CLASH ON TARIFF.

National Republican League Is in Session.

Chicago, Oct. 4. — Differences of opinion concerning revision of the tariff promise the chief source of spontaneous outburst at the biennial convention of the National Republican league, which was called to order at the First regiment armory yesterday morning by the retiring president, Isaac Miller Hamilton of Chicago. Otherwise, with the possible exception of the election contest, there is said to be complete harmony among the 600 delegates from the various states of the Union. Rebellion is expected in the preparation of the league's platform, which, it is said, must cause discussion. Committees on organization, resolutions and credentials were appointed, one delegate from each state represented finding a place on a committee. The convention then adjourned until to-day. Last night the delegates listened to speeches by Senator Dolliver, Congressman Hopkins and M. B. Madden at the armory, where a public mass meeting was held.

MEXICO'S BAD QUAKES.

Meager Details of Disaster Brought to Frisco by Steamer.

San Francisco, Oct. 4.—The steamer City of Sydney, which has arrived from Mexican ports, brings news of a disastrous earthquake at Tapachula, near the southern boundary of Mexico. Particulars of the event, which occurred on Sept. 24, are not available, the only account having been learned at Mazatlan on the following day, where a telegram has been received containing nothing more than the statement that a great earthquake has demolished several buildings and inflicted other damage in the community. Tapachula was seriously damaged by the big earthquakes of last spring, at the time Quezaltenago and many other towns of Guatemala were almost ruined.

NEGLECT CAUSES A FLOOD.

Camden City Reservoir Breaks and Havoc Results.

Camden, N. J., Oct. 4.—The city reservoir near the Delaware river broke yesterday morning and about 8,000,000 gallons of water escaped and flowed down Twenty-seventh street, flooding the cellars of many houses and doing other damage. The reservoir is 344 feet long by 180 feet wide, and is 21 feet deep. A watchman whose duty it is to open a valve when the water reaches a certain height neglected to do so and the water flowed over the embankment, washing away the earth to such an extent that the break followed. It will cost the city $25,000 to repair the damage.

Stay for Jesse Morrison.

Topeka, Kan., Oct. 4.—The Kansas supreme court yesterday granted a stay of execution in the case of Jessie Morrison, now in the penitentiary for the murder of Clara Wiley Castle. The case will be heard by the supreme court in January. Miss Morrison's appeal bond was fixed at $10,000. As soon as this is given she will be released until the time of her trial. She was sentenced to fifteen years in the penitentiary.

Quarrel Ends in Tragedy.

Shrieveport, La., Oct. 4.—T. R. Vickers, a prominent Louisiana cattle dealer, and Edward Coglin, a public ginner of Texas, quarreled at Coglin's home yesterday and Vickers was shot dead. Coglin surrendered.

Heir for Manchester.

Belfast, Ireland, Oct. 4. —The duchess of Manchester, who was Miss Helen Zimmerman of Cincinnati, Ohio, gave birth to a son at Tanderagee castle, County Armagh. Both mother and child are doing well.

MOROS ON THE RUN

OFFER BUT SLIGHT RESISTANCE TO FORCES UNDER CAPT. PERSHING.

RETREAT TO FORTS ON THE LAKE

DRIVEN OUT OF NEW FORTS BY CAPT. M'NAIR'S BATTERY.

TWENTY MOROS WERE KILLED

CAPT. PERSHING WILL DESTROY THE FORTS UNLESS MOROS MAKE PEACE.

Manila, Oct. 3.—The Maciu Moros in Mindanao have offered but slight resistance to the column under Capt. Pershing of the Fifteenth cavalry.

After a series of skirmishes on Monday and Tuesday of this week the Moros retreated into six forts on the shores of the lake. When a courier left Maciu yesterday for Camp Vicars Capt. Pershing was preparing to assault the last Moro stronghold. The American column reached the former camp at Maciu Sunday night. On Monday the Moros opened fire on them with a brass cannon and rifles from a series of new forts which had been created since Capt. Pershing's first visit to the place. The battery under Capt. William S. McNair scaled a bridge commanding the position of the Moros and Shelled Them Out.

The engineers under Capt. Jay J. Morrow had constructed a trail over the swamp flanking the Moro position. The men of Capt. Pershing's column crossed the swamp by the trail and captured and destroyed three of the Moro forts. The Moros stood but a short while, and ran as soon as the artillery opened on them.

Capt. Pershing has been ordered to destroy the forts unless the Moros make peace. Twenty Moros were killed and many were wounded. There were no casualties among the Americans.

The letter of Gen. Sumner, in command on Mindanao, to the Maciu sultans has been delivered.

NOT IN PANAMA HARBOR.

Colombians Must Not Fight There Says Commander McLean.

Washington, Oct. 3. — Secretary Moody has received the following cablegram from Commander H. C. McLean of the Cincinnati, dated Colon:

"At a friendly meeting with the governor of Panama Sunday there was tacit agreement in regard to American protection of the transit. The governor will make visit to me in this ship within a few days. He has accepted offer of a complimentary escort of a company of the naval force which will be in addition to usual train guard. Within the last few days one gunboat of Colombia displayed flag of truce, attempted to communicate with the revolutionary force at a place about twelve miles from Panama, but was fired upon from the shore and returned fire; one man seriously wounded of the Colombian force. I have announced that even action of the gunboats of either of the parties will not be permitted in the Bay of Panama, Colombia, within gunshot of the line of the transit of the isthmus, including wharves and anchorage of vessels connected with the traffic on the isthmus."

GOVERNOR OF VERMONT.

Legislature Elects the Republican Candidate.

Montpelier, Vt., Oct. 3.—Gen. John C. McCullough of Bennington has been elected governor of Vermont by the state legislature. He was the Republican candidate who failed of election at the polls because he did not carry a majority of the votes.

Democrats Harmonious.

Providence, R. I., Oct. 3.—The Democrats made memorable their state convention here yesterday by a harmonious display of enthusiasm not equalled in ten years; the potent factor at issue being the contest for the gubernatorial nomination, which was won by Dr. L. F. C. Garvin of Cumberland.

Dan Stuart Is Shot.

Dallas, Tex., Oct. 3. — Dan Stuart, the well known sporting man, was accidentally shot while hunting near Dallas yesterday morning. The gun was loaded with fine bird shot, which took effect in Stuart's head, causing a painful but not necessarily dangerous wound. He was brought here for surgical attention.

President Continues to Improve.

injured leg continues to improve and Washington, Oct. 3—The president's his condition is satisfactory according to the report given out at the temporary White House last night. He keeps good spirits and enjoyed the bright spring-like weather which prevailed during the day.

Looks Like a Murder.

Scranton, Pa., Oct. 3.—John Mullen of Pittston, a non-union miner who has been working in Carbondale, was run over and decapitated by a trolley car at Smithville last night. It is believed that he was stunned by a blow, or killed and placed on the track.

Eight Men Were Killed.

London, Oct. 3.—The breaking of a rope attached to a car which was ascending the shaft of a coal mine at Pontypool, Wales, precipitated the car, which contained eight men, 300 yards to the bottom. All were instantly killed.

Inebriate Sentenced.

Webster City, Iowa, Oct. 3.—Judge Richard sentenced Edward McNeel to one year in the inebriate ward at the Mount Pleasant asylum, under Iowa's new inebriate law.

AMES GETS SIX AND HALF YEARS

Former Chief of Minneapolis Police Force Declares He Is Not Guilty.

Minneapolis, Oct. 4. — Fred Ames, former chief of the Minneapolis police force, was sentenced at 10:30 yesterday morning to six and one-half years in the state penitentiary at Stillwater for receiving a bribe of $15 from Addie Mills, a woman of the town, for "protection." Before passing sentence Judge Brooks asked the defendant if he had anything to say. Ames replied:

"The verdict is a great injustice. I am not guilty."

Ames' attorney, Victor Welch, before the sentence was passed, urged a lenient sentence in view of the character of the state's witnesses. A stay of fifty days was granted, during which time a motion for a new trial will be argued, and if it is not granted the case will be appealed to the supreme court.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS AT WAR.

Winona County Quits the National Association.

Winona, Minn., Oct. 4.—The work of the Winona County Sunday School association and the American Sunday School union will hereafter be separated in Winona county. Owing to recent disagreements the county association has decided to work alone, and instead of supporting the county missionary sent here by the union has districted the county into five districts, over each of which a president is to be appointed to direct work in that district. To help the work along a primary worker will be employed part of the year, and in January and February a series of district institutes will be conducted by Field Worker Orchard and Mrs. Holurt of Minneapolis. At the county convention just closed Dr. H. O. Larrabee was elected president, W. F. A. Brachlow secretary and Linus V. Wilber treasurer.

FALLS FROM TRAPEZE.

Performer Injured at Kenosha Street Fair.

Kenosha, Wis., Oct. 4.—W. P. Porin, a professional trapeze performer residing at Wilmington, N. C., met with serious if not fatal injuries during the street carnival here last night. The man was performing on a trapeze forty feet above a paved street, and while attempting a difficult feet he fell to the pavement. He was picked up unconscious. An examination showed that the man had suffered a fracture of the left shoulder blade and had sustained internal injuries. The accident was witnessed by a crowd of 3,000 people.

DRIVEN OUT OF TOWN.

Mine Boss Is Accused of Levying Tribute.

Terry, S. D., Oct. 4.—Harry Collins, a shaft foreman at the Horseshoe Mining company's mines, was driven from town early yesterday by an infuriated mob of several hundred miners, who threatened his life. Collins was charged with extorting several dollars a month from the wages of a Slavonian miner as the price of holding his position. The miners' union attempted to secure his dismissal, but being unsuccessful, they marched to Collins' home and drove him out of town, threatening vengeance if he returned.

EXPLOSION IN MINE.

Fourteen Men Have Probably Lost Their Lives.

Seattle, Wash., Oct. 4.—A special to the Times from Black Diamond, Wash., says: Fourteen men were working in the fourth level on the south side of the Lawson mines between 10 and 11 o'clock last night, when an explosion of fire-damp occurred. All are supposed to have been killed. Five bodies have been taken out. A special train is leaving Seattle with the coroner and physicians. The Lawson mines are the property of the Pacific Coast company.

WAIFS FARMED OUT.

Two Hundred New York Children Find Homes at Appleton.

Appleton, Wis., Oct. 4. — Two hundred street waifs from New York city arrived here yesterday under the chaperonage of representatives of the fresh air society. Each had a numbered ticket sewed on his or her clothing. Corresponding tickets were held by the people who had agreed to adopt them. An exciting time ensued at the depot when each child attempted to discover the whereabouts of its foster parents in the crowd which jammed the streets.

MONEY FOR HAMLINE.

Dr. Bridgeman Secures $4,500 at the Conference at Morris.

Morris, Minn., Oct. 4. — Dr. J. H. Bridgeman, president of Hamline university, yesterday morning addressed the Northern Minnesota conference of the M. E. church in session here in the interest of this university. At the conclusion of his address a subscription was taken for the endowment fund of Hamline and $4,500 was quickly subscribed.

SHOT BY SWEETHEART.

Tragedy at Waterloo Which May Result in Death.

Waterloo, Iowa, Oct. 4. — Fred Wheeler, a railway pilot, was shot last night and seriously, if not fatally injured by Miss Mary Cummings, with whom he had been keeping company. The couple had quarreled frequently. Miss Cummings is being held pending the outcome of Wheeler's wounds.

Street Fair a Success.

Eau Claire, Wis., Oct. 4. — Secretary Stussy states the receipts of the first two days of the street fair have been larger than those of any previous fair. The attendance on the third day has been still larger.

Diphtheria Epidemic.

Huron, S. D., Oct. 4.—A disease in many respects resembling diphtheria, is prevalent here, and from it three deaths have occurred in as many days. The city schools were closed on Tuesday.

The Crimson Blind

By Fred M. White

CHAPTER L. (Continued.)

Two tiny points of flame danced in Rawlins' eyes.

"Henson would never have dared!" he said. "My mind was quite easy on that score."

"I understand," Chris murmured. "And you kept the cigar-case?"

"Yes; rather liked it. And I could afford a luxury of that kind just then."

"Then why did you dispose of it at Rutter's, in Moreton Wells? And why Moreton Wells?"

Rawlins laughed as he lighted a fresh cigarette.

"I came to Moreton Wells, knowing that Henson was at Littimer Castle," he explained. "I went there to borrow £200 from Henson. Unfortunately, I found him in great need of money. Somebody who had promised him a large sum of money had disappointed him."

Chris smiled. She had heard all about Lady Littimer's adventure with the ring, and her stubborn refusal to give Henson any further supplies.

"Presently I can tell you who disappointed Henson," she said. "But fancy you being short of—"

"Of ready money; I frequently am. One of your great millionaires told me lately that he was frequently hard up for £1,000 cash. I have frequently been hard up for £5. Hence the fact that I sold the cigar-case at Moreton Wells."

"Well, the ground is clear so far," said Chris. "Do you know Van Sneck?"

"I know Van Sneck very well," Rawlins said, without hesitation. "A wonderfully clever man."

"And a great scoundrel, I presume?"

"Well, on the whole, I should say not. Weak rather than wicked. Van Sneck has been a tool and creature of Henson's for years. If he could only keep away from drink, he might make a fortune. But what has Van Sneck got to do with it?"

"A great deal," Chris said, drily. "And now please follow carefully what I am going to say. A little time ago we poor, persecuted women put our heads together to get free from Reginald Henson. We agreed to ask Mr. David Steel, the well known novelist, to show us a way of escape. Unhappily for us, Henson got to know of it."

Rawlins was really interested at last.

"Pardon me," he said, eagerly, "if I ask a question or two before you proceed. Is Mr. David Steel the gentleman who found a man half-murdered in his house in Brighton?"

"The same. But don't you know who the injured man was?"

"You don't mean to say it was Van Sneck?" Rawlins cried.

Chris nodded gravely. Rawlins appeared, like a man who was groping about in a sudden dazzle of light.

"I begin to understand," he muttered. "The scoundrel!"

"After that I will resume," Chris said. "You must understand that Mr. Steel was a stranger to us. We hit upon the idea of interviewing him anonymously, so to speak, and we were going to give him a gun-metal cigar-case mounted in diamonds. A friend of mine purchased that cigar-case at Lockhart's. Mind you, Reginald Henson knew all about this. The same day Henson's tool, Van Sneck, purchased a similar case from Walen's—a case really procured for your approval—and later on in the day the case passed from Van Sneck to Henson, who dexterously changed the cases."

"Complex," Rawlins muttered. "But I begin to see what is coming."

"The cases were changed, and the one from Walen's in due course, became Mr. Steel's. Now note where Henson's diabolical cunning comes in. The same night Van Sneck is found half-murdered in Mr. Steel's house, and in his pocket is the receipt for the very cigar-case that Mr. Steel claimed as his property."

"Very awkward for Steel," Rawlins said, thoughtfully.

"Of course it was. And why was it done? So that we should be forced to come forward and exonerate Mr. Steel from blame. We should have had to tell the whole story, and then Henson would have learned what steps we were taking to get rid of him."

Rawlins was quiet for some time. Admiration for the scheme was uppermost in his mind, but there was another thought that caused him to glance curiously at Chris.

"And that is all you know?" he asked.

"Not quite," Chris replied. "I know that on the day of the attempted murder Van Sneck quarreled with Reginald Henson, whom he said had treated him badly. Van Sneck had in some way found out that Reginald Henson meant mischief to Mr. Steel. Also, he couldn't get the money he wanted. Probably he had purchased that cigar-case at Walen's, and Henson could not repay him for the purchase of it. Then he went off and wrote to Mr. Steel, asking the latter to see him, as he had threatened Henson he would do.

"Ah!" Chris exclaimed, suddenly. "Are you sure of this?"

"I'm afraid this has come as a shock to you," Rawlins said, quietly.

"It has, indeed," says Chris. "And your reasoning is so dreadfully logical."

"Well, I may be wrong, after all," Rawlins suggested.

Chris shook her head, doubtfully. She felt absolutely assured that Rawlins was right. But then, Henson would hardly have run so terrible a risk for a little thing like that. He could easily have silenced Van Sneck by a specious promise or two. There must be another reason for—

"It came to Chris in a moment. She saw the light quite plainly.

"Mr. Smith," she said, eagerly, "where did you first meet Henson and Van Sneck?"

"We first came together some eight years ago in Amsterdam."

"Would you mind telling me what your business was?"

"So far as I can recollect, it was connected with some old silver—William and Mary and Queen Anne cups and jardinieres. We had a bit of a find that we could authenticate, but we wanted a lot of the stuff, well—faked. You see, Van Sneck was an authority on that kind of thing, and we employed him to cut marks off small genuine things and attach them to spurious large ones. On the whole, we made a very successful business of it for a long time."

"You found Van Sneck an excellent copyist. Did he ever copy anything for you?"

"No. But Henson employed him now and then. Van Sneck could construct a thing from a mere description. There was a ring he did for Henson—"

"Was that called Prince Rupert's ring, by any chance?"

"That was the name of the ring. Why?"

"We will come to that presently. Did you ever see Prince Rupert's ring?"

"Well, I did. It was in Amsterdam again, about a year later than the time I mentioned just now. Henson brought the real ring for Van Sneck to copy. Van Sneck went into raptures over it. He said he had never seen anything of the kind so beautiful. He made a copy of the ring, which he handed back, with the original, to Henson."

Chris nodded. This pretty faithful copy of the ring was one that Henson had used as a magnet to draw Lady Littimer's money, and the same one that had found its way into Steel's possession. But Chris had another idea to follow up.

"You hinted to me just now that Henson was short of money," she said. "Do you mean to say he is in dire need of some large sum?"

"That's it," Rawlins replied. "I rather fancy there has been some stir with the police over some business up at Huddersfield some years ago."

"A so-called home both there and at Brighton?"

"That's it. It was the idea that Henson conveyed to me when I saw him at Moreton Wells. It appears that a certain Inspector Marley, of the Brighton police, is the same man who used to have the warrants for the Huddersfield affair in his hands. Henson felt pretty sure that Marley had recognized him. He told me that, if the worst came to the worst he had something he could sell to Littimer for a large sum of money."

"I know!" Chris exclaimed. "It's the Prince Rupert's ring!"

"Well, I can't say anything about that. Is this ring a valuable property?"

"Not in itself. But the loss of it has caused a dreadful lot of misery and suffering. Mr. Smith, Reginald Henson had no business with that ring at all. He stole it, and made it appear that somebody else had done so by means of conveying the copy to the very person who should have possessed it. The sad business broke up a happy home and has made five people miserable for many years. And, whichever way you turn, whichever way you look, you find the cloven foot of Henson everywhere. Now, what you have told me just now gives me a new idea. The secret that Henson was going to sell to Lord Littimer for a large sum was the story of the missing ring and the restitution of the same."

"Kind of brazening it out, you mean?"

"Yes. Lord Littimer would give three times ten thousand pounds to have that ring again. But at this point Henson has met with a serious check in his plans. Driven into a corner, he has resolved to make a clean breast of it to Lord Littimer. He procured the ring from his strong box and then he makes a discovery."

"Which is more than I have. Pray proceed."

"He discovers that he has not got the real Prince Rupert's ring."

Rawlins looked up with a slightly puzzled air.

"Will you kindly tell me what you mean?" he said.

"It was a forgery. Van Sneck made a copy from a mere description. That copy served its purpose with a vengeance, and is now at the bottom of the North Sea. I need not go into details, because it is a family secret, and does not concern our conversation at all. At that time the real ring came into Henson's possession, and he wanted a copy to hold over the head of an unfortunate lady whom he would have ruined before long. You told me just now that Van Sneck had fallen in love with Prince Rupert's ring and could hardly bear to part with it. He didn't."

"No? But how could he retain it?"

"Quite easily. The copy was quite faithful, but still it was a copy. But, secretly, Van Sneck makes a copy that would deceive anybody but an expert, and this he hands over to—"

"To Henson as the real ring," Rawlins cried, excitedly.

Chris smiled, a little pleased at her acumen.

"Precisely," she said. "I see that you are inclined to be of my opinion."

"Well, upon my word, I am," Rawlins confessed. "But I don't quite see why—"

"Please let me finish," Chris went on, excitedly. "Reginald Henson is driven back to his last trenches. He has to get the ring for Lord Littimer. He takes out the ring, after all these years, never dreaming that Van Sneck would dare to play such a trick upon him, and finds out the forgery. Did you ever see that man when he was really angry?"

"He is not pretty then," Rawlins said.

"Pretty! He is murder personified. Kindly try to imagine his feelings when he discovers he has been deceived. Mind you, this is only a theory of mine, but I feel certain that it will prove correct. Henson's last hope is snatched away from him. But he does not go straight to Van Sneck and accuse him of his duplicity. He knows that Van Sneck stole the ring for sheer love of the gem, and that he would not part with it. He assumes that the ring is in Van Sneck's possession. And when Van Sneck threatened to expose part of the business to Mr. Steel, Henson makes no attempt to soothe him. Why? Because he sees a cunning way of getting back the ring. He himself lures Van Sneck to Mr. Steel's house, and there he almost murders him for the sake of the ring. Of course, he meant to kill Van Sneck in such a way that the blame could not possibly fall upon him."

"Can you prove that he knew anything about it?"

"I can prove that he knew who Van Sneck was at the time when the hospital people were doing their best to identify the man. And I know how fearfully uneasy he was when he got to know that some of us were aware who Van Sneck was. It has been a pretty tangle for a long time, but the skein is all coming out smoothly at last. And if we could get the ring which Henson forced by violence from Van Sneck—"

"Excuse me. He did nothing of the kind."

Chris looked up eagerly.

"Oh" she cried, "have you more to tell me, then?"

"Nothing authentic," Rawlins said; "merely surmise. Van Sneck is going to recover. If he does it will be hard for Henson, who ought to get away with the plunder at once. Why doesn't he go and blackmail Lord Littimer and sell him the ring and clear out of the country? He doesn't do so because the ring is not in his possession."

"Then you imagine that Van Sneck—"

"Still has the ring probably in his possession at the present moment. If you only knew where Van Sneck happened to be."—

"I do know!" she exclaimed. "He is in the house where he was half-murdered. And Mr. Steel shall know all this before he sleeps to-night."

CHAPTER LI.

Heritage is Willing.

Bell's sanguine expectation that Van Sneck would be ready for an immediate operation was not quite correct. As the day wore on the man seemed more feverish and restless, which feverishness was followed by a certain want of strength. After due deliberation, Dr. Cross suggested that the operation should be postponed for a day or two.

"The man is in our hands," he said. "You have identified him, and you desire that he should remain here. It is pretty irregular, altogether, and I hope I shan't get into trouble over it. Still, in such capable hands as yours—"

Bell acknowledged the compliment with a smile.

"Between Heritage and myself," he said, "we shall pull him through, eh, Heritage?"

The other doctor nodded brightly. For some little time he had been directly under Bell's influence, and that had meant a marvellous change for the better. He had lost a deal of his hesitating manner, and was looking forward to the operation with the keenest interest.

"However, I will put you all right," Bell said. "I fancy the time has come when we can confide, to a certain extent in Marley. And if the police approve of Van Sneck being here, I don't see that you can say any more."

Cross was emphatically of the same opinion. Later on, in the course of a long interview with Marley, Bell and Steel opened the latter's eyes to a considerable extent.

"Well, I must congratulate you, sir," he said to Steel. "I'm bound to confess that things looked pretty black against you at one time. Indeed, I should have been fully justified in arresting you for the attempted murder of Van Sneck."

"But you never deemed me guilty, Marley?"

"No, I didn't," Marley said, thoughtfully. "I argued in your favor against my better judgment. I gather, even now, that there is a great deal for me to know."

"And which you are not going to learn," Bell said, drily. "When we have Van Sneck all right again, and ready to swear to the author of the mischief, you will have to be satisfied."

"That would satisfy me, sir. And I'm glad that your cigar-case mystery is settled. You'll let me know how the operation goes on?"

Steel promised to do so, and the two returned to Downend Terrace together. They found Heritage a little excited and disturbed.

"Do you know I have had a visitor?" he exclaimed.

Bell started slightly. He looked just a little anxious.

"I'm going to guess at once," he said. "Reginald Henson has been here."

"You are certainly a wonderful fellow," Heritage said, admiringly. "Nobody else could possibly have guessed that. He came to see me, of course."

"Of course," Bell said, drily. "Naturally, he would have no ulterior motive. Did he happen to know that we had a kind of patient under our roof?"

Heritage explained that Henson seemed to know something about it. Also, by singular coincidence, he had met Van Sneck abroad. He expressed a desire to see the patient, but Heritage's professional caution had got the better of his friendship for once. Henson had given way, finally, saying that he hoped to call again later in the day.

"It's a good thing you were firm," Bell said, grimly. "Otherwise there would have been no need for an operation on Van Sneck. My dear Heritage, it's quite time your eyes were opened to the true nature of your friend. Henson watched Steel and myself out of the house. He wanted to see Van Sneck; he has probably known from the first that the latter was here."

"Matter of philanthropy, perhaps," Heritage suggested.

"A matter of murder," Bell said, sternly. "My dear fellow, Van Sneck was nearly done to death in yonder conservatory, and his would-be assassin was Reginald Henson!"

"I was never more astounded in my life!" gasped Heritage. "I have always looked upon Henson as the soul of honor and integrity. And he has always been kind to me."

"For his own purposes, no doubt. You say that he found you a home after your misfortunes came upon you. He came to see you frequently. And yet he always harped upon that unhappy hallucination of yours. Why? Because you were the Carfax doctor for a time, and at any moment you might have given valuable information concerning the suicide of Claire Carfax. Tell Heritage the story of Prince Rupert's ring, Steel."

David proceeded to do so at some length. Heritage appeared to be deeply interested. And, gradually, many long-forgotten things came back to him.

"I recollect it all perfectly well," he said. "Miss Carfax and myself were friends. Like most people with badly-balanced intellects, she had her brilliant moments. Why, she showed me the ring with a great deal of pride, but she did not tell me its history. She was very strange in her manner that morning; indeed, I warned her father that she wanted to be most carefully looked after."

"Did she say how she got the ring?" Steel asked.

Heritage did not answer for a moment.

"Oh, yes," he said, presently. "She said it was a present from a good boy, and that Reginald Henson had given it to her in an envelope. I met Henson close by, but I didn't mention the ring."

"And there you have the whole thing in a nutshell!" Bell exclaimed. "Nothing of this came out at the inquest, because the ring story was hushed up, and Heritage was not called, because he had nothing to do with the suicide. But Henson probably saw poor Claire Carfax show you the ring, and got a bit frightened; and he kept an eye upon you afterwards. When you broke down he looked after you, and he took precious good care to keep your hallucination always before your eyes. Whenever he came to see you he always did that."

"You are quite right there," Heritage admitted. "He mentioned it this afternoon, when I said I was going to take part in the operation on Van Sneck. He asked me if I thought it wise to try my nerves so soon again with the electric light."

"And I hope you told him he was talking nonsense," Bell said, hastily. "There, let us change the subject. The mere mention of that man's name stifles me."

Morning brought a long letter from Chris Henson to David, giving him in detail the result of her recent interview with John Rawlins. There was a postscript to the letter, which David showed to Bell with a certain malicious glee.

"A nasty one for our friend enson," he said. "'What a sweet surprise it will be for that picturesque gentleman the next time he goes blackmailing to Longdean Grange.'"

Bell chuckled in his turn. The net was drawing close about Henson.

"How is Van Sneck to-day?" David asked.

"Much better," Bell replied. "I propose to operate to-night. I'm glad to hear that your mother is going to be away for a day or two longer."

Heritage appeared to be ready and eager for the work before him. A specially powerful electric light had been rigged up in connection with the study lamp, and an operating table improvised from the kitchen. More than once Bell looked eagerly at Heritage, but the latter stood the scrutiny bravely. Once the operation was successfully through, Heritage would never suffer from hallucinations again.

"I fancy everything is ready now," Bell said, at length. "After dinner to-night and this thing will be done. Then the story will be told—"

"Mr. Reginald Henson to see you, sir."

A servant looked in with this information and a card on a tray. There was a slight commotion outside, the vision of a partially-wrecked bicycle on the path and a dusty figure in the hall with his head in his hand.

"The gentleman has met with an accident, sir," the parlor maid said. Henson seemed to be knocked about a great deal. He was riding down the terrace, he said, when suddenly he ran over a dog, and—"

"What sort of a dog?" Bell snapped out. "What color and size?"

Henson was suddenly taken aback by the suddenness of the question. He gasped and stammered. He could not have told Bell more plainly that the "accident" was an artistic fake.

"You must stay here until you feel all right again," David suggested.

"Stay for the night," Bell growled, sotto voce. "Stay here till to-morrow morning and hear something from Van Sneck's lips that will finish his interesting career for some time. Medical treatment be hanged. A clothes brush and some soap and water are all the physic he requires."

Presently Henson professed himself to be better. His superficial injuries he bore with a manly fortitude quite worthy of his high reputation. He could afford to smile at them. But he feared that there was something internal of a sufficiently serious nature. Every time he moved he suffered exquisite agony. He smiled in a faint kind of way. Bell watched him as a cat watches a mouse, and he could read a deeper purpose behind that soft, caressing manner. What it was he did not know, but he meant to find out before the day was passed.

"Hadn't we better send him to the hospital?" David suggested.

"What for?" was Bell's brutal response. "There's nothing whatever the matter with the man."

"But he has every appearance of great pain."

"To you, perhaps, but not to me. The man is shamming. He has come here for some purpose, which will be pretty sure to transpire presently. The knave never dreams that we are watching him, and he hugs himself with the delusion that we take his story for gospel. Fancy a man in the state he pretends to be sending in his card to you! Let him stay where we can keep an eye on the chap. So long as he is under our observation he can't do any mischief outside."

There was wisdom in what Bell suggested, and David agreed. Despite his injuries, Henson made a fair tea, and his dinner, partaken of on the dining room sofa, was an excellent one.

"And now, do not let me detain you, as you have business," he smiled. "I shall be quite comfortable here if you place a glass of water by my side. The pain makes me thirsty. No, you need not have any further consideration for me."

"I fancy we can leave him now," Bell said, with deep sarcasm. "We need have no further anxiety. Perfect rest is all that he requires."

Henson nodded, in a sleepy fashion; his eyes were closed now until the others had left the room. Once he was alone, he was alert and vigorous again.

"Ten minutes," he muttered, "say, a quarter of an hour. A touch, a spot of water, and the thing is done. And I can never be found out."

(To be Continued.)

INTO HIS NEIGHBOR'S YARD.

Why Amos Bronson Alcott Had No Potato Bugs—Threw Them Over Fence.

The older inhabitants of Concord, Mass., are very fond of telling stories about the great men who have made their town famous, and its dreamy philosopher, Amos Bronson Alcott, is the hero of many of their reminiscences.

He always preached the doctrine of love to all creatures and was never known to harm any living thing; thus it was a great source of wonder to his neighbor that, while his potatoes were overrun with bugs, Alcott's were remarkably free.

One way the mystery was solved, for the philosopher was detected carefully removing the bugs from his plants and throwing them over the fence.—New York Times.

The Astute Salesman.

An astute salesman was enjoined by his employer to be strictly honest—but to sell goods.

Next day the salesman displayed some new fabrics, saying to the lady shoppers:

"Here is some calico that looks just like silk," but they turned up their noses scornfully.

The following day he said to the same shoppers:

"Here is some silk that is made to look like calico." And they bought every yard of it.

This shows us that we should use due judgment as to which end of a truth is first presented.—Judge.

Opium Among Thieves.

After a gun (crook) has grafted for some time his nervous system becomes affected and he needs a stimulant. Most of grow addicted either to opium, choloral, morphine or whiskey. Even at this early period I began to take a little opium, and when a grafter is doped he is very reckless. I will say one thing for opium, however. That drug never makes a man careless of his personal appearance. A grafter who drinks will go down and out as a bum, but an opium fiend never forgets to dress well.—Leslie's Monthly.

Counter Confidences.

"Liz," confided the girl at the ribbon counter, "you know I told you I got engaged to a German count at the summer hotel?"

"Yes."

"Well, he isn't a count at all. He's cashier in a dairy lunch room down street."

"Ain't that nice, though? You'll get to see him this winter again. I was lucky, too. The millionaire's son I fell in love with drives a delivery wagon for this store."—Judge.

WANTED TO GET EVEN.

Why Senator Allison "Had It In" for Senator Beveridge.

Senator Beveridge was a book agent during his college days and he never tires of telling how he made it possible for his parents to wear gold-rimmed spectacles and the younger children to go to school because of his success in forcing the people of Indiana to buy his books.

"It was a religious work," said the senator a few days ago to a number of his colleagues in a restaurant, "and it was called 'Error's Chain.' I believe its object was to show that all religions except the Christian religion have fallen when assaulted.

"I established headquarters in Des Moines and when school opened up that fall I do not believe there was a family in the entire state of Iowa that had not been given an opportunity to secure a copy of 'Error's Chain.'"

When Mr. Beveridge got thus far in his story Senator Allison interrupted him and in his fatherly way asked: "Beveridge, are you the person who is responsible for the circulation of 'Error's Chain' in Iowa?"

"I guess I will have to plead guilty," answered the Indiana man.

"Then just step out in the hall where we won't break any dishes. My wife has been holding up that book in my face for the last twenty years and I have always vowed I would get even with the man who sold it to her."

TIGER WAS IRISH HIMSELF.

Natives of the Emerald Isle Meet Under Strange Circumstances.

"No," said the lion tamer to Patsy Flannigan, "you can't have a job to look after the animals, but our pet lion died last week, and we've kept the skin, so I'll give you $15 a week to dress up as the lion."

"Fifteen dollars!" echoed Flannigan. "Good gracious, is there so much gold in the worrld? Right, sorr!"

So Patsy dressed himself in the lion's skin and lay down in the cage. The menagerie doors were opened and the performance commenced.

"Ladies and gentlemen," said the keeper, "to show the wonderful docility of these animals we will now place the lion in the cage with the tiger."

"Man, are ye mad?" said Patsy. "Think of me woife and children."

"Get in," replied the keeper, "or I'll run this pitchfork through you."

Patsy thought he might as well die one way as another, so he crawled into the tiger's cage, and when he saw the animal's big, ferocious eyes fixed on him he uttered a doleful wail and commenced praying in Irish. The tiger walked over to him.

"What's the matter wid ye?" said he; "shure, man, ye needn't be afraid—I'm Oirish meself."

Receipt for "X-Raise."

One of "Abe" Gruber's constituents who had been out of a position for some time came to him recently with the request for a loan of $10, says the New York Times.

"I have a job in sight," he said, "that I can land with the aid of a ten-dollar note."

He got the ten all right, and after thanking the lender for that and past favors, went out with a smile on his face.

But he came back very soon wearing a look of deep dejection and wanted another ten, saying:

"I was walking down the street with the ten in my mouth, where I had put it for safe keeping, and a-thinking of this job, when all of a sudden I swallowed it."

Mr. Gruber, reaching in his pocket, handed the man a quarter and said:

"Here, go down stairs, buy some ipecac, swallow it, and see if you can't make the X raise."

A Dramatic Situation.

An unfortunate mishap recently befell a theatrical company touring in Queensland.

They could only muster one frock coat, which had to be used by the doctor and the villain of the piece in turn.

One night the manager borrowed a pair of handcuffs from the local police station. At the right dramatic moment they were clicked on the villain's wrists amid loud applause.

Imagine the dismay when it was found that the key of the handcuffs had been forgotten, and the one and only frock coat was securely locked on the villain.

The doctor, who was in waiting in his shirt sleeves in the wings, had no alternative, but to go on as he was. He was equal to the situation, however, and at once explained that he had driven in his haste through pelting rain and left his frock coat outside to be dried.

Pilgrims.

Who bides beneath a roof to-day,
If he may set his foot abroad
Along the woodsy outland way,
Is little better than a clod!

There is no thing in all the land
That does not seem articulate;
The grasses smile, and understand
The vireo calling to his mate.

Tall pine-tops unto pine-tops breathe
In sighings murmurous as the sea;
And through the birchen copse beneath
There runs a fluting harmony.

In the half-dusks of tangled green
The pale wild-rose's center burns,
And in each hollow may be seen
The fragile laceries of the ferns.

White over all, for all to share,
Placid and pure and wide and high,
Mist-winnowed by the searching air,
Broods motherly God's open sky.

Then grip the oak-staff, ye who may
And set the pilgrim's foot abroad;
Who, willing, bides within to-day
Is little better than a clod!
—Clinton Scollard in Youth's Companion.

SHOWING THE WAY.

Most of our readers know all about the aches and pains of a bad back, very few people are free from sick kidneys, as the kidneys are the most over-worked organs of the body and "go wrong" at times no matter how well the general health may be. The trouble is so few understand the indications of kidney trouble. You are nervous, tired out and weary, have stitches, twinges and twitches of backache pains, but lay it to other causes; finally the annoyance and suffering attendant with urinary disorders, retention of the urine, too frequent urination makes you realize the seriousness of it. At any stage you should take a remedy that will not only relieve but cure you. Read the following and profit by the lesson it teaches:

C. J. McMurray, a resident of Freeport, Ill., address 47 Iroquois St., says: "I have greater faith in Doan's Kidney Pills to-day than I had in the fall of 1897, when I first took that remedy and it cured me of an acute pain across the back and imperfect action of the kidneys. Since I made a public statement of these facts and recommended Doan's Kidney Pills to my friends and acquaintances, thoroughly believing as I did both from observation and experience that they would do just as they were represented to do. I am still pleased to reindorse my statement given to the public shortly after I first began to use the remedy."

A FREE TRIAL of this great Kidney medicine, which cured Mr. McMurray, will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. For sale by all druggists, price 50 cents per box.

PRESIDENT HILL SPEAKS AT GRANT COUNTY FAIR

He Says That if a Man Does Wrong He Should Be Punished, but That if He Does Right He Should Be Protected.

Elbow Lake, Minn.—The chief attraction of the Grant county fair, held here recently, was the speech of Mr. J. J. Hill on the second day.

When Mr. Hill was introduced he was greeted with cheers, and frequently as he proceeded with his talk he was applauded or joined in with the audience in a laugh. He dwelt largely on the relations between the farmers and the railroads. He drew on his own personal experience for much of what he told his audience, but with terse and pertinent comment on present conditions. He gave President Roosevelt's cure for trusts a sly dig, and justified in an abstract way the formation of the Northern Securities company. Mr. Hill spoke as follows:

"Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen: I want to assure you this afternoon that is it a matter of unusual pleasure to meet you here. I am glad to see the farmers here with their wives. It is a privilege that I enjoy to meet the people who have come into this part of the country and made it what we see it to-day.

"It is a few months more than thirty years since I first passed through this part of the state. At that time the outpost was a little store on the hill by the old—what we may call the old—church at Evansville. After leaving Evansville we stopped all night at Mrs. Burne's, and the next night we stopped on the prairie all night and walked to keep warm. It was on the 10th of March, and I assure you it was very cold. Now, to me this is an unusual pleasure, and there is no place where I could meet with more pleasure than in your county. The change that has occurred is gratifying, and it must be gratifying to you in that you have been able

To Work the Change,

and it is always gratifying to me to know that I have been able in some way to aid in bringing about this change. The country looks beautiful to-day, and I see within and without the town not only the cause of the change, but the fruit of it as well. I see good stock. I see nice cattle, and just as good sheep as you will find in any part of the country. Years ago, back in 1883, we had a very dry season after the grain was planted. Until July 3 not a drop of rain fell in the northern part of the state, particularly in the Red river valley, but notwithstanding the long drouth, after the rain fell they got a three-quarter crop. I felt then that the farmers should not have all their eggs in one basket. I thought they should have a greater diversity of things on their farms. If a man lost his wheat crop and he had half a dozen good fat steers to sell he could get some money and bridge over for another year.

"I decided to raise cattle on my farm at Lake Minnetonka. I had to buy my experience. I bought some fancy cattle at very extravagant prices. My fences were let down. With a little reward to the men I could find the cattle. Sometimes they would come after I had rewarded them a few times and offer to tell me where the cattle were, and said they would find them for so much. I presume it was the ferocious stare of the bull that tore down the fences, but I made up my mind that I could not in my lifetime succeed as I wanted, and I sent men to the country and bought up a large number of bulls for three or four years, and to-day I saw as handsome cattle in your own county as a man would wish to see. It did me good as I saw before me proof that my endeavor—

Had Not Been in Vain.

Now, I can say to you that no one in the state or out of it has such a great interest in the people of the state and the people who are cultivating the land as myself. No man has a greater interest—put it all on selfish gain if you want to—in the welfare of the producers than I have, because if your labor is wasted what becomes of me? If you are poor, I am poor. I am glad to see the evidence of your prosperity, for we must share your prosperity with you. It can't be otherwise.

"All that we have been doing, all that I have tried to do in the way of building up the success of the country, is on the ground that the man who cultivates the soil must make the money before he can pay it, and in that we have the foundation of our own prosperity, and our company has been prosperous. All the transcontinental lines that have been built across the continent either in Canada or the United States have been subsidized, with the exception of our own. All of those of this country have failed from one to three times, except our own, and the only credit we can take to ourselves for being able to avoid these failures is that we have tried to bring the to apply to railroad enterprise—never to undertake to do more than we could afford to do and not to run ahead in a wild speculative career but going ahead cautiously; if the soil is good and the climate is good to be patient and encourage the people. When you have these ideas fixed in your mind you have the key that must solve the difficulty. We have now come to the point where our road has been extended to the Pacific ocean. We have there the largest forests of pine timber growing on this continent and the finest I have seen in the world. The lumber trees in Minnesota are practically all counted.

"A few years ago the country east of Detroit north of the Chesapeake and south of the Great Lakes drew its supply of lumber from Michigan and later from Wisconsin. During the earlier times in Michigan lumber was worth 50 to 60 cents a thousand, but to-day it is worth $12 a thousand in the tree. Fortunes were made in Wisconsin pine lands. The foundation for Cornell university was laid from an investment in Wisconsin timber lands. We have on the Pacific coast

Enormous Forests.

"You want them here. They want them as far south as Baltimore and as far east as Portland, Me. Now, bear this in mind: What helps you, what you need and what we need is the assistance of each other, and to help each other bear our burdens. The people who own and manufacture that lumber on the coast are seeking a market for it. These efforts affect you beyond the price of lumber; they affect you by contributing so many tons of freight to haul over our lines. We have gathered all these tons from the Pacific coast and from beyond the Pacific.

"There are four or five times as many trains on the line as there were years ago, but the capital of the road is practically the same. The increased earnings and the increased amount of business has placed us in position where we can reduce rates, but we have our dividend every year. We have got to a point where we can earn our dividends. That is all we can get. If we earned three dividends we would only divide one. We get 7 per cent on our stock and it is a safe investment. That is good enough and we ought to be satisfied. Some people try to persuade you than we want to eat you up; that we want your farms. Some think that I dine off the fresh roast shoulder of my neighbors every day, but I assure you that I don't. (Applause and laughter.) I don't want to. I don't eat any more than I ever did, I don't wear any more than I ever did and I am easily satisfied with both. (Laughter.) But if you will consider this on the lines I have stated you cannot this year declare or in all time separate the land from the railroad. A man might quarrel with the railroad company or become dissatisfied or for any other reason sell his land and move away, and I might sell out and some one else might come and run the railroad, but the railroad will be there and the land will be there and they will have the same contest and they will prosper together or be poor together now and forever to the end of time."

As to Trusts.

Mr. Hill then alluded to his recent visit to the coast and to his meeting there with the farmers of Washington and to the pleasant interview he had with them. He declared that he liked to meet farmers because they are nearest to the soil. He praised the law-abiding spirit which obtains among all agricultural communities and the patriotism which has at all times characterized the farmers of the country. Continuing he said:

"Your chairman said that there are a great many people apprehensive of the great industrial enterprises which are being carried on, and well they may be. There are so-called industrial enterprises whose only industry is in running printing presses to print shares of stock. I tell you, if there is no harm in an enterprise, if there are five or ten of them that are good there is no bad in them, and when you put them together there is no bad in the entire mass. But if the object is to get something for nothing, to get something that does not belong to them, to get money out of another man's pocket, the money he has worked for, and put it into their own—if that is the object it is all wrong; but some of these great enterprises are absolutely sound and right."

Opposes Congressional Control.

Mr. Hill referred to the steel works of Krupp and Carnegie as examples of enterprises which are right. The molding trust, the leather trust and the bicycle trust and others he referred to as among those which are not intended to be prosperous. Continuing, Mr. Hill said:

"Some people advocate, our president advocates, turning everything over to the congress. What sort of a congress would we have after awhile if all the business of the country were turned over to it? I think they would be doing business in the hall of congress, but the business they would do would not bring business to you that you want. I think I should hold every man responsible for himself and his own acts. If he does wrong, punish him; if he does right, protect him. When that is done those questions will take care of themselves. When I took the Great Northern railroad twenty-three years ago there were 380 miles of finished track and they were at work on 300 more. Now we have 6,000 miles. The road carried then 238,000 bushels of wheat, and no oats, no barley and no flax. This year it will carry of wheat, oats, barley and flax

A Hundred Million Bushels.

We pay taxes to the state on our earnings, amounting to 3 per cent of our gross earnings. The earnings from China, Washington, Idaho and all roads running through Minnesota contribute to the state treasury. I think that this year we will pay the state $450,000 or about one-sixth of all we get for hauling the grain crop of the state, and in hauling the grain crop we do not work for nothing—I mean it costs us something to haul it. Our business is made up of small things. I suppose you would call it a day's work to haul a ton of freight ten miles if the roads were heavy and get home at night with your team. A difference to us of a copper cent in hauling a ton ten miles means a difference of $3,000,000.

"Mr Hill then recited the improvements which have been made in the condition of the road, and the bearing these improvements have on rates. He showed that the interest of the railroad and the farmers is the same and that he as a railroad manager would not do anything that would be against the interests of the farmers. Mr. Hill supplemented the remarks of Prof. Shaw in advising the farmers to be better farmers and to produce more from less land. He thought that the diversity of crops and the raising of cattle would be better than to devote so much of the land to wheat. Coming back to the original matters, Mr. Hill continued.

"There is not one single dollar represented in the capital of the Great Northern road that has not behind it one hundred cents in honest money. I do not want my name connected with any enterprise that is trying to get something for nothing."

Got Even With Boat Combine.

Mr. Hill told how his efforts toward reducing rates on grain had been thwarted by the consolidation of the lake boats in making a corresponding raise.

"What did we do then?" said Mr. Hill. "We built six schooners to carry grain from Superior to Buffalo and the other boats have not declared a dividend since. We didn't want to go into the elevator business at Buffalo, but we had to in order to keep the other elevators from overcharging and working other extortions. As a result, the elevator charges of Buffalo is now ½ cent a bushel where it was 1¼ cents. I can't work always. In a few years I've got to go away. I can't take anything with me. It is better that all should work. Some don't, but Col. W. Watterson down in Louisville has told you what sort of people they are. Now, if anything comes up to bother you or if you have troubles let me know. I like to help you bear your burdens. I am glad to have been here and I thank you for your attention."

At the close of his address Mr. Hill held an informal reception at the door of the hall and shook hands with hundreds of the farmers and their wives. He chatted with them about stock and grain and on dozens of subjects which were of common interest. He cracked jokes with them and often broke into a hearty laugh at some remark made by a farmer whose hand he held. He held another small reception in the parlor of the hotel and then he and his party left for St. Paul.

FOSTERING EXPERT GUNNERY.

President Gives His Reasons for Doing So—He Says Gun-Pointers Have a Gift.

President Roosevelt, in commenting on the Mayflower prize contest, recently, said to the writer, speaking with great earnestness:

"I want to do everything I can for the enlisted man in the army or navy who rises above his fellows. The gun-pointer has got to be born with a natural capacity for that sort of thing. Training won't give him this gift, but if he has it and then has the training, he becomes a winner. It is so with the sportsman in the field. Even the fisherman has the special gift of knowing best how to get a good string. This gift the American people have in rare degree, in many respects, and I want to see it cultivated all the while."

It is in the same spirit and with a like end in view that the president has promised to do all in his power to make a success of the international Olympian games of 1904, to which he will send bodies of soldiers and sailors to take part in shooting contests, open to similar representatives of all other nations.—Leslie's Weekly

A LEARNED ENGLISH HORSE.

When His Master Fell Asleep He Went Up the Private Driveway—Saved Him From Prosecution.

It is a wise horse that knows his own Blackstone, and very thankful must the carman, charged recently with being drunk in charge of a horse and cart, have felt to his learned Rosinate for her keen legal acumen and decisive action. When this good steed felt her reins go slack, and heard, likely enough, the stertoreous breathing of her lord and master, she pulled herself together and thought out a plan for escaping the penalties that would befall them if they were found thus incapable on the public road. Taking the bit between her teeth and the matter into her own hands, she calmly walked up the private drive of a house in Green Lanes. In the garden she was found, with her master fast asleep, and in spite of her no doubt intelligent protests, was taken to the police station. In the morning the young carter was charged with the offense above mentioned; but it appeared, in the course of the case, that no one had seen him in charge on the public highway, and so the case fell through. Verily, a perfect treasure of an animal, who could so provide for her driver's safety; we hope the carter appreciated his steed's value.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A Supervisor's Story.

Lockport, N. Y., Oct. 6th.—Mr. George P. Penfold, supervisor for the First ward of the city of Lockport, has written the following letter for publication to the newspapers:

"It gives me great pleasure to recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills as a cure for Kidney Trouble.

"My kidneys troubled me more or less for years, and treatment by local physicians only gave me partial and temporary relief.

"An old friend, knowing my trouble, advised me to try Dodd's Kidney Pills, telling me at the same time how much they had helped him.

"I used, altogether, six boxes, and found a permanent cure.

"This was two years ago, and I have not since been troubled in any way with pains in the back, or any of the many other distressing difficulties arising from diseased kidneys."

LUXURY OF NEW YORK CLUBS.

Ease With Which Money Was Raised to Complete an Unfinished Ceiling.

That money is always at hand to contribute to the luxury of New York clubs is known, but the experience of one organization shows how much easier it is to raise large sums than one might suppose.

In one of the handsomest as well as newest of New York clubhouses the ceiling in one room had never been decorated. When the clubhouse was opened, two or three years ago, it was decided to allow the detail of the decorations to await the further consideration of the architects.

It was finally decided to copy for this room the ceiling of a famous apartment in Rome. It was estimated that the expense of the work would be about $25,000 as it would be necessary to send to Rome an artist who will do the work there.

The sum was large, in view of the great amount already spent to decorate the clubhouse. Before the call for subscriptions was made on the club at large, a few members were asked if they would not like to help the committee to make a good showing before the call was posted in the club. When the time came to call on the members at large only $5,000 more was needed. The few men who were first appealed to happened to be so prosperous that the expense of the new ceiling was almost met by their contributions alone.—New York Sun.

A GREAT SUFFERER FROM RHEUMATISM.

Cured by St. Jacobs Oil.

Mr. E. G. Moore, of 7, Phillips Street, Kingsland:

"I was a great sufferer from Rheumatism for many years, during which time I tried many remedies, from which I received but very little relief. Being advised to use St. Jacobs Oil, I did so, and am happy to say that after a few applications I felt great relief, and continuing its use I can now say I am perfectly well. St. Jacobs Oil is, in my opinion, a thing which should be in every household."

What a blessing, and what hours of suffering, pain and misery would have been saved had Mr. Moore adopted the wiser course and used St. Jacobs Oil at first, instead of wasting time and money on worthless embrocations and nostrums with which, unfortunately, the market is flooded. The public should not lose sight of the fact that St. Jacobs Oil has conquered pain for more than fifty years, and it isn't going to stop doing the same thing now or at any future time.—Fifty years' record of pain conquering is a record to inspire confidence.

Every man thinks he is more important than his neighbor.

PE-RU-NA NECESSARY TO THE HOME.

A Letter from Congressman White, of North Carolina.

PE-RU-NA IS A HOUSEHOLD SAFEGUARD.

No Family Should Be Without It.

PERUNA is a great family medicine. The women praise it as well as the men; it is just the thing for the many little catarrhal ailments of childhood.

The following testimonials from thankful men and women tell in direct, sincere language what their success has been in the use of Peruna in their families:

Louis J. Scherrinsky, 103 Locust street, Atlantic, Iowa, writes:

"I will tell you briefly what Peruna has done for me. I took a severe cold which gave me a hard cough. All doctors' medicines failed to cure it. I took one bottle of Peruna and was well.

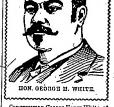
"Then my two children had bad coughs accompanied by gagging. My wife had stomach trouble for years. She took Peruna and now she is well.

"I cannot express my thanks in words, but I recommend your remedy at every opportunity, for I can conscientiously say that there is no medicine like Peruna. Nearly everyone in this town knew about the sickness of myself and family, and they have seen with astonishment what Peruna has done for us. Many followed our example, and the result was health. Thanking you heartily, I am."—L. J. Sherrinsky.

Mrs. Nannie Wallace, Tulare, Cal., President of the Western Baptist Missionary Society, writes:

"I consider Peruna an indispensable article in my medicine chest. It is twenty medicines in one, and has so far cured every sickness that has been in my home for five years. I consider it of special value to weakly women, as it builds up the general health, drives out disease and keeps you in the best of health."—Mrs. Nannie Wallace.

Peruna protects the family against coughs, colds, catarrh, bronchitis, catarrh of the stomach, liver and kidneys. It is just as sure to cure a case of catarrh of the bowels as it is a case of catarrh of the head.



HON. GEORGE H. WHITE.

Congressman George Henry White, of Tarboro, N. C., writes the following letter to Dr. Hartman in regard to the merits of the great catarrh cure, Peruna:

House of Representatives,
Washington, Feb. 4, 1899.

The Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, O.:

Gentlemen—"I am more than satisfied with Peruna, and find it to be an excellent remedy for the grip and catarrh. I have used it in my family and they all join me in recommending it as an excellent remedy."

Very respectfully,
George H. White.

Peruna is an internal, scientific, systemic remedy for catarrh. It is no palliative or temporary remedy; it is thorough in its work, and in cleansing the diseased mucous membranes cures the catarrh.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case, and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

THE NEWS,
By John W. Eastman.
PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

J. J. Weeks is meeting with considerable success in his candidacy for the election of clerk of court. Mr. Weeks has filled many positions of trust and honor in the past and is well qualified for the position.

Thomas Germo, the Republican candidate for county attorney, is generally picked as a winner. He has plenty of ability, and what is more is thoroughly honest. He will protect the rights of the public and the individual, and is a safe man for this important office.

If you had business to transact in the probate court would you not hire an attorney to look after it for you? When you vote for a man to fill this important office remember that James McIntyre is the one candidate well qualified to fill this position and that he can do the work properly.

The fusion forces have held the county offices in Red Lake county for the past six years. During that time the rate of taxation in Red Lake county has increased until today it is higher than in any other county in the state of Minnesota. There have been no permanent improvements made and very little money has been spent for roads and bridges. Do the voters wish to continue to keep these men in power or make a clean sweep and elect the Republican county ticket? It is about time for change.

Republican voters, if honest in their plea for clean administration in the county auditor's office, should not forget that a vote is a Peters is a vote for Zeh.--Red Lake Falls Courier.

If Mr. Peters received but two-thirds of the Republican vote in this county he would be elected, and there is no reason why any Republican should refuse to vote for him. He is honest, capable and would conduct the office in the interest of the tax payers. And it may also be mentioned that Mr. Peters will receive a great deal of support from the Populist farmers in the country around here, who know him, and are willing to trust the affairs of the auditor's office to his keeping.

HERE TODAY.

Senator Moses E. Clapp, of St. Paul.

Moses E. Clapp, junior United States senator of Minnesota, and the man who did so much for Thief River Falls in endeavoring to secure the opening of this portion of the Red Lake Indian reservation just east of this city, will arrive here today to attend the county fair and meet the voters of this section. Mr. Clapp will also address a meeting while here, and it may be stated that he is one of the best orators in the whole state of Minnesota.

OUR BID.

To President Roosevelt for a Moose Hunt.

Minneapolis Journal: President Roosevelt will hunt the big moose in the northern Minnesota woods next November, if Washington can spare him for ten days.

A moose hunt has been arranged in his honor by Frank H. Kratka, mayor of Thief River Falls and formal invitation was sent the president to-day. The program submitted brings the president to Chicago Nov. 10 and St. Paul that night by the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy in a private car. He is to leave St. Paul by the Great Northern Nov. 11 and Nov. 12 the party is to lease Thief River Falls overland for the Beltrami county woods. The hunt will break up "at the convenience of the president.

The presidents's invitation is done on birch bark, lettered and decorated by the burnt wood process. The necessary license for a non-resident hunter is sent with it, and is also on birch bark. The president will pay his $25 fee for it the same as any other nimrod.

The program gives the guests as follows: The president, Senator Knute Nelson, Senator Moses E. Clapp, Governor S. R. Van Sant, T. R. Palmer, Renville Chinook, S. F. Fullerton, Congressman Page Morris, Congressman Loren Fletcher, George B. Lyman, general passenger agent of the Burlington, and F. I. Whitner, general passenger agent of the Great Northern. The escorts will be C. L. Dobner and W. C. Smiley, and the guides, E. S. Wilcox and Fred Cook.

COUNTY FAIR

To Be Held Here Today and Tomorrow.

The first annual fair of the Red Lake County Agricultural society will be held in this city today and tomorrow, It is expected that there will be a large attendance although the fair this year, owing to the short time the association has had to make arrangements, will not be what the promoters expect to make it next year. The principal attraction this afternoon will be Senator Clapp.

W. C. SMILEY

Republican Candidate for County Surveyor.

William C. Smiley, Republican candidate for county surveyor, is without doubt the only man in the county who is thoroughly equipped to fill this important office. Mr. Smiley was born in Pennsylvania, and received a high school and academic education in that state. After leaving school he was employed in the office of the city engineer of Bradford, Pa., and left that office to accept a position under the U. S. surveyor general of Minnesota. Mr. Smiley was employed in this office for six years, and there became thoroughly familiar with the United States surveys of Minnesota, many of the original plats in the reservation portion of Red Lake county were drawn by him. Leaving this office in 1896 he was appointed a recorder of the U. S. engineer corps and for nearly two years was engaged as assistant in the work of measuring the flowage of various rivers in Minnesota. In the winter of '97 the appropriation for this work having been exhausted, he went out with the Great Northern railway engineers, who were constructing the branch line from Fosston to Duluth. Soon after the commencement of this work, Mr. Smiley was put in charge of the construction of pile bridges and put in six bridges on that line, one of them being the long bridge over the narrows at Cass Lake. At about this time the Spanish war broke out, and Smiley left the railroad to enlist as a private in company C of the 13th Minnesota. He had been a soldier of the state guard for a number of years while a resident of St. Paul, and in view of this experience he was offered a commission as lieutenant in the 14th Minn. This commission was accepted and he served with that regiment until the close of the war, being acting engineer officer of the regiment. After the war the U. S. engineer corps resumed the river measurement work in this state and Smiley was put in charge of the station at Thief River Falls, where he remained for two years. In 1901 he started the practice of general surveying in the city of Thief River Falls. He was appointed city engineer of that place which position he now holds with credit to himself and the city. Mr. Smiley is the only all 'round surveyor in the county, and has in his office every equipment necessary to the proper performance of the duties of county surveyor. Since leaving school, thirteen years ago, he has been continuously in the business of surveying with the exception of six months serving as a soldier and one year in which he acted as editor of the Thief River Falls Press. He is able and qualified and should be elected.

On Reading and Filing the Petition of J. P. Foote, Administrator of the Estate of Charlotte M. Stone, deceased, representing, among other things, that he has fully administered said Estate, and praying that a time and place be fixed for examining, settling and allowing the final account of his administration and for the assignment of the residue of said Estate to the parties entitled thereto by law.

It is Ordered, That said account be examined and petition heard by this Court on Monday, the 27th day of October, A. D. 1902, at one o'clock P. M., at office of the Judge of Probate in the Court House in the City of Red Lake Falls, in said County.

And it is Further Ordered, That notice thereof be given to all persons interested, by publishing a copy of this Order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Thief River Falls News a weekly newspaper printed and published at Thief River Falls, in said County.

Dated at Red Lake Falls, Minn., the 26th day of September, A. D. 1902.

By the Court:
(Probate Seal) J. T. KNIGHT,
Judge of Probate.

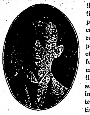
THE THIEF RIVER FALLS NEWS.

VOL. XIX. [redacted] THIEF RIVER FALLS, MINN., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1902. NUMBER 41



THOMAS GERMO, practicing attorney at Red Lake Falls, who is making such a vigorous campaign for the office of county attorney, was born of Norwegian parents on a farm in Medo, Blue Earth county, Minn., in 1870. His boyhood days were spent on the farm until 16 years of age, when he set out for himself. He was educated in the country schools, Rochester Business college, State Normal school, and at the University of Minnesota, graduating from the law department of the latter institution. Indomitable pluck and tenacity of purpose have marked every step of his career. School vacations were no time of rest or idleness for him. During these periods he employed himself with the task of earning and saving money in order to further prosecute his studies. Like so many young men who set out to make their own way through school, he took up such work as canvassing for books, working in the harvest fields in summer and teaching school. He was employed for a time as stenographer and bookkeeper in the Janesville bank, as court reprorter for the Third Judicial district, and at different times as reporter on newspapers. While at the University law school he took night lectures and during the day was employed about the city in different capacities, earning money to carry him through. Before entering the university he gained valuable practical experience by serving one year appreticeship in the law office of W. Logan Brackenridge and Rochester. He is a speaker of recognized force and ability, and is in great demand in political campaigns. Mr. Germo's life has been as an open book, with the pages well earmarked by successful strugles against difficulties that would have deterred many a less plucky young man. His carer in Red Lake County has been marked with that success, earnestness of purpose and unimpeachable integrity, which have won for him the esteem of our citizens and a constantly growing practice. Loyal to friends, a congenial companion, no man stands higher in the estimation of our citizens, a man who may be trusted, an able attorney, he comes well equipped in every way to discharge the duties of the office to which he aspires, that of County Attorney, to the satisfaction of all the citizens therein, and with credit to himself.

A SUCCESS.

The First Fair Ever Held in This County.

The first annual fair of the Red Lake County Agricultural Society held in Thief River Falls last Thursday and Friday was a success, and to their credit be it said, the ladies of Thief River Falls who took such an active part in the management are entitled to the lion's share of praise. The attendance both days was considerably larger than expected, there being nearly 2000 persons present during the two days. The exhibit of farm products was exceedingly fine, as was also the fancy work exhibited by the ladies. The racing was also enjoyed by a large number of people.

When everything is considered, the fair was a much greater success than the promoters had anticipated for the first year, and it is now proposed to have a large one next year.

There were a large number of out-of-town people present, especially candidates for local offices. Senator Clapp delivered an address to the people during the first day of the fair, and Alexander McKinnon, of Crookston, Democratic candidate for congressman, was here the second day of the fair.

In behalf of the Red Lake Agricultural Association we wish to extend thanks to the people of our County and city for the active interest they took in promoting our First Annual Fair. Especially do we desire to thank Mrs. C. E. Winslow, Mrs. W. A. Wright and Mrs. Daniel Shaw, whose hard work and untiring efforts made the Woman's department the greatest attraction of the occasion.

Executive Committee.

C. L. Dobner.

The state board of equalization made the following per cent increases in Red Lake county property at the following meeting: Horses, 20; cattle, 50; sheep, 50; hogs, 33; wagons, 25; sewing machines, 20; organs, 20; furniture, 33; tools and implements, 10; saloon furniture, 10; elevators, 20; dogs, 75; real estate, 5. There was also an increase of 20 per cent made in the stock of the First State Bank of this city.

GOING NORTH.

G. N. May Build North Next Spring.

Col. R. A. Wilkinson, right-of-way agent for the Great Northern and Senator Grindeland, of Warren, were in the city Monday and at once proceeded north. The object of their visit was to look over the land between here and Roseau with a view of selecting a route for the extention of the Great Northern from this place to Roseau. They will also go over the road from Roseau to Stephen, and the road may be built in from that point. The gentlemen went up on the west side of the Thief river, and stopped Monday night at Breese. It is quite certain that a road will be built inside of a year from now.

Showered With Rice.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Thompson, who were married last evening, left this morning for Thief River Falls, where they will visit the remainder of the week with Mr. Thompson's parents They were quietly sitting in the car congratulating themselves that they had escaped their friends, when a shower of rice fell about them that caused them to change their minds. They blame Ted Eiken and Will Shannon for it all, but there were others.—Crookston Journal, Oct. 14th.

To Whom It May Concern.

Read carefully the resolution regarding taxes for the construction of new sidewalks. All of these taxes draw interest at the rate of 6 per cent from the 1st day of August, 1902, until paid. Tax levy transmitted to county auditor in three annual levies with interest computed.

The green house in the red light district across the track was discovered on fire about 7 o'clock Sunday morning, and was burned to the ground. The house was not occupied at the time, and the origin of the fire is unkown. There was a small amount of insurance upon the building.

JAMES McINTYRE, Republican candidate for Judge of Probate, is practicing attorney of Thief River Falls, and a young man of ability and integrity. The office to which he aspires is a very important one, and Mr. McIntyre's friends feel confident that the voters of this county will elect him by a large majority, and thus place this office in competent hands, and when an estate is once probated it will be done right, and not cause unnecessary expenses and litigation to the people of the county. Mr. McIntyre was born on a farm in Minnesota, and is a graduate of the State University.

WILL USE TROOPS

ATTEMPT TO BREAK STRIKE UNDER PROTECTION OF MILITARY.

MINERS ASKED TO GO TO WORK

OPERATORS PROMISE PROTECTION FOR THOSE WHO RETURN TO WORK.

NO SETTLEMENT IS IN SIGHT

BOTH SIDES AS DETERMINED AS EVER TO FIGHT IT OUT.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Oct. 14.—The Erie company last night posted notices at its collieries at Pittston requesting all striking employes to return to work to-day.

The company assured all men who returned ample protection. This is believed to be the first move on the part of the coal companies to break the strike under the protection of troops. The strikers and citizens generally are not expecting anything to develop in the strike-affected territory but are eagerly following events in New York and Washington. There is a feeling, which is growing quite general, that some development in the direction of a settlement is near at hand. It looks as though there will be very little or no increase in the production of coal during the next week. The miners are as firm to-day in their declarations not to return to work until they get some concession as they have been heretofore.

Conference With Morgan.

New York, Oct. 14.—Developments in the coal strike situation were lacking here yesterday. J. P. Morgan spent the day on board his yacht, the Corsair, lying in North river, and the visit of two men during the afternoon gave rise to the report that another important conference was being held, but the identity of Mr. Morgan's visitors could not be learned and it could not be learned if their presence had any connection with the coal strike. It was reported that George F. Baer was one of the two men who left the yacht in a launch about 1 o'clock yesterday. This could not be verified, however. Mr. Morgan did not leave the yacht last night.

Other than an interview with John E. Markle nothing was given out, and Mr. Markle simply stated there was no settlement in sight and no settlement could be made except by the miners going to work independently. "The situation is unchanged," he said, "except that conditions are improving in the coal regions." Mr. Markle would not comment on the visit of Secretary Root Saturday or his own conference with Mr. Morgan.

Morgan Sends for Baer.

Reading, Pa., Oct. 14. — George F. Baer, president of the Reading company, left here late last night on a special train for New York. His sudden departure was occasioned by a telegram reported to have been sent him by J. P. Morgan. Mr. Baer declined to state the object of his trip. In answer to a question, he said:

"You know as much about it as I do."

Root Calls on Morgan.

New York, Oct. 14.—Elihu Root, secretary of war, came to this city Saturday morning and had a conference with J. P. Morgan on board the yacht Corsair, lying at anchor in North river, off West Thirty-fifth street. Mr. RoRot's departure from Washington was accompanied and preceded by reports that his trip to this city was concerned with the coal strike. When asked about his visit here Mr. Root shook his head and smiled, but made no answer. Mr. Morgan would not answer questions.

Refuses to Talk About It.

Washington, Oct. 14. — Secretary Root, who returned to Washington last night, refused to discuss his interview with J. P. Morgan Saturday, further than to say that he did not carry a message from the president to Mr. Morgan and did not telegraph the president from New York Saturday, as has been stated.

Secretary Root spent some time at the temporary White House last night in consultation with the president regarding the coal strike. Nothing could be ascertained as to what took place.

This Week Will Tell.

Scranton, Pa., Oct. 14.—This is the beginning of a week which is generally believed will put to a test the claim of the operators that they will be enabled to start up their collieries if given protection, and the counter claim of the United Mineworkers' organization as expressed in Wednesday's resolutions that the strikers will not return to work without concessions, even though the entire military force of the United States should be here to protect them.

With a determination to prove their claim the operators have for the past week been makinga superhuman effort to secure men. That they have succeeded to some extent is evidenced by announcements made with some positiveness that various collieries will resume operations in the course of a few days.

The United Mineworkers' leaders continue to assert that the military can do nothing toward inducing men to return to work, and that all the men who could be induced to go back to work without concessions are already back.

THIEVES SCOURGE PARIS.

Bicycle Dealers Now Advertising Unstolen Machines.

Paris, Oct. 14. — The Paris bicycle thief has become such a scourge that dealers feel it necessary to take cognizance of the matter in their advertisements. Not once, but several times lately, the following has appeared in the daily papers:—"Lady's bicycle for sale; has not been stolen."

PRINCE AT WHITE HOUSE.

Roosevelt Welcomes Son of the Ruler of Siam.

Washington, Oct. 14. — His royal highness, Chowfa Maha Vajiravudh, crown prince of Siam, accompanied by his suite, reached Washington, on a special train at 8 o'clock Saturday morning. During their stay here they will be the guests of the nation. After breakfast in their private apartments at the Arlington hotel the crown prince and his party donned their court dress and, escorted by a squadron of the Second United States cavalry, were driven to the temporary White House to pay their respects to president Roosevelt. The greetings between the president and the prince were cordial on both sides. There were no formal speeches. The prince expressed his admiration for the country, the little of it he had seen, and spoke of the impressive appearance of the American cavalry. President Roosevelt responded pleasantly. He asked the prince about his proposed itinerary and expressed the hope he would visit the military and naval academies and also spend some time examining the industries of which the country was so proud. The audience lasted not more than five minutes.

SULTAN IS DEFIANT.

Rejects the Friendly Overtures of Gen. Sumner.

Manila, Oct. 14.—The sultan of Bacolod, Mindanao, has rejected the friendly overtures of Gen. Sumner, commander of the American forces in Mindanao, in a defiant letter in which he invites war. The sultan says:

"The sultan of Bacolod desires war forthwith. He wishes to maintain the religion of Mohammed. Cease sending letters. What we want is war. We do not desire your friendship."

Friendly Moros report that the sultan of Bacolod is fortifying his strongholds. He is in possession of many rifles. It is expected that an American column will be sent from Camp Vicars to capture and reduce the Bacolod stronghold. It has not been decided when the move is to be made.

COUNTERFEIT MONEY IN MANILA

Bogus Dollars Made in China and Circulated in the Philippines.

Manila, Oct. 14.—Counterfeit American silver dollars are being made in China and circulated here extensively. The suspicion is held that some of this money was shipped from San Francisco. The dollars are of silver and of standard weight. They have been detected through the improper stamping of the word "Liberty" on the goddess. The low price of silver insured to the makers of this counterfeit money a profit of 100 per cent. American silver circulates as gold in the Philippines.

TO QUIT THE 'PINO KIDS.

Superintendent of Instruction Resigns at Manila.

Manila, Oct. 14. — Commissioner Bernard Moses, head of the department of public instruction for the Philippine islands, has written a letter to Gov. Taft resigning the commissionership in order that he may return to the University of California, where he occupies the chair of history and political economy.

DEATH ANGERS A MOB.

Girl Is Killed by Car and Police Rescue Employes.

Cleveland, Oct. 14. — Ida Fried, a four-year-old girl, was crushed to death by a street car on Orange street. The neighborhood is composed largely of Jewish residents. Two thousand people quickly assembled and made demonstrations against the conductor and motorman, who locked themselves in the car. Fifty policemen had difficulty in dispersing the crowd.

POISONED BY CAKES.

Mother Mistook Arsenic for Baking Powder.

Omaha, Oct. 14.—Arthur Moran and three children, aged 7, 9 and 11 years, were poisoned yesterday by eating cakes in which arsenic had been placed by the mother, who mistook it for baking powder. The two younger children are in a critical condition, and it is thought they will die. The oldest child and the father will probably recover.

Jewelry Worth $15,000 and $700 in Money Is Stolen.

Short Hills, N. J., Oct. 14.—Fifteen thousand dollars' worth of jewelry and $700 in money were stolen from the country residence of Arthur Coppell, a banker of New York. The thieves conducted their operations so quietly that none of the household was awakened.

THREE BOYS DROWNED.

Supposed to Have Met That Fate While Sailing.

Traverse City, Mich., Oct. 14—Three boys of well known families are supposed to have been drowned in Traverse bay. The boys went for a sail Saturday. They did not return and yesterday their boat was found on the shore about half a mile from the city.

MAY AND "PUT" MARRIED.

Civil Ceremony Is Performed at Buenos Ayres.

Buenos Ayres, Oct. 14.—It has been disclosed that a civil marriage ceremony between Putnam Bradlee Strong of New York and May Yohe was performed Oct. 3 by the registrar of the first section here.

Causes Heavy Damage.

Lafayette, Ind., Oct. 14.—A severe wind storm and a deluge of rain struck this city late last night. South of the city the damage is heavy, many barns and outbuilding being blown down and orchards ruined.

Hangs Himself in Church Belfry.

Washington, Oct. 14. — Edward T. Krantz, aged 65 years, was found dead last night in the belfry of the Trinity Methodist church. He was hanging by a rope and the coroner says it is a case of suicide.

ONE STRIKE ENDS

STREET CAR MEN AT NEW ORLEANS WILL RETURN TO WORK.

ACCEPT GOVERNOR'S ULTIMATUM

NO DISCRIMINATION TO BE MADE AGAINST MEN UNDER CHARGES.

MUCH REJOICING IN THE CITY

HAS LASTED TWO WEEKS — NOT A PASSENGER CARRIED IN THAT TIME.

New Orleans, Oct. 14.—The strike of the street railway company's employes which has effectually blocked traffic of all the city lines for two weeks, was settled last night by the men almost unanimously accepting the governor's ultimatum on a special ballot. Negotiations which begun Saturday night continued all yesterday morning, when the executive board finally decided to submit the matter to a general meeting of the union in the afternoon. The basis of settlement is that the men will go back to work to-day at 20 cents and ten hours, with a minimum of seven and one-half hours a day, nor is any discrimination to be made against any of the men under charges, and as many to be taken back as are needed for the operation of the company's lines. The hitch yesterday morning was on the taking back of the men under charges, but the company finally conceded this, consenting to allow the courts to decide this. A company of cavalry came down from Mansfield and was mustered into the state service yesterday afternoon soon after its arrival. There is much rejoicing in the city over the settlement of the strike. It began two weeks ago. Not a single passenger has been carried on the cars since it began and no passenger cars had moved more than five blocks from barns. Yesterday morning the people woke to find in different parts of the city stuffed figures hanging to telegraph poles with all sorts of inscriptions attached to them. Some represented the governor, some the mayor and many represented officials of the street railway company.

CRAZY WITH DRINK.

Man Kills an Aged Negress and Cuts Throat of Aged Colored Man.

Hopkinsville, Ky., Oct. 14. — Lloyd Nelson Young, a white planter, became crazed with drink near Pembroke Saturday night after being put off the train that he had flagged. He secured an axe and brained Rebecca Macet, an aged negress whom he met in the road. Leaving the axe with the body he sprang on Joseph Landy, colored, aged seventy, and cut his throat, fatally wounding him. After terrorizing the citizens for two hours he was overpowered by a posse and brought to jail here to escape a mob of several hundred negroes who had formed to lynch him.

OVERPOWER THE GUARD.

Three Men, One Held for Murder, Escape From County Jail.

Carbondale, Ill., Oct. 14. — Three persons, one of whom was held for murder, escaped from the Jackson county jail Saturday night. There were ten persons in the jail and when Deputy Sheriff Wright ordered them to their cells three entered one cell unnoticed by the officer. When he went into the corridor with their meals the men rushed to the door and overpowered the guard and hastily left the building. After a lively chase two of them were recaptured. The third is still at large.
